Sixty thousand women of New York City, members of eight community councils, have inaugurated a campaign for fair prices. They will inquire into the prices of the local stores, and if any of them are exceeding the fair price list, the avidence will be reported to the food administrator. They also plan to buy carefully, avoid hoarding, and will purchase the cheaper grades of food. When the food profiteers find arrayed against them increasing numbers of women in this campaign, they will have a chill like the bosses of Tammany Hall when the women investigated the removal of certain very able and fearless judges from the nomination list.

"CHARLIE" BERESFORD.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

The career of the late Lord Beresford was packed with adventure. His most renowned feat was performed at the bombardment of the Alexandrian forts; but that was only one among many other spectacular exploits to his credit. His attempt to relieve General Gordon, his rescue of Sir Charles Wilson's party in the river steamer Safieh, his thrice saving the lives of drowning seamen, are other conspicuous incidents which attest to his outstanding personal bravery His memory will be reverenced by the British nation, but, thank God, he has left many worthy successors to "carry on."

Best When Fully Ripe.

The exuberance of beauty in woman does not reach its climax before the age of 35 or 40. Helen, the great Greek beauty, was 45 years old when she came to Troy. Aspasia did not become the friend of Pericles before the age of 37, and long after that she was admired as the most beautiful woman of her time. Cleopatra was over 30 when Antonius fell in love with her, and Diana de Poitiers over 36 when she won the heart of Henry II.

"Home Districts" of Birds.

Suppose a bird spent the summer in a tree at the end of your garden, migrated in the autumn, and returned again next spring. Would you know him?

Probably not. But it is just possible that he might bear an identification mark in the form of a small ring round his leg. About ten years ago a scheme by which the migration of birds could be watched was launched, and now some ninety thousand birds have been ringed, each bearing its own special letters and number. Nearly three thousand of these have been identified again at a later period, either at some remore quarter to which they have emigrated or on their return to Britain.

One tiny wood-warbler, which was ringed when a fledgling, was discovered twelve months later nesting within two hundred yards of its old spot. It had probably travelled thousands of miles in the interval. Other ringed birds have been found at Cape Colony, Natal and the Transvaal, and in Scandinavia and Russia.

Birds nearly always have two "home districts," and are faithful in turn to each. Always.

CLEANLINESS IS HEALTH

By the use of Gillett's Lye, house cleaning is made a pleasure instead of a drudgery. It softens the water and cleans thoroughly whether the dirt is visible or invisible. Destroys all bacteria and infectious germs, removes obstructions from drain pipes, closets, sinks, etc. Refrigerators are made delightfully fresh and clean by using one teaspoonful of Gillett's Lye dissolved in two gallons of water.

CRIMINALS BLUNDER BADLY.

Some of Their Errors Have a Humorous Side.

That cheerful person, Lesine, is reported to have said that he would rather a score of innocent persons were killed than that one of the middle-class should escape, says Titbits.

His state of mind must resemble that of another Russian, the woman calling herself Mrs. Stafford, who shot M. Muller, the wealthy Parisian banker, in the Hotel Jungfrau, at Interlaken.

She fired at her victim as he was reading a newspaper over his luncheon, and killed him on the spot. Confronted with the body, she said she was sorry. She had made a mistake. She had taken him for M. Durovo, a Russian Minister, who was not too friendly towards anarchists. "But," she added, "in such times as the present one life more or less does not matter."

A similar case occurred more recently in New York. Mr. J. W. Burke, of the Iron Workers' Union, incurred the enmity of a certain political gang of the baser sort because he had accused them of "graft." The gang hired three criminals, known as "Big Shim," "The Dynamite Kid" and "Ernest the Crow," to murder him.

The three went to a saloon, saw there a man whom they evidently thought was Burke, and shot him. Burke was not in New York at all that evening, and the unfortunate victim was Mr. Thomas Conroy, of the Plumbers' Union.

One more victim of blunder on the part of a hired murderer was Mr. Abe, director of the political bureau of the Japanese Foreign Office, who was stabbed to death on a winter's night in 1913. His features closely resembled those of the famous Chinese reformer, Sun Yat Sen, and, as was afterwards discovered, his murderer mistook him for that person.

If murderers make mistakes, thieves do so much more frequently, and sometimes the results are distinctly humorous. A burglar broke into a house at Boston, taking no end of trouble to get in without making a sound. He reached the dining-room without disturbing anyone, collected all the silver, packed it carefully in a bag, and carried this out into the hall. A gleam from his electric torch fell suddenly on a tall figure standing opposite, and the thief, in sudden panic pulled out his revolver and blazed away.

Two athletic sons of the house came racing downstairs, to find that the burglar had emptied his pistol into a life-sized bronze figure which stood in the hall. The blunderer had five years in which to repent of his foolish mistake.

During the last couple of years tobacco has become so scarce and dear as to be well worth even a burglar's attention. But he must surely have been a new hand in the profession who broke into a Braintree tobacconist's and raided all he could carry from the front window.

He might have known that in these days the "show" consists entirely of dummy packages. When he discovered his mistake it was too late for repentance, so he dumped the whole lot in an alley, where it was found next morning.

Another disappointed criminal was the one who stole a case of shoes from a boot shop in Pittsburg, only to find, when he had conveyed them home, that they were all for the left foot. They were, in fact, a case of samples.

The way in which burglars overlook booty is very odd. It was in the Strand, at no great distance from the offices of a newspaper, that two men broke into another publishing office, and spent half the night cutting open a large safe in which was nothing but an empty cash box.

They were apparently too weary to start on a smaller safe in the same room, which held a quantity of money; but the oddest part of the whole business is that in a confectioner's shop below, through which they had gained entrance to the upstairs offices, was a safe of which they had taken no notice whatever.

Labor-Saving Devices.

Water is used to transport fine coal through pipes, and in Oregon a blast of air is used to load hay in freight cars. The hay is drawn up to a dock or float beside the car to be loaded, a crane then lifts the hay to this platform, and a blower, driven by a gasoline engine, hurls the hay forcibly into the car, packing it better than can be done with old-fashioned hand fork.

After-war conditions, and the telephone.' No. 2

Restoring Our Reserve Plant!

A telephone system to be normal and healthy must have a big percentage of its plant in reserve.

There must be spare positions on switchboards, spare cables in underground conduits, spare wires in underground and aerial cables, spare pins on cross-arms.

The plant in reserve must be ample, not only to meet ordinary growth, but to take care of unforeseen development such as the opening of a new car line, the cutting through of a new street, the location of a new industry in a given district.

During the war, through scarcity of material and skilled labor, our reserve plant was depleted as never before. Even necessary maintenance work had to be postponed.

Our problem now is, while keeping up with the demand for new telephones, moves, etc., to get our reserve plant back where it should be and to overtake vital maintenance and repairs so that service may be at the highest standard.

Installations from January 1st to June 30th were 36,716 instruments, with 20,341 take-outs, a net gain of more than double the same period last year.

The task of getting back to normal while growth is so rapid is a difficult one. Our chief concern is that subscribers should get the best possible service under all conditions and to this end we are doing our utmost.

WAR EXPENDITURE TOTAL $80,500,000

CURRENT REVENUE FON AUGUST INCREASED OVER $6,000,000.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 11.—Canadian war expenditure, exclusive of pensions, totals eighty and a half million already. For the months of August it was $14,087,000, or four and a half million less than August, last year. For five months since April 1, the capital expenditure on war totalled $121,487,139, almost double as compared with the same period last year. This amount naturally included Parliamentary accounts of long standing.

The correct revenue for August increased over six million dollars all of which increase, and more, being contributed by the income and business profits tax which with some small miscellaneous items, totalled last month $10300,000.

Paris, Sept. 11.—Despatches from Berlin today quoting the newspapers of that city indicate an expectation by the German Government of the early receipt of a new note from the allies concerning the modification of the German constitution. The German Cabine twill take the note under consideration as soon as it is received with a view, it is stated, to the eventuality of calling the National Assembly into session next week to revise the constitution according to the allied requirements.

Actual Experience Shows Value of Ontario Temperance Act

ONTARIO'S experience with prohibition under the Ontario Temperance Act since September 16, 1916, has been all the argument any fair-minded man or woman wants, to prove that the Act should neither be repealed nor weakened by Amendments.

Total Jail Commitments for crimes and offences of all kinds have decreased more than one-third since 1915.

Jail Commitments for drunkenness alone decreased from 6,235 in 1915, the year preceding the Act, to 2,595 in 1918. It is believed the present year will show an equal, if not greater ratio of reduction.

From Annual Reports of Inspector of Prisons 1915-1918, and Report of the Board of License Commissioners for Ontario for the Year 1918.

Best Record in 17 Years

JAIL Commitments for drunkenness decreased by 3,640 in 1918 compared to 1915. And yet, unlike former laws, this Act makes drunkenness in public places a "prima facie" offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, whether accompanied by "disorderliness" or not. And further the Ontario Temperance Act is more strictly enforced than was the Ontario License Act, and arrests for drunkenness are therefore proportionately greater in comparison.

The number of commitments for drunkenness in Ontario in 1918 was the lowest in seventeen years, although the population of the Province increased during the same period by nearly 550,000, or over 27 per cent.

Some jails, including those of Bracebridge, Cayuga, Napance and Orangeville—received no drunkards in 1918 at all. Others show well nigh unbelievable decreases since 1915, notably in the cities and larger towns.

Drunkenness has decreased under the Ontario Temperance Act to the point where a drunken man on the street has become a rare sight.

Crime in general has decreased as shown by record of jail commitments.

Do you want to see the taste for alcoholic beverages revived, and the population of Ontario's prisons, jails and lock-ups restored?

You are asked to vote on four questions. Two of these questions refer to beer of 2.51% alcohol by weight, equal to 5.46% proof spirit, more than double the strength at present permitted by the Ontario Temperance Act. Do not mistake the meaning of these questions. The beer of the ballot is intoxicating. If you are convinced that drunkenness is undesirable in this province mark X under the heading "No" after each question—"No" to the Repeal, "No" to each of the suggested Amendments.

"No!"—four times—"No!"

IT should be expressly noted that each and every one of the four questions on the ballot paper in this Referendum must be answered or your ballot is counted "spoiled." Be sure you mark your ballot with an X after each question, under the heading "No," or your vote will be lost to Temperance.

ROBERT FAIR & CO'S AUTUMN DISPLAY

CHOICE VARIETY OF LATEST FASHION FANCIES IN READY-TO-WEAR

The display of fall goods in the cloak department of Fair's store is well worth the inspection of the public. There is an unusual and varied stock from which to make a choice and those who visit this department are assured of courteous and intelligent attention.

Of the many different materials which go to make up the fall and winter coats, the new silver-toned velour seems to be the most in evidence. Another material which present a very beautiful appearance goes by the name of bolivia cloth.

The selection presents the very latest models, some with the fancy dolman sleeve effect and others plain. Some in the loose fitting flare style and others belted, and for the woman who is troubled with the question of furs, those models with the beautiful fur collars, which button snugly up around the neck, will easily solve the problem. Regarding the different shades, black is as popular as ever, but for those who find this just a little monotonous there is the deep brown which bids fair to be a much-worn shade this fall. Navy, grey, taupe, green and mixed tweed effects go to conclude a handsome display of garments in this line.

No woman's wardrobe would be complete without one of the new fall and winter suits, or which there is a handsome array. They are "nifty" and "chic," and "different," and all the other adjectives which an admiring woman would wish to label them. The collection consists of some very exclusive garments, among which is a grey cheviot in strictly tailored effect with pin tucks and rows of small buttons gathered in at the waist line with string belt. The lady who is on the look out for an exclusive style or something just a little different from the ordinary will be well catered to in a black botany serge, beautifully tailored with tucked panel back and button trimmed, close fitting neck and silk lined throughout. There is also a lovely navy serge in fancy pocket braid trimmed effect which would be deserving of a place in the most exclusive trosseau and next another a black and white tweed, for the young woman who is looking for stylish and serviceable suit for general wear, made in fancy norfolk effect and trimmed with rows of small buttons.

The coats are some what longer than those of last fall, and the skirts in most models are strictly tailored, while the materials consist of cheviots, Serges, fancy tweeds, garbardines and others.

This department offers for approval some excellent models in ladies' dresses in all the prevailing and up-to-the-minute styles. Navy serge made on semi-fitting lines, braid and button trimmed with string belt and white washable monk collar is a garment that will please the most particular shopper. Another very handsome navy serge is trimmed with military braid in lattice design on skirt with deep yoke belt and sand broadcloth vest latticed with braid.

HIGH EXPLOSIVES SEIZED AT DERRY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

HOW A YOUNG GIRL SUFFERED

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough for what it has done for my daughter. She was 15 years of age, very sickly and pale and she had to stay home from school most of the time. She suffered agonies from backache and dizziness and was without appetite. For three months she was under the doctor's care and got no better, always complaining about her back and side aching so I didn't know what to do. I read in the papers about your wonderful medicine so I made up my mind to try it. She has taken five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and doesn't complain any more with her back and side aching. She has gained in weight and feels much better. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all mothers and daughters."—Mrs. M. FINORE, 516 Marcy Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

INDUCTION AT OMEMEE

Rev. Scott Assumes Charge of Presbyterian Church.

The induction of the Rev. Mr. Scott, took place in the Presbyterian Church on Friday evening before a very large congregation of Omemee and Mount Pleasant people. Rev. Mr. Gardiner of Cold Springs preached the sermon, Rev. Mr. Rollins, of Petersboro, addressed the newly inducted minister, Rev. Dr. Lee of Millbrook, also addressed the congregation.

After the ceremony all adjourned to the basement where a social evening was spent there by enabling the new minister to become acquainted with his people.

The local clergy, Rev. Mr. Stillman of the Methodist church and the Rev. Mr. James of the English church as well as Rev. Mr. Clark of Mount Pleasant, welcomed the new pastor to Omemee. Messrs Isaiah Fair, F. G. Sandy and H. Lamb, spoke briefly in tones of hearty welcome to the Rev. Mr. Scott.

FIRE BROKE OUT IN OLD CHURCH

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Sept. 12.—While a hearse bearing the body of Horace Traubel, the poet and biographer, who died recently at Ben Echo, Ont., was drawn up in front of Old Church of the Messiah yesterday, fire broke out in the organ loft and the church was totally destroyed.

LIMA MOB BURNS PAPER OFFICES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Sept. 12.—Officers of the Lapreusa and Elcomercick, newspapers of Lima, Peru, were attacked by a mob yesterday and partly burned, according to today's advices to the Peru-Vian Embassy. The home of Miro Quesad, proprietor of the Elcomercick, was totally destroyed by fire.

Protest Meeting.

Disorder followed a mass meeting of protest against the conspirators, who had plotted to attack President Leguia, after the Government had ordered the imprisonment of several of the conspirators.

CITY COUNCIL IS

South Central Building.

Replying to a question as to what the Board's intentions were for the old South Central building, Mr. Patterson stated it was their intention to send the commercial classes of the Collegiate Institute, which are now overcrowded, down there, and of fitting the remainder up as a technical school until Peterborough felt itself in a proper position to build one in keeping with the size of the city. He stated that every district was well supplied with schools except the south, the workingman's district, and eh considered they were as much entitled to proper school accommodation as anyone else. The Board requested the Council to take immediate action as it was their desire to start operations this Fall and supply work. This was especially necessary as a law was coming before the Government making education compulsory up to the age of 18, and it would probably be necessary to rent buildings to supply those between the ages of 14 and 18 who are now working with accommodation for part-time education. This should be provided as much as possible.

The resolution moved by Ald. Turner and seconded by Ald. Taylor that the city solicitor be requested to draw up a bylaw for the issuing of 10 year debentures at 5½% interest for the purpose of erecting a new public school house carried without opposition.

DAYLIGHT TIME ENDS SEPT. 21ST

At the suggestion of the Mayor and with the support of all members present, the following resolution, moved by Ald. Taylor and seconded by Ald. Turner, passed the Committee of the Whole Council last night: That the Mayor issue an order for the return of this city to standard time at midnight of Sunday, Sept. 21.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a glass of Salts if your Back Hurts or Bladder Troubles you

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well known authority. Meat forms a uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become over-worked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the urine, so it no longer causes irritation thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Epworth League Notes.

The Senior Epworth League of the Millbrook Methodist Church held its reopening social evening on Monday evening, last. Genuine pleasure in meeting again after two months vacation, was felt by all present

Mrs. Nichols, our league delegate, gave a very interesting account of her week at the Bay of Quinte Summer School and Miss Barham told the thrilling story of Mr. David Byrnes' life history, from a poor, red headed laddie, carried to the Methodist Sunday school picnic by the late Mr. Joseph Stevens, through years of struggle and obscurity, to his present position of a millionaire manufacturer, starting from a job of sixty dollars a year, to his present enormous business.

Mr. White's description of his motor trip to Toronto, Hamilton, etc., and Miss Elson also showed pictures of places visited, her trip to the Thousand Islands and Point Ann.

A program of music, song and light refreshments added much to the enjoyment of all present. Four new members were received.

Next Monday evening, the topic will be "The Sunday School and Evangelist Agency." Mr. Bruce Dawson is responsible for the program. Service at 7.30 o'clock. Everybody welcome.

Ministerial Association.

The Millbrook and Cavan Ministerial Association held a meeting on Monday, September 8, 1919. The members prsent were Dr. Lee Capt. Spencer, Canon Allen, S. T. Tucker Mr. Westmacott W. Clarke Mr. Weir G. J. Craw and Mr. James. A very interesting and profitable meeting was held.

THREE FAMOUS RUSSIANS

Of one Mind on one question

An announcement in the daily press of the marriage of one of the world-famous Chertiavsky brothers to a young lady of British Columbia brings to memory the visit of these talented Russian musicians to Canada a few years ago. Whenever they appeared, east or west, a great reception was accorded them—Mischel with his 'cello, Leo with his violin, and Jan the pianist.

They proved themselves a remarkable trio.

At all their recitals they used a

Heintzman & Co. ART PIANO

which, by the way, they insist on using, whether in Canada, or Australia or South Africa.

Mischel has said of this piano: "The rich quality of the tone made the rendering of my 'cello numbers a pleasure such as I have never derived from the accompaniment of any other piano."

Leo: "The pure and even quality of the tone materially assisted to the success of my violin numbers. It surpasses any piano I have ever used."

Jan: "I attribute a great deal of my success to the facility with which the emotions are expressed by the perfect response and brilliant tone of your piano."

MY SOLDIER GIRL HERE TOMORROW

DANCING IS A REVELATION, AND THE MUSIC A PERFECT DREAM

It will be good news to local theatregoers to learn that manager Dahn has booked for Saturday matinee and evening, the musical comedy success "My Soldier Girl." This popular musical play has a score or more popular melodies of which the title song "My Soldier Girl" is the favorite, and is whistled or hummed as the audience make their exit. Song hits are not the only features in this big musical play, the costumes are a fashion show in themselves, so cleverly are they designed and the color schemes so perfectly blended. Again the stage settings are wonderful in their dazzling splendor and the details as carried out during the lawn fete at Colonel Stone's home, Miami, Fla., and again in the Follies production during the last act, only goes to prove that money has been spent freely to make this show genuine. The clever cast and bewitching chorus force a laugh or a song encore every minute. The dancing is a revelation to the theatregoer and too much praise cannot be accorded this brilliant musical show which will be produced in this city in all its merry-making.

Tuneful and Sparkling.

If a score or more tunful melodies will help to "put over" a show then the musical play, "My Soldier Girl," should live right up to this promise, for it consists of twenty or more tuneful numbers that are all fast becoming popular. The title song, "My Soldier Girl," may be favored somewhat in one city while in another city the duet, "Just For You" takes the lead and keep it throughout the entire engagement. Besides the popular melodies, the gorgeous costumes, the groupings of the pretty girls in the stage pictures, and the remarkable stage settings will prove to the theatregoer that that "My Soldier Girl" is different. Chas. George, who wrote the score, has literally surpassed himself in providing the tuneful melodies. The management has secured a remarkable cast and a chorus of wonderfully clever girls for this new musical play.

Charles Ray has long ago proved that he is alone in his particular field of screen portraiture. As the young farmer's boy with literary aspirations in the present picture, showing at the Allen Theatre today and tomorrow, he is not only highly amusing, but gives a performance that ranks with the best offerings of stage or screen in any period.

Toby Watkins is a young farmer whose tendency to write poems rouses the ire of his narrow-minded uncle, the result being that he quits the farm and accepts a position as subscription solicitor on the Sawbert Weekly Clarion. He meets and loves Jean Morris, daughter of the mayor of Sawbert and she returns his love. Kendall Reeves, a crook known to the police as Harry Morgan, comes to Sawbert to work a fake string beans cannery scheme, and Foley, at the request of Zachary Bartrum, editor of the Clarion, attends a mass meeting in opposition to the project. When

Foley sees Jean Morris in the audience his courage deserts him and he flees ignominiously from the hall. He overhears Reeves talking to a former pal, who is now employed on the Clarion, and the man's criminal character is revealed. Reeves learns that exposure is inevitable and he seeks to force Mayor Morris to pay him five thousand dollars for a majority interest in the fake cannery, and then decamp. Foley goes to the Morris home and finds Jean struggling with Reeves. He rescues her and after a desperate battle, masters the crook. Bartrum and Morris who long have been enemies, are reconciled and through them the love affairs of Foley and Jean reaches a happy denouement.

The work of Mr. Ray in each scene is highly effective and convincing. Jane Novak as his leading woman is delightful and ingenuous. The other characters are well played by John P. Lockney, Donald McDonald, Al. Filson, Otto Hoffman and others.

The production, directed by Victor Schertzinger, is excellent with the small town types admirably represented. It is a clean, wholesome and inspiring little story, and deserves the highest commendation. It's humorous character makes it particularly acceptable at this time while there is enough solid if, homely human quality about it to make it agreeable to any audience. Julian Josephson wrote the story and the picture was beautifully photographed by Chester Lyons.

What some men don't know they are always talking about.

STRONG DRURY LANE MELODRAMA COMING

"SPORTING LIFE" AT THE ALLEN THEATRE MONDAY. THRILLING OFFERING.

One of the strongest photoplays seen in this city in years is "Sporting Life," the first independant offering of Maurice Tourneur, the famous film director, which will be shown at the Allen Theatre for two days only on Monday and Tuesday.

It is a splendid picturization of a famous Drury Lane melodrama and there is not a dull moment throughout the action. The story is heart appealing and the players are of the best.

NORMA TALMADGE ADDED FEATURE

POPULAR MOVIE STAR AT GRAND MON. TUES. AND WEDNESDAY.

"The Probation Wife," Norma Talmadge's latest Select Picture, in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck, will be seen at the Grand Theatre for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. It is the story of an inmate of a questionable cafe, who later reforms through the love and trust of a good man.

Josephine, or Jo as she was called was one of the most important attractions of the Domino Cafe. Harrison Wade, a wealthy New Yorker, sees her and gives her money to escape. She is discovered, and before she gets another chance to escape the place is raided. Jo and the other cabaret girls are sentenced to three years in the reformatory.

After having made her escape, Jo Jo manages to escape. She purchases a fashionable outfit with the money she has concealed. During her confinement in the reformatory, Jo had made the best of her spare time by reading and studying, so that she is able to converse in a manner in keeping with her modish appearance.

After having made her escape, Jo decides that the only way to advance and get the things in life that are worth while is through some man—the only way she had ever been taught. So she boards a train for New York, ever on the alert for the helpful man. She discovers him in the next comparment. He proves to be no other than Harrison Wade, the man who had tried to help her to escape. She crudely and bluntly makes a proposition to him to trade herself for clothes and whatever else he may be willing to give.

Wade believes there is some good in the girl and marries her, much to her surprise. Jo calls herself Wade's probation wife. They live very happily until Jo meets Huntley McMerton, a prominent and wealthy New Yorker. They become very friendly. Wade thinks they are in love with each other, and prepares to bring divorce proceedings when he finds his wife's actions follow and happiness is in store in the arms of McMerton. Explanation follows.

PITIFUL END TO CAREER.

Sir Luke White Spending Last Days In Workhouse.

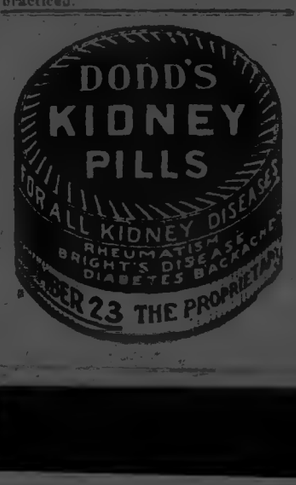
From a position of affluence, popularity and public service which won him a seat in Parliament and a knighthood, Sir Luke White is ending his days as the inmate of a workhouse infirmary in Driffield, England. Clever enough to rise from poverty to a noted career, injudicious investments brought him low, and at the height of his political power he was forced to confess himself bankrupt. He carried down with him numerous trusting constituents, and his liabilities of $135,000 included $95,000 in loans from poor people who had confided their all to him. The shame of having thus wrecked the savings of those who believed in him completely unnerved him. Now he is dependent on public charity, his spirit utterly crushed, and he is one of the most pitiful figures in the north of England.

Born in Deighton, near York, in 1845, he was an office boy at fifteen for a solicitor, who paid him about 90c a week. After eight years in that service, of course with increasing income, he became managing clerk for another solicitor in Driffield. In another six years he was admitted to the bar as solicitor, and in the same year he succeeded to the practice of his employer, who had died.

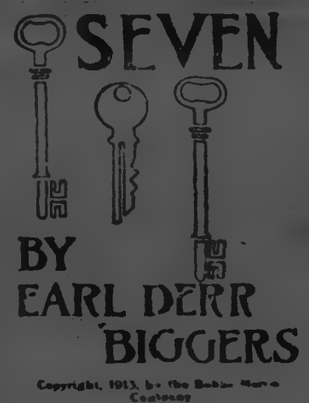
He speedily became known as a local preacher and speaker for a large district, and he was highly popular and successful. For years he was chairman of the Local Board, and then of the urban District Council. Then he went to the East Riding County Council. In 1896 he was appointed one of the coroners for East Riding. He acted as election agent for Sir Angus Holden, Liberal member of Parliament for the Buckrose division, and when Sir Angus died in 1900 White was chosen as his successor. In 1908 he was knighted.

He continued to divide his time between his attendance at Westminster and his business in Yorkshire, but as he gave more time to his Parliamentary duties than to his private affairs, his practice suffered. The war brought out the fact that he was in financial distress, and last fall he resigned his seat and filed a petition in bankruptcy. It appeared in the bankruptcy proceedings that some of his poor constituents had confided their money to him to put into war loans.

Friends provided for him for a while in a sanitarium near Scarborough. When that fund was exhausted he was removed to the workhouse infirmary, which almost adjoins the court in which he formerly practiced.



SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE



BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"Romance?" he retorted. "Well, I ain't much on the talk out of books. But here's what I see when you say that word to me. It's the night before election, and I'm standing in the front window of the little room on Main street where the boys can always find me. Down the street I hear the quick and rumble of hands, and pretty soon I see the yellow flicker of torches, like the flicker of that candle, and the bobbing of banners. And then the boys march by—all the boys. Pat Doherty and Bob Larsen and Matt Sanders—all the boys! And when they get to my window they wave their hats and cheer. Just a fat old man in that window, but they'll go to the pavement with any guy that knocks him. They are loyal. They are for me. And so they march by, cheering and singing all the boys—just for me to see and hear. Well, that that's romance to me."

"Power," translated Mr. Magee.

"Yes, sir!" cried the mayor. "I know I've got them. All the reformers in the world can't spoil my thrill then. They're mine. I guess old Napoleon knew that thrill. I guess he was the greatest romancer the world ever knew. When he marched over the mountains with his starving bunch and looked back and saw them in rags and suffering—for him—well, I reckon old Nap was as close to romance then as any man ever gets."

"I wonder," answered Mr. Magee. It came to him suddenly that in each person's definition of this intangible thing might lie exposed something of both character and calling. At the far end of the table Mrs. Norton's lined, tired face met his gaze. To her he put his question.

"Well," she answered, and her voice seemed softer than its wont, "I ain't thought much of that word for a good many years now. But when I do—say, I seem to see myself sitting on our porch back home thirty years ago. I've got on a simple little muslin dress, and I'm slender as Elsie Janis, and the color in my cheeks is—well, it's the sort that Norton likes. And my hair—but I'm thinking of him, of Norton. He's told me he wants to make me happy for life, and I've almost decided I'll let him try. I see him coming up our front walk, coming to call on me. Have I mentioned I've got a figure, a real sweet figure? That's about what romance means to me."

"Youth, dear?" asks Miss Norton gently.

"That's it, dearie," answered the older woman dreamily. "Youth."

For a time those about the table sat in silence, picturing, no doubt, the slender figure on the steps of that porch long ago. Not without a humorous sort of pity did they glance occasionally toward the woman whom Norton had begged to make happy. The professor of comparative literature was the first to break the silence.

"The dictionary," he remarked academically, "would define romance as a species of fictitious writing originally composed in the romance dialects and afterward in prose. But the dictionary is passable—it has no soul. Shall I tell you what romance means to me? I will. I see a man toiling in a dim laboratory, where there are strange fires and strange odors. Night and day he experiments, the love of his kind in his eyes, a desire to help in his heart. And then—the golden moment—the great moment in that quiet dreary cell—the moment of the discovery. A serum, a formula—what not. He gives it to the world and a few of the sick are well again and a few of the sorrowful are glad. To me romance means neither youth nor power to me. It means—service."

He bent his dim old eyes on his food, and Mr. Magee gazed at him with a new wonder. Odd sentiments these from an old man who robbed fireplaces, held up hermits and engaged in midnight conferences by the answer door. More than ever Magee was baffled, enthralled, amused. Now Mr. Mary leered about the table and contributed his unsavory bit.

"Funny, ain't it," he remarked, "the different things the same word means to a bunch of folks. Say romance to me and I don't see no dim laboratory. I don't see nothing dim. I see the brightest lights in the world and the best food and somebody, maybe, dancing the latest freak dance in between the tables. And an orchestra playing in the distance classy dance—(a taxi clicking at the door. And me sending word to the chauffeur: 'Let her click till the milk carts rumble. I can pay.' Say, that sure is romance to me."

"Mr. Hayden," remarked Magee, "are we to hear from you?"

Hayden hesitated and looked for a moment into the black eyes of Myra Thornhill.

"My idea has often been contradicted," he said, keeping his gaze on the girl; "it may be again. But to me the greatest romance in the world is the romance of money making—dollar piling on dollar in the vaults of the man who started with a shoestring and hope and nerve. I see him fighting for the first thousand—and then I see pile growing, slowly at first—faster—faster—faster—until a motor-car brings him to his office, and me—speak my name with awe in the streets."

"Money," commented Miss Thornhill contemptuously. "What an idea of romance for a man!"

"I did not expect," replied Hayden, "that my definition would pass unchallenged. My past experiences"—he looked meaningly at the girl—"had led me to be prepared for that. But it is my definition—I spoke the truth. You must give me credit for that."

"I ain't one to blame you," sneered Cargan, "for wanting it noticed when you do sidestep a tie. Yes, I certainly"—

"See here, Cargan," blazed Hayden.

"Yes, you did speak the truth," put in Miss Thornhill hastily. "You mentioned one word in your definition. It was a desecration to drag it in—hope. For me romance means only—hope. And I'm afraid there are a pitiful number in the world to whom it means the same."

"We ain't heard from the young woman who started all this fuss over a little wood," Mr. Cargan reminded them.

"That's—hi, dearie," said Mrs Norton, "you are—contribute."

"Yes," echoed the girl with the locks crisped like golden vine. "I will, but it's hard—one's ideas change so rapidly. A moment ago if you had said romance to me I might have babbled of shady corners, of whisperings on the stair, of walks down the mountain in the moonlight or even on the hotel balcony." She smiled gayly at Magee. "Perhaps tomorrow, too, the word might mean such rapturous things to me. But tonight—life is too real and earnest tonight. Services Professor Bolton was right: service is often romance. It may mean the discovery of a serum. It may mean so cruel a thing as the blighting of another's life to romance." She gazed steadily at the stolid Cargan. "It may mean putting an end forever to those picturesque parades past the window of the little room on Main street the room where the boys can always find the mayor of Keuton."

Still she gazed steadily into Cargan's eyes. And with an amused smile the mayor gazed back.

"You wouldn't be so cruel as that," he assured her easily, "a nice attractive girl like you."

The dinner was at an end. Without a word the shy little professor rose from the table and hurried up the stairs. Mr. Magee's head him disappear and resolved to be quick on his heels. But first he paused to give his own version of the words under discussion.

"Strange," he remarked, "that none of you gets the picture like Romance to me. I see it set in Baldpate inn. A man alone in the mountains, alone with his thoughts, no force the melodrama of life, to get away from the swift action of the world—no time. He is alone for very good hour. Then a telephone bell rings and a youth rises out of the dim to prate of a lost Arabella and fabulous history. A shot rings out as the memorial window with shots, and enters a professor of comparative literature, with a perforation to his shoulder. A professional burglar tries to teach the amateur the fine points of the game. A clairvoyant could come in too late for breakfast but in plenty of time for walks on the balcony in the moonlight. The mayor of a municipality condescends to stay for dinner. A battle in the snow ensues. There is a veiled talk of a sum of money. More guests arrive. Dark hints of a seventh key. Why, bless you, you needn't stir from Baldpate inn in search of your romance."

He crossed the floor hastily and put one foot on the lower step of Baldpates grand stairway. He kept it there. For from the shadows of the landing Professor Bolton emerged, his blasted derby once more on his head, his overcoat buttoned taut, his earmuffs in place, his traveling bag and green umbrella in tow.

"What, professor?" cried Magee, "you're leaving?"

Now, truly, the end of the drama had come. Mr. Magee felt his heart beat wildly.

"Yes," the old man was saying slowly, "I am about to leave. The decision came suddenly. I am sorry to go. Certainly I have enjoyed these chance meetings."

"See here, Doc," said Mr. Bland, uneasily feeling of his purple tie, "you're not going back and let them reporters have another flivver at you."

OLD "BLUE LAW" HAS STUCK

All Efforts to Amend Famous Statute of Pennsylvania Have Thus Far Been Unavailing.

Once more an effort is to be made to amend the most famous of all laws on the statute books of Pennsylvania—the venerable blue law, enacted April 22, 1794.

It is said that at every regular session of the legislature during the 125 years since that awful crimp was put in Sunday conviviality, an attempt has been made to repeal it entirely or to amend it, Girard writes in the Philadelphia Press.

But that old law entitled "An act for the prevention of vice and immorality and for other purposes," has survived all the assaults of those who would destroy it.

A century and a quarter of world revolution, of tumbling thrones, of dazzling inventions and economic and social changes finds that statute of 1794 as unbreakable and rigid as the eternal laws of the Medes and Persians.

Those old legislation bricks of 1794 regarded it as being vastly more wicked to shoot a rabbit on Sunday than to drink a hot toddy.

One offender was tagged with a fine of $25, the other a shilling and a half.

It was impossible under a strict enforcement of that law to operate a canal boat, a railroad train, a street railway car, a cab or sell any commodity from a loaf of bread to a package of chewing gum.

Every seventh day the state of Pennsylvania was expected to freeze up completely like a good bird dog when he sees a quail.

WORLD MUST HAVE NITROGEN

Men of Science Preparing for the Time When the Chilean Nitrate Fields Are Exhausted.

Farmers of Europe and America have been almost entirely dependent for nearly a century upon the Chilean nitrate fields, which have stood literally between the world and starvation. Behind a plateau 3,000 feet above the sea level and 20 miles from the Pacific coast, is a dreary, parched, almost rainless strip of land, where nature has deposited millions of tons of nitrogen in the form of nitrate of soda. Not only the power to produce crops, but also the power to wage war and to develop many essential industries depends upon nitrogen. Before the war the German chemist, Ostwald, wrote: "If a great war were to break out between two great powers, one of which were to prevent the export of saltpeter from the few ports of Chile, it would thereby make it impossible for the enemy to continue longer than its ammunition supply would last." Germany had accumulated 600,000 tons of Chilean saltpeter before the war. It is estimated that the Chilean nitrate beds will be exhausted some time during the present century. Scientists and engineers, therefore, are bending every effort to other means of supply. Nitrogen is now being recovered from the air by various processes and in several countries.

The Waiter's Mistake.

"The French, since Foch's victory, are almost in danger of getting swelled head," said Immigration Commissioner Caminetti of New York.

"And no wonder! The French certainly displayed great military genius on this war, and praises and compliments are falling on them from all sides.

"In a French restaurant the other day I ordered a steak. Then as the French waiter turned to go, I added:

"'Well done, waiter.'

"The young man, flushed with pleasure, drew himself up and saluted smartly.

"'But you Americans, monsieur,' he said, 'you Americans also covered yourselves with glory at Chateau Thierry and the Bois de Belleau.'"

Hard a Blush.

A Scotch friend is fellow: "Strange how many times there is no blush for one to feel embarrassment."

Quite So.

LAST NOTICE!

The Price of Our Clothes Goes up on Monday

Several weeks ago we told you that the price of woollens had gone up almost double what they were six months ago, and that the price of Regent Tailors' Suit and Overcoats, made to order, would have to be increased in a short time.

We told you, however, that the price would not be raised so long as our present stock of materials lasted. These materials had been bought months before, when prices were much lower, and instead of profiteering we would give customers the full benefit of the low price,

Buying has been so heavy that these clothes have all been sold. This week will more than see the last of them. But—

UP TO TO-MORROW NIGHT you can still buy Suit or Overcoat made to your measure for only . .

On Monday the price goes up. Remember that we are not responsible for the increase. Everything entering into a garment costs us nearly double what it did last spring. We in fact lose money on every suit or overcoat we sell to-morrow for $21.00. But we want to give our customers fair warning, so that they can get the full benefit of the old price if they wish to do so.

Give Us 15 Minutes of your time —you will save at least $1 a minute.

Come to-morrow and leave your measure for your fall and winter clothing needs. You save money by doing so. And you have a magnificent range of the very newest materials to choose from. Regent Tailors' Suit and Overcoats are the greatest tailoring values in Canada to-day.

EVERY GARMENT WE MAKE IS FULLY GUARANTEED

You take no chance of disappointment when you buy clothes from us, because every garment we make is guaranteed to fit and satisfy or you do not have to take it. This entire organization is at your service to make just the kind of clothes you want.

If you cannot wait for suit or overcoat to be made don't forget that the models in our windows and stores are for sale. We always have a full range of sizes and style at the same price.

BABE RUTH OF BOSTON AIMS AT 30 HOME RUNS THIS YEAR

Determined to Establish Record To Last For Years—18 Games Yet.

Boston, Sept. 11.—With sixteen more games to play, "Babe" Ruth and his ashen blunderbus should establish a home run record to endure for years. Ruth cares little about singles, or doubles or triples now Anything less than a home run appears futile and puny, and a sheer waste of the essential punch He is concentrating the full volume of his mighty power the ultimate ounce of his explosive energy—in one final drive to rear a record that will win him everlasting fame.

That Ruth is the greatest batsman of all time, as far as long distance hitting is involved, already is apparent. If there be any doubt about it now, Ruth will have obliterated every vestige before the final fade-out engulfs the chase.

The Back Bay wonder boy accomplished a master feat when he broke "Buck" Freeman's musty record into a scarlet smear at the Polo Grounds. Twenty-six home runs across a stretch of 122 games is something more than a mere sneeze.

But Ruth has set for himself a loftier mark. He will be satisfied with no less than thirty home runs — count 'em —thirty. And from this nook of observation it appears certain he will achieve it. In the remaining eighteen games—should he play them all—Ruth will go to bat seventy-two times, averaging four a game, providing him an opportunity for some very tall hustling.

BABE RUTH HAS SUPPLANTED TY COBB AS DRAWING CARD

An esteemed fan protests the statement that Babe Ruth today is a greater drawing card than Ty Cobb.

Yet the Babe today undoubtedly is. If there is one detail of baseball which the crowd esteems above all else it is the long distance wallop, and the Babe happens to be not only the mightiest hitter of them all, but one who has been on the hunt for a record that few believed ever would be broken.

When such sluggers as Ed. Delehanty, Nap Lajoie Hans Dagner, Sam Crawford, Harry Davis, Home Run Baker and others, were unable to even draw near Buck Freeman's old record. Ruth's sensational march can be appreciated with better effect.

Thirty thousand Boston fans were on hand Monday, and most of them came out to see Ruth and another notch to his hat handle, it being a matter of small moment whether the Red Sox lost or won.

Ruth is the big individual card of the year, and if he ads one or two more circuit smashes to his mark, putting him well beyond all competition, he will start 1920 as the main lure of them all.

The Central Picture.

Cicotte's pitching has been something to marvel at, considering his advanced years and previous condition of servitude.

But the ball player, who in a shortened season can step out and crack all past home run records is the one that catches the normal eye. Ruth is quite likely to add several marks to Buck Freeman's old record and to set an achievement that should be

GOOD HORSES FOR SPEED PROGRAMME

APPLICATIONS CONTINUE TO ARRIVE FOR STABLE ROOM — MANY THOROUGHBREDS IN LIST

FAMOUS JOCKEYS WILL RIDE

JOCKEYS JOHNSON, BANKS AND CASEY TO COMPETE — TWO HEATS DAILY AND EVERY RACE FOR A PRIZE

Applications for stabling accomodations from horsemen who will ship their horses here to race at the Peterboro Fair, commencing Monday continue to arrive daily and from present indications the Amusement Committee's speed programme will be the best in the history of the local Exposition. Word was received to-day from Andy Machan that he will ship from Toronto the thoroughbred, Hemisphere, another candidate for the running events and Jockey Johnson will be on hand to pilot this son of Stanhope II—Globe.

Hemisphere is one of the best bred runers that will sport colors at the local races. His sire, Stanhope II. being the sire of two King's Plate winners, Tartarean and Ladder of Light, also Kingly, the winner of the $5,000 Toronto Cup at Woodbine Park. Although his racing experience is limited to one race, Hemisphere has worked fast in his trials, according to his owner, who expects him to develop into a good colt with a little more experence.

Jockeys Banks and Casey are the two latest riders to announce their intention of coming to ride, the latter being one of the best jockeys ever developed by Wm. "Red" Walker, the famous Toronto horseman.

The running racing was the outstanding feature of the Cobourg Horse Show and made a decided hit at both the Guelph and Galt races recently. As a result the management of Peterboro's Fair felt that their patrons were entitled to the best amusement obtainable and at considerable expense have hung up enough prize money to attract the majority of the best running horses in training in this part of the Province.

There will be one running race on the speed programme on each of the three days of the big Fair. Each race will be two heats and the purses will be divided so that every heat will be a race. This eliminates the possibility of a rider "laying up" a heat with his horse and assures keen contests in every event.

BLACK AND SILVER GIVES ARTISTIC EFFECT

CRESSMAN CO'S WINDOW HOLDS AND ARRESTS PASSERS-BY

The main window of the Cressman Co., Limited, presents this fall opening a charming picture, unique and startling, in its scarcity of bright coloring. It is an art creation of black and white and pearl grey effect, which reflects exceptional credit on the dresser. The main wall drapings are black with white chrysanthemum flower figure work standing out in bold relief, intersected by two proportionately narrow drappings in rich silver grey, matched in turn by a flooring of the latter color. The figures are naturally grouped showing to advantage beautiful home street and evening costumes, also black and white, relieved in one case only by a floral posy at the waist. A charming lady's fan in rich ostrich plumes, the whole in black lying carelessly, as it were, in the black lap of a seated lay-figure, holds the eye in wonder at the dressy possibilities of the darkest of all dark colors. Handsome chairs in dark walnut, inlaid with imitation pearl a beautifully carved mahogany centre table, a pair of silver colored shoes and a companion pair in black, together with two bouquets of flowers go to complete a picture of black and white and silver grey, relieved with out a minimum of resplendent coloring, which arrests one's attention like a story from wonderland. Rich, but not showy; quietly beautiful, but not glaring, is this revelation from the hands of a master craftsman in Cressman's window.

Each and every window, including the arcade entrance, reflects a substantial business house, ever thoughtful of its patronage with each succeeding season. The firm name is synonymous for approved styles, quality and service to all.

ARRIVED FROM NEW YORK

MR. H. J. ZACKS RETURNS FROM A SUCCESSFUL THREE WEEKS BUYING TRIP

Mr. H. J. Zacks has just returned from an extended three weeks' trip to New York, visiting the best American manufacturers of ladies' ready-to-wear. He also spent some time in the best Canadian markets and has come home much pleased with the success of his buying trip. Among the most important items of his purchases are ladies' suits, coats, dresses, skirts, waists, etc., all in the height of America's great fashion centre's style. They are made in all the new materials such as silvertones, tricotines, velours, etc., and in the very latest shades. These goods are arriving every day and are being placed on display as quickly as they are unpacked. As the season is now right at hand for the purchase of your new fall wear, it would be good policy to come to the store on Saturday and see the new styles personally.

Mr. Zack's prices are extremely moderate, and that is another good reason for taking advantage of his good buying. Remember the place, H. J. Zack's, 422 George street, opposite Examiner.

GARDNER—BINGHAM

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Bingham, new Romaine street, was the scene of a very pretty wedding Wednesday evening, Sept. 10, at 5 o'clock, when their daughter, Edna M., became the bride of Mr. Robert Howard Gardner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Gardner, of Norwood. Rev. Mr. Chapman, of St. James' Church, officiating. The bride entered the parlor leaning on her father's arm, while Mrs. E. Holston played the wedding march and stood under an arch of evergreens and white asters. The letters, "G and B" hung from the centre of the arch, also decorated with white asters. The bride was attired in white silk crepe-de-chine and carried a bouquet of cream roses. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Madeline, who also wore white silk crepe-de-chine and carried a bouquet of white asters. The groom was ably assisted by Mr. David Stark, of Norwood. The groom's present to the bride was a beautiful pendant, to the bridesmaid a crescent pin, to the groomsman, a gold stick pin. The presents were many and useful which the happy couple received. After the ceremony the guests all sat down to a dainty tea. After a short visit to Belleville Mr. and Mrs. Gardner will reside in Norwood.

DID NOT STOP AND HAVE NAME AND ADDRESS AS LAW REQUIRES

Fined at Police Court, But Case Will Be Appealed.

Miss Lawson, of Cavan, received a fine of $2 and $8.51 by Acting Magistrates Rush and Eastwood in Police Court this morning for alleged breaking of the traffic bylaw. Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the defendant, stated he would appeal the case.

The story of the case is that Horace Blake was riding his bicycle west on Charlotte street. According to his story, he turned out to avoid a car standing about 80 feet away from the corner of Park when he was knocked off his wheel by the car driven by Miss Lawson. The automobile knocked the wheel over and the hind wheel of it ran over the hind wheel of the bicycle. After getting the car off the wheel the lady driver, according to Blake's evidence, drove off not leaving her name or address.

Replying to questions of Mr. Gordon, he swore he had not used profane or threatening language on that occasion.

Blake's companion, Stanley Whitcroft, swore that on that occasion he had not heard any threatening language used. He and Blake had both called for the car to stop but it had driven right on.

The four occupants of the car, Mrs. Lawson, mother of the driver, Miss Lawson, and two little girls, all made the statement in the witness box that after the wheel had been knocked down Blake got up and made threatening motions and mutterings that were unintelligible. When Miss Lawson enquired of him if his wheel was damaged he had remarked that not was all the same to them if it was. According to the testimony of the occupants of the car. On failing to receive civil remarks, Miss Lawson had proceeded on her way.

Mr. Gordon, in his defence, claimed that in the face of threatening and obusive language the lady driver was not called on to remain and give her name and address. On these grounds he is determined to appeal the decisions of the acting magistrates.

GREAT INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD CONGRESS OPENS IN LONDON TODAY

Overseas Delegates, Representing Fifteen Countries, to be Present, Including Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Winnipeg—An Event Which Will Mark a Step Forward in Brotherhood Among Nations World Unrest Problems For Discussion.

The International Brotherhood Congress, which opens in London England, today is a practical effort towards the solution of many of the world's past war problems.

At the evening meeting in the City Temple, Dr. Clifford, president of the National Brotherhood Council, will take the chair. As the church holds no more than 2,300 people, and the Prime Minister is to be the principal speaker, it is not surprising that the organizers of the Congress have been compelled to take steps to ensure as fair a distribution of tickets for the available seating accommodation as the circumstances will allow. The floor of the church will be occupied by the overseas delegates and representatives of the London societies. Each society has been invited to send their three chief officers, to the total number of about 900; and the gallery seats will be occupied by as many additional members from the affiliated societies as can be conveniently accommodated.

A Sermon for Women.

In addition to the official Brotherhood sermon which is to be preached by Dr. Fort Newton at the City Temple on Sunday morning, Miss Maude Royden will preach a special sermon to women at the same church in the afternoon.

Winnipeg Rector There.

Each of the three week-day gatherings of the Congress will be preceded by a devotional meeting at 9.30 a.m., and the first of these preliminary services will be conducted by the Rev. F. B. Meyer on Monday morning. This will be followed by a statement from Mr. William Ward, the hon. international secretary, upon whom has rested the main responsibility for the Congress arrangements. After the inaugural address by Dr. Clifford, as first international president, a discussion on "Brotherhood and Religion" will be introduced by the Rev. Tom Sykes (national secretary) and the Rev. W. J. Southam (rector of Holy Trinity Church, Winnipeg, and president of the Winnipeg and Manitoba Provincial Brotherhood Federation).

"Brotherhood Among the Nations."

On Monday afternoon, September 15, there will be a welcome to the overseas delegates, representing some fifteen countries. They will be invited to describe the progress of the Brotherhood movement and influence in their respective lands; and in order to make this section of the proceedings as complete as possible, the overseas delegates will continue their narratives at an evening sitting. In Canada the machinery of organization is already far in advance of that at the disposal of the National Brotherhood secretary in England, and the home delegates will doubtless be impressed by the need for making a big effort in their respective federation areas on behalf of the Two Million Shillings Fund which was opened last March.

World Unrest.

On Tuesday, September 16, the Congress will have a long and full sitting. At 9.30 a.m., Mr. Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor Party, will introduce the discussion on "Brotherhood and World Unrest;" and he will be followed on the same subject by the Rev. Samuel Zane Batten, D.D., general secretary of the Baptist Brotherhood Federation of the United States. Two hours later Sir Harry Hamilton Johnston, president of the African society, and Mr. Basil Matthews, M.A., editorial secretary of the London Missionary Society, will lead the discussion on "Brotherhood and the Native Races." In the afternoon, Sir Thomas Barlow and Sir Alfred Pearce Gould will express their views as to the attitude of the Brotherhood towards the fight against venereal disease; and this discussion will be followed by one on "Brotherhood and the Eastern Peoples," which will be opened by Professor Harendranath Maitra, editor of "A Voice from India."

Archbishop's Message.

There is likely to be a quickening rather than any waning of interest on the part of the delegates in the discussions reserved for Wednesday, the closing day of the Congress, for two subjects of first-rate importance will then be debated. Lord Robert Cecil and Professor Gilbert Murray have agreed to introduce the subject of "Brotherhood and the League of Nations," which is at the present time an extremely live question with the Brotherhoods at home; and Mr. J. Alfred Spender, the editor of the "Westminster Gazette," will be the first speaker on "Brotherhood and the Press."

As an indication of the sympathetic attitude of the Archbishop of Canterbury towards the Congress, it may be noted that his Grace has promised to send a friendly message to be read at the opening session; and among the clergy and laity of the Anglican churches throughout the country evidence is accumulating of a developing sympathetic interest in the Brotherhood Movement.

LEADER $65,000 JOB IDENTIFIED

ROBBER GANG OF SIX MEN ROUNDED UP BY POLICE AND DETECTIVES

END OF A FOUR MILE CHASE

ONE OF AMERICA'S MOST EXPERT CRACKSMEN, HARRY DIEHME, CAPTURED

Chicago, Sept. 12.—Following a four mile chase at break-neck speed through west side avenues and side streets early today, detectives from the bureau captured a gang of six men, one of whom has been identified as the leader of a $65,000 robber gang in Cleveland, O. He is Harry Diehme, alias Davis, declared by Chief of Detectives Mooney as one of the country's most expert cracksmen. The identification was made on the basis of reports sent out from Cleveland, which definitely connected Diehme with the gang which took $50,000 in currency and $10,00 in liberty bonds and $5,000 in other securities from the West Cleveland Trust and Savings Company July 27. He also is believed to have been implicated in the safe blowing at the American theatre here on Monday, when more than $2,000 was taken.

Five Others Arrested.

With Diehme were arrested Clarence White, 1462 West Madison street; Harold Werss, 2066 North Western avenue; Joe Simons, 1835 North Leavitt street; James Tyler, 1920 West Van Buren street, and Harry Merrell, colored, 3235 South State street.

Lieut. Michael Hughes and a squad of detectives who made the arrest went to Simon's saloon at Colorado avenue and West Madison street. Under the bar they found $125 in currency. The coins were nicked as if they had been in an explosion.

Money Held Part of Loot.

It is believed the money is part of the loot taken from the American threatre. William Connors, the bartender in the saloon, was taken to the detective bureau for questioning. The men are supposed to have taken part in the robbery of the American Railway Express Company at 507 South Western avenue a few days ago.

When arrested the men threw revolvers out of the automobile in which they were riding. These were later recovered. A set of burglar tools was found in the auto and a quantity of nitroglycerin.

ARTHUR HENDERSON'S ELECTION WARNS GOVERNMENT OF A TURN IN THE TIDE

Public Feeling Against Coalition Government in Great Britain Declared Bitter—Lloyd George's Intentions Regarding Russia and Conscription Characterized as Suspicious—Direct Action by United Labour is But Strategically Side-Tracked for Present

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 13.—The result of the bye-election in Widnas, Lancaster, when Arthur Henderson, Labor leader, was elected to the House of Commons, is considered a severe blow to the Coalition Government, and has revived speculation as to the imminence of another general election.

Determined Aattitude.

The virtually unanimous vote of the Trades Union Congress at Glasgow for the nationalization of mines and the vote on the subject of withdrawing British troops from Russia are regarded as evidence of a very determined attitude on the part of labor against the Government.

Suspects Govt. intention.

It is pointed out that there are suspicions as to the Government's intentions concerning Russia and conscription, and that the Glasgow Congress declined clearly to condemn the policy of direct action, but only strategically side-tracked the decision. Reconstruction of the cabinet is long overdue and has been delayed only because ministerial changes would involve bye-elections, which it is said, would almost certainly provide additional evidence that the tide of feelin gin the country is running strongly against the Government.

Appeal to Country.

Added to the difficulties in the field of Labor is the Irish question which seems impossible for the Coalition Government to satisfactorily solve. On all sides the consensus of opinion is that another appeal to the country cannot be long delayed.

Policy Condemned.

It is understood that as soon as Premier Lloyd George returns from France he intends to summon the inner cabinet to discuss the whole situation. Arthur Henderson, in an interview here last night on his success in Widnes, said his victory was "an emphatic condemnation of the Coalition Government's policy and of that cynical political compromise upon which the Government rests."

Nation Not Represented.

"I believe," he continued, "that the origin of the demand for a policy of direct action lies in the fact that the present Parliament is felt to be wholly unrepresentative of the nation, and is dominated by reactionary influences. This has involved the country in proceedings which are a negation of democracy. It is shown in developments in Russia, Hungary, and nearer home, in Ireland, where the situation is obviously grave. Widnes is a warning that the Government cannot afford to ignore."

TIME FOR APPEAL IS NOW EXTENTED

The registration appeal time limit for the voters list has been extended until Tuesday next to give every person entitled to vote, a chance to get his or her name on the list. Every name must be in the rands of the appeal court clerk by Tuesday without fail.

Those appealing to be put on the lists are warned that they must appear at the appeal court or send someone who knows them.

FRENCH CITY EMPLOYES OUT

Mariage and Burial Rites Suspended in 68 Paris Suburbs.

Paris, France, Sept. 12. The municipal employes and workmen in sixty-eight of the Paris suburbs are one strike for improved conditions. This will suspend the marriage and burial services in the case of people living in the suburbs. Probably the water supply will be cut off, as the employes of the water company are reported to have decided to strike simultaneously with the municipal employes.

PROTESTS AGAINST ARREST OF UNION BOLSHEVIKI SUSPECTS

BABE IN HER ARMS; KILLS ASSAILANT

WOMAN SHOOTS UNIDENTIFIED MAN INTRUDER AND DISAPPEARS FOR TWO DAYS

CHILD IS STILL MISSING

UNDER REPEATED QUESTIONING WOMAN ADHERES TO HER STORY IN EVERY DETAIL

Chicago, Sept. 12.—For two days [illegible] of the rooming house at 950 West Madison street, passing the open door of one of the rooms, noticed a man lying on the floor. There are many persons living in the place, each paying small attention to the affairs of the others, and no one gave a second thought to the prostrate figure. He was drunk, they thought, or asleep.

Meanwhile, the manager of the house, Mrs. Mary Parpalivato, was not seen. This also attracted no attention. Even Mrs. Ida Watson of 1.08 West Madison street, who subleases to Mrs. Parpalivato, felt no uneasiness when she called at the place and found her tenant continually absent.

But this morning both Mrs. Watson and the roomers, seeing the man still lying on the floor, decided upon an investigation. They went into his room and turned him over. There was a hole in his forehead. He was dead.

Mrs. Watson returned in a panic to her own place. She had hardly reached home when Mrs. Parpalivato appeared ashen faced and her eyes staring from her head.

"My baby!" she moaned. "My little Mary! What have they done with her?"

Tells of the Killing.

Mrs. Watson waietd.

"I killed him," the woman went on. "I did it. He took my baby away, and insulted me. I shot him. But where is my baby?"

Mrs. Watson called the Desplaines street police. They took Mrs. Parpalivato to the station. There she told her story between outbursts of tears.

"I was alone in the house Monday morning," she said. "I had my little Mary in my arms. There was a knock at the front. I went to the door. A man was there.

"'I want a room near the roof,' he said. 'I want to leave this stuff.' He had a package in his hands.

"I let him in and went into my own room to put the baby down. He followed me. Then he opened his package. It was a whiskey bottle.

"'Have a drink,' he said to me.

"'No, no, I said. 'I don't drink.'

"'Won't you have a drink?'

"Then he grabbed me by the arm and shook me. He told me again to take a drink, and I said no. He took the baby away from me and threw her on the bed. Then he grabbed me again and threw me on the bed, too. I got away from him and ran to the dresser. My husband keeps a revolver in the drawer. Just as I opened it he rushed at me again. I pulled the trigger and he fell on the floor.

Mrs. Watson says she gave her baby to a woman on the street to hold a minute and has seen neither since.

Repeated questioning of the woman did not alter her story. The police took the dead man to an undertaker's and examined the clothing. The only mark of identification was a garment workers' union card with the name Gosberg. On the back porch was found the revolver where Mrs. Parpalivato said she had left it. One cartridge had been fired.

The woman's husband is said to be out of the city. Her other little daughter, Alizia, 8 years old is being cared for at the county hospital, where her mother placed her last week. Alizia cried all this afternoon, but the police would not let her mother go to her.

Trades Congress Ended To-day Sympathy With Brothers in Their Hour of Repression is Last Resolution

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Glasgow, Sept 13— The Trades Union Congress ended today with the passage of resolutions reaffirming the right of free speech and protesting against the arest and deportation of Allen Trades Union Officials for connection with Bolshevism.

Control Food Prices

Resolutions also expressed the belief in the necesity for a control of food prices. James Henry Thomas, Labor member of Parliament, moved an emergency resolution for depreciation of military rule in Ireland, and declaring that the only solution of the Irish problem was through the method of self-determination by which Irish people could work out their own solutions.

Another resolution expressed profound sympathy for the Trades Union lists, "Irish brothers in their hour of respression." This resolution was carried unanimously.

EXPLANATION OF THE WORKING PRINCIPLES OF HOUSING SCHEME

Matter Now Under Consideration by City Council Object to Supply Working People With Homes.

It will have been noticed in yesterday's paper that the city Council had instructed the city solicitor to draw up a bylaw for the acceptance of the Ontario Housing Plan as provided for by the Ontario Housing Plan of 1919.

Although this act passed the Provincial House on April 24th, the Council of this city has never before expressed itself as favoring the plan. And even yet, until they receive further information as to its success in cities where it has been given a trial the city fathers are still dubious about launching out into this new scheme.

The object of this act is to provide homes for the working class of the Province, and as it was passed so soon after the cessation of hostilities we may not be far astray in considering that it was partly to help the returned men to settle, that the act was passed.

The act provides that the province of Ontario (the Provincial Government) may borrow money from the Dominion Government or from other sources for a term of 30 years at a rate of 5 per cent. interest. The Provincial Government can in its turn upon the order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council lend money to any municipality which desires it and which by means of a Housing Commission uses it to build houses and provide homes for those who need them.

The municipal commission consists of the head of the municipality Council and two or four other members not members of the Council but appointed by the Council. In the case of four additional members they shall be elected for a term of two years, two being elected each year.

The duty of this commission is to borrow money from the Provincial Government and in turn loan it to either a company or private person for the purchase of land and erection of houses. In the cases of companies the commission is called upon to limit its loan to 85 per cent. of the value of the house and lot. In the case of a private person the commission may loan the total amount of the cost of the house and lot.

Special provision is also made for those who served their country in the great war in section 11 of the act, which reads, "A commission may erect on land acquired by it, within the limits of the municipality, and any company may erect on land acquired by it in any municipality where this act applies, dwelling houses of a class suitable for the accommodation of persons who have been on active service during the present war with the naval or military forces of Great Britain or her allies, and who are residents of Ontario, and working men and working women and men and women of moderate means."

In ordinary cases the cost of the house must not exceed $2,500 and the cost of the house and land must not exceed $3,00. On the approval of the director of the Bureau of Municipal Affairs in particular cases or in particular municipalities the cost of the house must not exceed $3,000 and the house and land must not exceed $3,600.

According to one clause of the act the payments shall be made by the commission from time to time during the progress of the work on estimates furnished and approved by the commission.

Another portion of a clause makes it possible for a person who has received a loan to become a purchaser under an agreement of sale for the amount of the loan. This act applies only to British subjects.

To those who have had an opportunity of reading this act upon the 1919 statutes this brief explanation of the working principles of the act will be of no use but to others, and possibly those to whom the act will be of the greatest advantage, we hope this explanation will be of use to help them understand something of what is implied in the Ontario Housing Act, advantage of which is now being considered by the local Council.

POISON SUSPECTED FUNERAL IS HALTED

CORONER HOLDS UP BURIAL OF PAINTER WHO DROPPED DEAD

Chicago, Sept. 12.—The funeral of Nelse Heneault, 56 years old, a painter, who fell dead when at work in room 500, 537 South Dearborn street, yesterday afternoon, was halted today by Coroner Hoffman on the receipt of a tip that Heneault had been given a slow acting poison.

The body was to have been sent to Joliet this morning. Mrs. Heneault, 663 West 65th street, widow of the painter, it being questioned by oucials from the corner's office this afternoon while Dr. Joseph Almonds, coroner's physician, conducts a post mortem examination at the Central undertaking rooms.

Yesterday it was supposed that Heneault's death resulted from natural causes. Coroner Hoffman was told he had recently been in failing health. The sudden attack which caused his death was believed to be heart disease. The suggestion that Heneault may have been poisoned came to the coroner through an anonymous telephone call this morning.

Coroner Hoffman announced this afternoon that the body will be held at the undertaking rooms, 319 Federal street, until the investigation is complete.

ENDS 2,500 MILE FLIGHT

French Aviator Flies From Cairo, Egypt, to Villacoublay.

Paris, France, Sept. 12.—Commander Vuillemin, the aviator, arrived last evening at 7 o'clock at Villacoublay, from Cairo, Egypt, having flown about 2,500 miles in three flights. The first stop was made at Constantinople, the second at Istres, twenty-three miles west of Marseilles and the third at Villacoublay.

MUST WALK THROUGH PETROGRAD TO EVACUATE NORTHERN RUSSIA

Churchill Says General Rawlinson has Full Discretion as to Time and Method of Evacuation.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 13.—Newspaper comment on the statement issued on Thursday by Winston Spencer Churchill, Secretary for War, denying that there had been any change in the British Government's policy to have British troops evacuate Northern Russia, has produced the suggestion that it may be the Government's intention to evacuate not through the Arctic region but by way of the Baltic after an attack on Petrograd.

Walk Through Petrograd.

It is pointed out by some of the newspapers that Col. Churchill said Gen. Sir Henry S. Rawlinson British commander, had full discretion as to "time and method of evacuation," and some color seems lent to the suggestion of newspapers by the statement that appeared in a recent Archangel despatch that "There are sufficient British troops in North Russia to walk through Petrograd."

Nicholas Tschaikovsky, president of the provisional government of North Russia, who is in London, in a statement today said that "through Petrograd is the only way the Allies can with honor evacuate North Russia."

He predicted that terrible bloodshed and vengeance will be wreaked on North Russia if British troops are withdrawn through the Arctic. Col. Churchill in his statement denied that British troops were employed or that the British Government had accepted any responsibility in operations against Petrograd.

CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT

Ottawa, Sept. 13. — Hon. N. W. Rowell moved in the House that the special committee to reconsider soldiers' civil re-establishment be appointed forthwith with power to invite soldiers to appear before it. Mr. Burnham asked who would pay the expenses of witnesses, and Mr. Rowell replied that Parliament would pay all expenses where the names of witnesses are handed in beforehand.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR CONFERENCE.

THE FIRST meeting of the General Conference of the International Labor Organization will take place at Washington on October 29. Several names of possible representatives of the United Kingdom have been already mentioned in the Press, and, presumably, the official list of the representatives and their advisers will be issued shortly. Before the General Conference meets the reports of the international organizing committee will be available, and these will contain reviews of the subjects to be discussed at Washington, together with suggestions as to international action.

What can be done, and what should be done, on an international scale in regard to labor legislation? asks C. Delisle Brown a British labor authority. The two questions are closely connected, but we should not confine our ideal within the limits of what is immediately practicable; for what should be done on an international scale is fairly clear. There will naturally be some disagreement as to details, for some people appear to believe in super-State regulation of working conditions. That can hardly be the ideal. Many States are already too vast and their labor regulations and administration are already too highly centralized. Within federal States the legislative power in regard to labor problems is confined to the constituent parts of the federation. And even if legislation of a super-State character were desirable, it could be made effective only by a super-State administration and inspectorate which would involve a bureaucracy in excelsis, or, rather, in partibus infidelium. We may suppose, therefore, that what should be done on an international scale is not to substitute international for State legislation, but to increase the speed of the reforming process in the several States and to provide general agreements within which the State machinery can operate.

In the first place, the existence of the International Labor Organization does not make unnecessary the various voluntary associations and political groupings which already exist. In a sense, voluntary organization becomes all the more necessary because there is a quasi-official organization. The international groupings of Socialists and Trades Unionists as well the groups of social students in the old International Association for Labor Legislation should become more and more effective; for the action taken on an international scale should be initiated and promoted by those chiefly concerned and not by benevolent officials. What should be done, then, is what is decided by the representatives of Labor and the students of social structure, who are often better statesmen than the politicians. International action should find its origin in the international mind. But secondly, and more definitely, international action on labor legislation should result in more information. The fact as to the situation in each State should be known in such a way as to be available for use in every other State. The British public does not know what goes on in the mills in India; the Italian public does not know the conditions of work and life in the United States. Apart altogether from distress suffered in every land, we know too little of the methods adopted or suggested abroad for the relief of distress or the better organization of industry. Information, then, of the most general character can be collected and published on an international scale.

A gain, thirdly, international action should take the form of agreements as to the establishment of similar or corresponding conditions of work in all industrial States. The existence of better conditions in any State may be evidence for the practicability of reforms elsewhere, or it may provide suggestions as to method. And of all possible agreements the most useful would be one with regard to the administration and inspectorate. On But international action should not stop there. There which the effectiveness of all labor legislation depends should be, fourthly, some organization of inter-State machinery for dealing with problems directly affecting contiguous or closely connected States. This does not involve a world State. All that is necessary is administrative machinery, for example, to secure that the benefits of the social insurance system of each State shall be easily available for foreign workers. It should be possible also to have an inter-State if not a completely international, supervision of the engagement of foreign labor. Finally, international action should have a special effectiveness in regard to those services which are, in fact, international. Shipping is the most obvious of these; and it will soon be impossible for any State to regulate the conditions of work and life on its own ships unless it acts as part of an international organization. The reform of conditions on British "tramps," for example, can hardly be undertaken without some effective regulation of conditions on Greek ships and those of other nationalities.

This would be the beginning of a new development which will almost certainly occur. International action for the improvement of labor conditions must, sooner or later, influence the organization of commerce and finance; for the conditions which involve distress or enslavement for the workers in various countries are chiefly the results of manufacture and distribution for a world market. It is the world market which makes large-scale industry and the fluctuations of trade. Therefore, if any great step forward is to be made in humanizing the conditions under which industrial workers live, the world market must be dealt with. But this may seem too vast a subject even for discussion at Washington.

If it be agreed that what should be done is on lines suggested above, it would then be necessary to consider what can be done. Our ideal may be unattainable, either because the available force is not adequate for attaining it or because of the peculiar external circumstances of the moment. Clearly we cannot at present reorganize the whole basis of industry, because the world needs an immediate supply of goods and it would be better to secure these on the old system rather than risk having to do without them because we attempt to do too much. On the other hand, interim policy should not be allowed to prejudice the case for considering fundamental issues. Even if we delay radical changes, the need of them may not be less. The crux, however, as to what can be done internationally is the force available for doing it. There is no clear vision of what should be done which is accepted as a basis for practical policy by great numbers of men. Distinctions of language and sentiment separate the workers of different lands; the "proletarians of all countries" unite more readily in sentiment than in practice. Labor, in fact, is much less organized than either its friends or its enemies appear to believe. It ought to be possible for the workers of the whole world to put their case before the General Conference at Washington; but can they do it? Are they even agreed as to what their case is? And as for the employers in every country they seem to adopt the attitude of defending themselves against assailants; but they ought by this time to have unlearned this obsolete nonsense. If they have any social status as organizers of industry, they should be putting their heads together in order to devise improvements of organization. But can they do it? Are they not too much concerned with preserving their little trade secrets from foreign employers? The governments may be left undiscussed. No one expects them to initiate anything. The conclusion, therefore, remains that although very much should be done internationally by the new Labor organization, what can be done is very little. This may be pessimistic; but unless much more energy is expended in the General Conference at Washington than seems at present likely, the new Labor office will be as inert as a machine without its driving force.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

AMONG THE SUGGESTIONS to be brought before the "Our Country First" conference, now meeting in Chicago, to discuss causes and remedies for industrial unrest, is that of dropping the phrase "labor and capital" in ordinary discussion of the relations of employers and employes and using the latter terms instead, the Chicago Daily News says. Whether the idea is adopted or not, it emphasizes the fact that there will always be gross inaccuracy in attempted classification of the American people under special heads of this sort. "Labor and capital" are convenient generalizations, but any one who imagines that citizenship in a country can be placed neatly and definitely in a series of separate compartments does not understand the country or the people.

The employer is not always the capitalist and the employe often is. The employer not infrequently is quite as busy trying to make sure that he can meet the demands of capital for the customary interest returns on borrowed money as the laborer possibly can be in trying to meet the demands on his purse. Labor itself plays an important role as capitalist, as any one must realize who reflects on the uses to which deposits in savings banks are put. Remove from the capital side of the ledger the loanable sums which Labor supplies through its savings and on which it receives a guaranteed return, and industry would be very seriously crippled. Moreover, it is a common experience for the laborer, through ownership of stock in the concern for which he works, to find himself directly in the capitalist class.

More significant than all this, however, is the fact that the worker of today is likely to be the employer of tomorrow. The wide passage leading from the ranks of employes to those of employers and capitalists is never blocked in this land of freedom and opportunity. Whenever a successful business man dies in the United States we are likely to be reminded of the typical American career—that of the worker rising through energy, intelligence, zeal and the grasping of opportunity to a position of importance in the industrial or commercial world.

Those who do not see beyond such familiar terms as "labor and capital" to these essential facts are blind to important every-day realities.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

QUALITY BETTER THAN SIZE.

(Toronto Star.)

Toronto's population is within a few hundred of 500,000. A decade ago it was only 325,000; a quarter century ago, 168,000; a half century ago, 56,000. Nevertheless, "How much better is Toronto?" is a more important question than "How much bigger is Toronto?"

WHERE PROFITS GO.

(Portland, Oregon, Journal.)

Seventy-five cents a pound is what a Portlander paid for Oregon-grown cherries in New York. Ten and a fourth is the price at which the Salem fruit union sold twenty-four carloads, and it was the general high price for Oregon cherries this season except a lot sold by the Hood River Applegrowers' Association at sixteen. The farmers do the growin, the consumers do the paying, and thrifty gentlemen somewhere in the circle get the velvet.

BUYING UP THE CROWN.

(Kansas City Times.)

A Hungarian living in Cleveland has a fine plan to make sure that there shall never be another king in Hungary. He proposes to buy the Hungarian crown for $25,000. This, he observes, will prevent another king from wearing it. Did he ever hear of the man who noticed that his horse pricked his ears every time it shied? So he cropped its ears to prevent its shying.

DIDN'T MATTER MUCH.

(New York Correspondent.)

Theatreless Manhattan seemed to struggle along pretty well. Strangely, I did not hear a complaint about the lack of thespic display. People immediately found other amusements. The parks were crowded. Dining out perked up. Without booze and without theatres one might well expect the soul of Manuhattan to shrivel and blow away. But it seemed to be having a pretty good time.

That woman who took an oar and knocked down the fellow who was rocking the boat is likely to show us yet that votes for women was no sickly sentimental idea of human justice.

RULES TO COMBAT THE FLU EPIDEMIC

Will there be another visitation of influenza? writes Col. George A. Soper, of the sanitary corps, U.S.A., in Science. Nobody can positively answer this question. Influenza commonly sweeps in more than one wave over a country. America experienced an unmistakable but mild wave before the great one of September and October and since then there have been local disturbances corresponding to fresh outbreaks in many places. In England a new and alarming prevalence has been reported. It would not be surprising if there should be another epidemic in the United States.

The writer's idea of the most essential things to remember are embodied in the following twelve condensed rules which were prepared in September, recommended by the surgeon-general of the army and published by order of the secretary of war to be given all possible publicity:

1. Avoid needless crowding—influenza is a crowd disease.

2. Smother your coughs and sneezes others do not want the germs which you would throw away.

3. Your nose, not your mouth, was made to breathe through—get the habit.

4. Remember the three C's—a clean mouth, clean skin and clean clothes.

5. Try to keep cool when you walk and warm when you ride and sleep.

6. Open the windows—always at home at night at the office when practicable.

7. Food will win the war if you give it a chance—help by choosing and chewing your food well.

8. Your fate may be in your own hands—wash your hands before eating.

9. Don't let the waste products of digestion accumulate—drink a glass or two of water on getting up.

10. Don't use a napkin, towel, spoon, fork, glass or cup which has been used by another person and not washed.

11. Avoid tight clothes, tight shoes, tight gloves—seek to make nature your ally, not your prisoner.

12. When the air is pure, breathe all of it you can—breathe deeply.

FREQUENT HEADACHES

A SURE SIGN THAT THE BLOOD IS WATERY AND IMPURE.

People with thin blood are much more subject to headaches than full blooded persons and the from of anaemia that afflicts growing girls is almost always accompanied by headaches, together with disturbance of the digestive organs.

Whenever you have constant or recurring headaches and pallor of the face, they show that the blood is thin and your efforts should be directed toward building up your blood. A fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do this effectively, and the rich, red blood made by these pills will remove the headache.

More disturbances to the health are caused by their blood than most people have any idea of. When your blood is impoverished, the nerves suffer from lack of nourishment, and you may be troubled with insomnia, neuritis, neuralgia or sciatica. Muscles subject to strain are under-nourished and you may have muscular rheumatism or lumbago. If your blood is thin and you begin to show symptoms of any of these disorders try building up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the blood is restored to its normal condition every symptom of the trouble will disappear. There are more people who owe their present state of good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than to any other medicine and most of them do not hesitate to say so.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

ONE OF LIFE'S TRAGEDIES

He was a well-meaning and optimistic pup at the floppy-footed stage that corresponding period of development when the human youth decides that the world is his oyster and all he's got to do is find a knife. After eating one hearty meal at home he wandered over to call on the cook next door and try on her the wiles of his expressive eyes. Mark, he was no longer hungry, but like most young things who discover the effectiveness of their charms, he enjoyed practising on any susceptible petticoat. And she produced a juicy scrap of meat.

He accepted it effusively. He really intended to eat it at the time, but his stomach was already too tight for comfort. So he took it out under the pine tree and lay down beside it. Presently he became interested in things beyond the fence. His wealth became a burden. He decided to bank it.

He dug a well-made hole—his very first taking unto himself all the credit, in sincere ignorance of the fact that dogs had dug since the beginning of time. He laid his treasure on the cool garth and covered it safe from flies. When he had pushed a few leaves over it with his nose, you could scarcely see any signs of the ground having been disturbed.

It was safe enough from the average thief. No reasonable person would have thought of looking there for it—but it's the totally illogical and idiotic ones who make the trouble. A silly hen, gabbling to herself after the fashion of ignoramuses, scratched away the litter and pecked at a corner of it. She pulled. Then "Oh, lawk," she shouted in her access of surprise.

The excellent quiet manners of refined people are not for nothing. They could get away with a situation of this sort; she betrayed herself. The pup turned a head over his shoulder as he ran, checked himself, and charged in a rage. Biddy Fuss and Feathers spread an agile wing and vaulted over the privet hedge, dropping her bait in mid-squawk.

It landed in a crotch. Meanwhile the pup quartered the ground with such earnestness and system that he never thought to life his head, though he worked up a fine appetite. Meanwhile the jay, who never fears trouble without coming to see the fun, found it.

In the course of ten minutes or so poor pup threw himself exhausted in the shade near that yawning vacancy which had been his treasure vault. Not until ten did he let his gaze wander beyond the end of that industrious nose. And he saw the jay tearing away at his meat with utmost enjoyment.

Did he, like the fox in the fable, philosophize? He did not. He worked himself up to such a pitch of frenzy that the gardener next door shied a rock at him. And all he got was a sore rib and a little unasked information is exchange for what he didn't want in the first place and was better off without in the last.

A little thing, yet he viewed it with the same myopia as he had sought, his morsel. It was not hunger, but the loss of this unimportant which gnawed at his vitals. To him this was one of life's tragedies. But he was only a pup—we humans are much wiser.—Hamilton Herald.

Tigers are extremely fond of bathing. In a zoo, if a tub be provided, they will eagerly make use of its facilities for ablution. They are first-rate swimmers, and in former days it was reckoned at Singapore that they "ate a Chinaman a night," swimming across from the mainland to get him.

SONGS THAT WILL LIVE

(By Leona.)

Some one has said that all the great poets have long since gone to sleep beneath the daisies. No doubt this little shaft was launched in an effort to quench the ardor of some of our present day aspirants—some of our budding Shakespeares—so to speak.

We do not like to believe that all our sweetest singers have passed on—that the fountain of pure song which shed its golden radiance over the universe, which gilded the black days of war with the light of a sustaining hope, is sealing up. It is not easy to understand how the writer could have come to hold such an opinion, excepting it be that by "great poets" he had reference to the classical composers of years ago. This being the case, he was quite correct.

Artists, like everybody else these days, seem to be in too great a hurry to perfect a great masterpiece. They are more or less infected with the rush spirit of the crowd which drew from the individual who gazed down upon a New York square for the first time the somewhat perplexed query, "Where are they all going?" Those who possess the ability for intense concentration which is necessary to genius are very few.

Again, the writer may have been comparing the compositions of the people's poets (who are really the great poets) of years ago, with some of our present day jingles. This is not only misleading but unfair to our song writers of today. Because there happens to be an over supply of the jazzy type of composition on the musical market does not necessarily indicate that there are no worth-while productions. Of course, the compositions of years ago that have braved the test of time were beautiful and inspiring. Where will you find a more sincere and unaffected expression of a natural sentiment than "A Flower From My Angel Mother's Grave"?

"In the quiet country churchyard
They laid her down to sleep,
Close beside the old home she's at rest.
And that low, sacred mound
Is enshrined within my heart
By the sweet ties of love forever blest.

In the still and silent night
I often dream of home,
And the vision tells me ever to be brave,
For the last link that binds me
To the home I love so well
Is a flower from my angel mother's grave."

Lines that are simple in themselves and yet elaborate in genuine feeling—lines that will always appeal as long as human nature is what it is. And so with all the "old favorites." But are there not many compositions of our own day that will not suffer in the least by comparison? Compositions that will measure up to and even surpass those of years ago in beauty of thought and expression? For instance, the "Long, Long Trail," that song that captivated an entire continent. That song that cheered our soldier boys when tired and lonely and hungry they trudged along beneath their burden. That song that our Canadian heroes sang as a benediction when marching into battle—when the huge guns boomed around them and rifles spat their fiery death on all sides, and many, many a brave lad passed out to the great unknown with those words on his lips,

"There's a long, long trail a winding

Into the land of my dreams,
Where the nightingale is singing
And a white moon beams;
There's a long, long night of waiting
Until our dreams will come true
Till the day when I'll be going down
That long, long trail with you.

Words that will echo down the future years ever breathing a bitter sweet memory.

No, thank the Lord, the great poets—the people's poets—are still among us.

HOW WEAK WOMEN ARE MADE STRONG

Mrs. Westmoreland Tells in the Following Letter.

Harrison, N. Y.—"When my first child was born I did not know about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and had a very hard time. I read in the newspaper about the Vegetable Compound and when my second child came I took it and was well during the whole time, and childbirth was a pleasure to me. Ever since then I have used it for any weakness and would not be without it for the world. I do all my work and am strong and healthy. I am nursing my baby, and I attribute it to the Vegetable Compound as it keeps a woman in good health. You may publish my testimonial for the good of other women if you choose to do so." Mrs. C. WESTMORELAND, Harrison, N.Y.

Women who suffer from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, headaches and nervousness should lose no time in trying this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial, and for special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management — buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

"Friend-Making Drive" Attracts Thousands.

Setting 21,000 new customers 1000 for each day in the month — as the goal to be reached through the "Great August Friend-Making Drive and exceeding this mark to reach 500 daily is one of the mid-season establishes in the record attained Blauner's, a woman's outfitting in Philadelphia during the first two weeks of their month's sale of $600,000 worth of merchandise for $750,000.

During each day of the sale the public was entertained by some feature and special inducement was offered to ask whether they bought goods or not. These features included tea dances, vocal and instrumental concerts, distribution of roses and of perfume, a baby contest, ladies' canes as presents to children, a Punch and Judy show and other novelties.

As a result there was an increase in sales of volume ranging from 50 to 110 per cent., an army of new customers and a tremendous amount of valuable publicity.

"The idea" said Miss Schaffer, advertising manager of the store, "was really to obtain new customers for our fall trade. Knowing August to be a very poor month for business generally, we decided to give trade an impetus and at the same time secure a host of customers for our regular fall business. We started by running 'teaser' advertisements in the newspapers, followed by announcements that we were to make 21,000 new friends during August by selling $600,000 worth of prefall merchandise for $350,000, thus giving the public the benefit of the saving in price. This statement which was not coupled with any prices whatever, met with a wonderful response. Our store was jammed the very first day when we made about 1700 new customers.

"The way in which we determine a new customer is this: We have the cash vouchers from last year and those for this year, and, knowing that we have been running along at the rate of 10 per cent. of business increase, everything above this percentage represents new customers. We advertised no merchandise at all, just a statement that we would hold the drive.

"The campaign was planned three months ago and it was thought advisable to have a number of special attractions. When it finally opened on the farm of a concentrated effort we ran special 'get-together' features, some day features designed to carry out the idea more of friendmaking than that of a merchandising event.

"We consider the friend-making drive a wonderful success from every angle," added Miss Schaffer. "People are thoroughly pleased both with the entertainments and the merchandise and the publicity that has been achieved will be especially valuable to use the coming fall. That was our objective anyway and we have also succeeded in filling a slow month with a remarkable volume of business. We estimate that our advertising has brought 50 per cent. of the people into the stores.

SPECIALIST SAID HE MUST OPERATE

She Took "FRUIT-A-TIVES" instead. And Is Now in Perfect Health.

MME. F. GAREAU

153 Papineau Ave., Montreal.

"For three years, I suffered great pain in the lower part of my body, with swelling or bloating. I saw a specialist, who carefully examined me and gave me several tonics to take, which did not help me. Then he told me I must undergo an operation. This, I refused to permit.

I heard about 'Fruit-a-tives' and the wonderful results it was giving because this medicine is made from fruit juices, so decided to try it.

The first box gave great relief; and I continued the treatment, taking six boxes more. Now, my health is excellent. I am free of pain and swelling - and I give 'Fruit-a-tives' my warmest thanks".

Her Idea and Energy Proved Ample Capital.

"Here are the goods you ordered. Would you be kind enough to pay for them at once?"

This was the statement which amazed the hair goods buyers at large Chicago department stores one day about ten years ago when a very young woman brought in a quantity

[illegible]

"Oh, yes, I remember ordering the goods Mrs. Delevan but we are not in the habit of making instant payment. That will have to be handled through the regular channels. Your check will reach you within ten days."

"Ten days is nine days too much" was the answer. "You see I'm running this business on very limited capital and I really need the money at once. Only in that way will I be able to meet my pay roll and deliver future orders."

By dint of a little argument and the offer of a 2 percent discount for cash, Mrs. Delevan secured her money and left the department store with a smile—for while she had admitted that her capital was limited she didn't dare say just how small it was. As a matter of fact she had precisely $5 in bank when she started and when she had paid her workers for their first week contributed $15 to the man from whom she bought her raw materials and met the expenses incident to her own living, the surplus wasn't so very far from sixty-five cents.

Little wonder, therefore, that she needed the $240 due her from the department stores.

A Strike—And An Idea.

The following Monday evening went smoothly and Mrs. Delevan had visions of building up a fairly successful business in hair goods. But on Tuesday a stunning blow fell. Her workers announced that they wanted higher wages and that they would leave unless the increase was granted. Mrs. Delevan explained that she didn't have the money to meet their demands, so everyone of them walked out.

Fortunately however, the owner of the business had been working for some time on an automatic attachment for a power sewing machine which would permit her entrance to do away with the hand work. All Tuesday night she sat up completing the details of her invention and the following morning asked permission for the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company to try out the device in their factory.

It worked, and within two days one girl operative was turning out as much work as twelve hand sewers had been able to attend to before.

The device was immediately patented and it laid the foundation for the very substantial fortune which Mr. Delevan has built up through his manufacture of hair goods. Now she does a wholesale as well as retail business and, within the last three years, has enabled America to step to the front in an industry formerly controlled by Germany—the making of wigs for dolls.

Previous to August 1914, the bulk of dolls sold throughout the world were made in Germany and their wigs were manufactured separately to be attached by the local wholesalers. When the war broke out there was a good sized over-supply of these wigs on this side of the Atlantic, but it was soon apparent that this surplus would by no means meet the demand for more than six months.

Sensing the fact that this condition presented an even larger opportunity than did the other branches of the hair-goods industry, Mrs. Delevan at once commenced to experiment with the manufacture of these minature wigs and soon turned her entire plant into a doll-wig factory. That she has gauged the situation correctly is proven by the fact that from that day to this she has never come within a year of catching up with her orders.

An Adam's Apple.

Man's badge of beauty and brains is his Adam's apple, that projection in the fore-part of the neck which has been so called from the notion that it was caused by a bit of the forbidden fruit which stuck in Adam's throat.

Scientists have many theories on the subject, and have told a long story of the evolution of the apple—how man came by long descent from ill-formed spineless things that came into life by chemical action. Then came fish, which, as soon as they got backbones, began to develop something like Adam's apples. From the primitive forms of the ancient seas are believed to have come the mammals from which sprang the human race.

It is a long story, but the fact remains that as the human race developed and became more civilized the Adam's apple in men became more prominent. The ancient Greeks depicted their strong heroes and highest types of beauty with prominent "apples," although modern artists and sculptors rather ignore it in their works. As a matter of fact, the wearing of high stocks and collars would seem to point to the fact that man is not altogether proud of displaying his badge of beauty.—Tit-Bits.

Chinese Caligraphy.

The Chinese, according to a Canton paper, recognise the extreme complexity of their written language. About twenty years ago, in the days of the Empress Dowager, a scholar and reformer named Wang Chao, who held the highest obtainable literary degree, conceived the idea of a simplified form of Chinese writing. He invented a phonetic system of symbols, which was promptly branded revolutionary and suppressed, while its "radical" author was banished. Lately, however, the idea has been reintroduced, and the Government has tried a system of the same kind, but more complicated, without much success. Two missionaries of Tsangchow have fared better in an effort to revive Wang Chao's phonetic script, which is based on the fact that, although the number of characters is vast, there are only three hundred and eighteen "word-sounds" in the Chinese language.—Family Herald.

The Reason for the Referendum Ballot

THE Government realizes that The Ontario Temperance Act is unsatisfactory, both to the great majority of the people and as well to the officials sworn to carry out its provisions.

In introducing the Referendum, Premier Hearst said: "During the past year the methods provided by The Ontario Temperance Act for dispensing such liquors as may lawfully be sold, have not proven as satisfactory as the Government would like. The Government is most anxious, as far as possible, to remedy any abuses and relieve any inconveniences that exist."

To Relieve this Totally Unsatisfactory Condition the Referendum Ballot is Provided

The Referendum Ballot gives the people of Ontario an opportunity to repeal The Ontario Temperance Act. By voting "Yes" to all four questions, the people of Ontario will enable the Government to repeal the unsatisfactory Ontario Temperance Act and enact sane, moderate legislation which will permit the general sale of non-intoxicating beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight, whilst restricting the sale of pure spirituous liquors and light wines to Government agencies.

The members of the Citizens' Liberty League and the great majority of the people of Ontario do not and will not sanction a return of the bar with the unrestricted sale of spirituous liquors. The League wishes a sane, moderate compromise to meet the reaction against a too drastic prohibitory measure which has resulted in all sorts of evasions and brought the law into contempt, thus tending to destroy our national life as sober, law-abiding citizens.

For these reasons, all fair-minded, thinking citizens will vote "Yes" to the four questions on the Referendum Ballot.

ADMITTED MEN OF MILITARY AGE

IS ADMISSION OF FATHER BOURGNE, RECTOR NO. VITIATE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 13.—Father Bourque, rector of St. Stanislausn Novitiate at Guelph, on the stand, in inquiry this morning, admitted that during the war period he had made men of military age members of the order. Those, he said, if not of military age when they entered, novitiate had become so there.

None Left the Order.

The rector also stated that under instructions from the Provincial of the order, he had exercised greatest care to see that candidates applying for admission as novices were not fit for military service, and only one man who was in the Guelph house as a novice at the time of the raid had left it between that time and the present.

Guthrie's Denial.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie denied that he had had several conversations with Rev. ennedy Palmer as to the situation at Guelph. Taking evidence was completed at the morning session, and the commissioners announced they would hear brief argument of council and deliver a finding speedily as possible.

SMOKING COSTS MORE

Three-for-a-quarter Cigars Becoming Extinct.

The three-for-a-quarter-cigar has gone the way of its deceased brother the four-for-aquarter, for a day or so anyway. Until the present stocks run out the price will remain the same, but inquiries that have been made spell out the funeral dirge of the low-priced cigar. Leading tobacconists in the city state that the manufacturers have been forced to raise prices owing to the high cost of labor and material, and that from now on "ten cents straight" will be the watchword as far as cigars are concerned. Not only are cigars affected but tobacco and cigarettes are also said to be in line for an increase in price or a decrease in weight.

Mine Produces Coal and Sand.

A mining plant that is decidedly unique is located in Ohio. Both coal and sand are taken from the one property which consists of 150 acres. The surface strata is high grade molding sand and has an average depth of about nine feet. It is deposited on a bed of shale about five feet in thickness and under this is a seam of excellent coal averaging from 4 to 5 feet. Shipments of sand already have been made to foundries throughout the country. A considerable tonnage of coal also has been mined. As the shale strata is uncovered by the removal of the sand, steam shovels will be utilized to strip the shale, thereby exposing the seam of coal which will be mined in the open. In comparatively few localities is the coal seam sufficiently near the surface to permit of stripping. The sand is mined by steam shovel and is conveyed by mine cars to a stockhouse from which it is loaded into cars by a belt conveyor. A force of nine men can load 400 tons of sand a day.—Scientific American.

CLAUSES OF LEAGUE COVENANT READ BY HON. C. J. DOHERTY PROVE THIS CONCLUSIVELY

Ottawa, Sept. 13 — The following are the clauses of the League of Nations covenant which Hon. C. J. Doherty says protect Canada's autonomy.

Clause 10: The members of the League undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League. In the case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the Council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

Clause 16: It shall be the duty of the Council to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military, naval or air force the members of the League shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League.

Article 4: Any member of the League not represented on the Council shall be invited to send a representative to Sit As a Member at any meeting of the Council during the consideration of matters specially affecting the interests of that member of the League.

By Article Five it is provided that "decisions at any meeting of the Assembly or of the Council shall require the agreement of All the members of the League, represented at the meeting."

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, billious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

COULDN'T LEAVE HOUSE FOR YEAR

HAMILTON TELLS OF HIS WIFE'S REMARKABLE IMPROVEMENT SINCE TAKING TANLAC

"Last Sunday my wife was able to be out of the house for the first time in almost a year, and she wouldn't have been out then if Tanlac had not put her on her feet," is the remarkable testimoy of William Hamilton, who resides at 149 Preston Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Mrs. Hamilton had Spanish influenza over a year ago" he continued, "and had never been able to overcome the effects of it. Her appetite was gone completely and she fell off in weight and strength until she was as frail and thin as anybody could be and still get around. Her nerves were all torn up and the least little noise would make her jump and quiver like a leaf. Many a night she has lain awake until daylight in nervous misery. She complained of dull throbing headaches and it has made me actually suffer at times to see her so weak and run down and in so much pain. Somebody else had to attend to all the housework as she could just barely creep about the house and hadn't been able to go out of doors for nearly twelve months. She was confined to the bed most of the time, and even when she would get up in hr room for a while, she really ought to have been in bed.

"It sure was a surprise to me to see her build up the way she has since she started taking Tanlac. Her appetite is just fine now why, she told me the other day that if she kept on she would eat us out of house and home. Every day she seems stronger and more like her old self and she never complains of being tired and weak and run down anymore. Last Sunday she went out for a long walk with me, for the first time she's been out of the house in nearly a year. She seems like a different person and is beginning to feel that her troubles are all over. Tanlac is the only thing that ever did her any good, and we both are happy as we can be over the way she has recovered her health since she has been taking it and we are glad to recommend it all the time."

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry, colic and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville Ont.

Long ago, when Mr. Lloyd George used to drive on his legal rounds in a high dogcart, one day he gave a lift to a little girl who was walking home from school. The child, though she was all smiles, met the future Prime Minister's merry questions and artful openings of conversation with persistent silence. "Your little girl has lost her tongue this morning, Mrs. Hughes," he said as he drew up at her parents' door. "Mary," remonstrated the mother, abashed by her daughter's bad manners, "why don't you speak and thank Mr. Lloyd George for his kindness?" "Indeed, indeed, I wanted to," she answered with the fluency of a tap suddenly turned on, "but I remembered hearing father tell you the other day that if you opened your mouth to him

COMFORT ON TRAINS IN QUEBEC AND ONTARIO WINS WARM PRAISE

The petty officers and men of H. M. S. "Renown" have expressed to the Grand Trunk Railway their keen appreciation of the manner in which their comfort was attended to on the trip to the cities in Quebec and Ontario. They were particularly impressed, they state, by the excellent way in which the Grand Trunk commissary car prepared and served the meals for the party.

Lieut. Col. G. W. Marriott, officer in charge of clearing services, has also written a letter of appreciation to the railway stating that the naval ratings will cary away with them the pleasantest of memories of their trip as a result of the kindness and courtesy received throughout the entire journey.

Relic Queerly Preserved.

A steel ladle seven inches long, supposed to have been used by Indians in melting lead for bullets many years ago, was found imbedded in the heart of a red oak tree sawed up for fire wood at South Altoona, Pa. Rings on the tree indicate it was more than one hundred years old. The ladle made of the finest charcoal steel is believed to have been driven into the tree when it was a sapling.

Reading Useless Without Action.

If you want to get value out of a book, however don't look on it as though you were a cripple. A book can't take you by sheer force and project you into a good job or put more money in your pay envelope, or make you industrious or patient when you are otherwise. All you can expect of a book is that it tells you how things can be accomplished. The rest lies with you.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

MONDAY'S DOINGS AT PETERBORO EX.

ATTRACTIONS FIRST DAY AND NIGHT GOOD AS SECOND AND THIRD

The Fair Board has arranged the finest programme of attractions, lists, and made most extensive improvements to the grounds and buildings than for any previous Exhibition held in Peterborough, and in order to accomodate the crowds that are expected, taking the previous three years as a criterion, it was found necessary to have a three full days' programme and three night performances, consequently Monday afternoon will be just as enjoyable a day at the Fair as Tuesday or Wednesday will be.

The Parade.

The Exhibition will be ushered in by a great parade of floats, decorated automobiles, horsedrawn vehicles and bicycles, starting at the Central Park at one o'clock, going down George Street to the grounds, and once round the track. You will be surprised yourself at what this feature will bring out.

Many Attractions.

The merchants' display and exhibit of cattle, horses, vegetables and everything else that combines to make an agricultural fair will be open to the public, and the grand stand attractions will all be presented the same as the following days. The band, the running races, the trotting races, judging, etc. will give as good a day's sport as you ever wanted to see.

Monday Evening.

Don't gamble with providence. It might rain on Tuesday or Wednesday nights and the evening performance on Monday will be the equal of Tuesday or Wednesday.

When you go to this year's Peterborough Exhibition you will want to go the second time, so take the first opportunity that affords itself to see it.

Go Monday to the Fair.

STUBBORN FIGHTING

In the Direction of Lalourovak Many Enemy Prisoners Taken.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Omsk, Sept. 13. — A French wireless service says the following was issued by general headquarters:

"Stubborn fighting is going on in the direction of Lalourovak, in the sector of Chima Causeway. Our forces are now engaged in offensive operations in the direction of Kourgen. We have occupied a station at Pleloukhove, and are pursuing the enemy along the railway lines along the whole front. Our troops captured a great many prisoners and an important amount of war material."

IS SUPERSTITION AND FALSE BELIEF TO OVERSHADOW FACTS ANY LONGER?

When a woman who has been sick for years becomes well after taking a certain scientific preparation, can you deny that the remedy must be good?

Read these extracts taken from a letter written to us by Mrs. H. Cross, of 307 King Street West, Toronto:—

"I suffered for several years with inflammatory Rheumatism and could hardly get up or down stairs. My husband bought me a box of Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules, and almost immediately I felt relief. The swelling started to go down and the stiffness left my knees. I might say that previously to using T.R.C.'s I had tried almost everything under the sun without success. I am a happier and wiser woman now, and I cannot thank you enough for the aid T.R.C.'s have given me."

It's the same story from hundreds of other Rheumatic sufferers. They tried T.R.C.'s and T.R.C.'s fixed them up. If you suffer, try them.

Ask your Druggist or write us for our new booklet—it's interesting and costs you nothing (Templetons, 142 King West, Toronto). We mail T.R.C.'s anywhere on receipt of $1.00.

"MY SOLDIER GIRL" AT GRAND TO-DAY

The real big success of the season among the late musical offerings is "My Soldier Girl," a musical spectacle, at the Grand this afternoon and night. Local theatregoers may feel elated that they are to see this most talked-of play even before New York or Chicago are to be favored with it, as it is making a short tour before going to the city for its run. Aside from its scenic beauty and gorgeous costumes there is an enchanting and melodious score, bewildering electrical effects, many feature novelties with a splendid cast and wonderfully clever "pony" ballet, who execute their difficult march numbers and dance ensembles fetchingly. There are more than a score of song hits.

THE GREAT BLACKSTONE MASTER MAGICIAN

AT THE GRAND, TWO NIGHTS NEXT FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

The Great Blackstone, world's master magician, and his big company, will offer the world's best production in magic, presenting one hundred new and startling illusions.

For the benefit of those who have never witnessed Blackstone's marvellous performance it will suffice to say that he is the only master magician and necromancer whose attraction is booking the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger. This is sufficient guarantee in itself as to the class and calibre of the Blackstone show.

HOTEL CLARIDGE MAKES DEBUT ON SCREEN

The Claridge Hotel, one of the best hotels in New York, whose fame as a hostelry is nation-wide, will be seen on the screen for the first time in Norma Talmadge's latest Select Picture, "The Probation Wife."

This picture calls for several scenes in a fashionable dance-restaurant; the Claridge suggested itself at once to Miss Talmadge, but the idea was pooh-poohed by her director, who had made several attempts to secure the use of this "location" in the past. But the winsome Select star put it over on all the "wiseacres"; she went down to see the Claridge manager in person, and, of course, he fell a willing victim to the persuasive powers of the famous Norma Talmadge smile and personality.

As a special tribute and mark of personal esteem for Miss Talmadge, one evening near closing time the orchestra was held over, the big retinue of waiters rushed back and forth with steaming and delectable dishes for the players, the great chandeliers were made resplendent in their full glory of brilliant bulbs, and the dancing proceeded merrily until long after the wee small hours.

And that is how the millions of film fans throughout the land, who delight in seeing every one of this star's productions, will see in "The Probation Wife," which Select Pictures offer on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand Theatre, the beautiful Claridge dining-room in all its splendor and glory, with Norma Talmadge dominating the scene.

NORMA TALMADGE STUDIOS ENLARGED

Norma Talmadge, the charming Select star who will be seen in her latest picture, "The Probation Wife," on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand Theatre, now has the largest motion picture studio in the downtown district of New York City.

The Norma Talmadge Film Productions Corporation purchased the six-storey red brick apartment building at 324 East 48th Street, adjoining the Norma Talmadge Studios at 318 East 48th street, and this apartment house has been converted into a new wing of the studios. The Norma Talmadge Studios now has a frontage of 125 feet. This purchase, with the large expense such a project must necessarily involve, is another move on Joseph M. Schenck's part which is quite in accordance with his determined policy to make Miss Talmadge's Select Pictures bigger and better productions than ever.

"The Probation Wife," Norma Talmadge's latest starring vehicle, is one of the best pictures in which she has yet been seen. Thomas Meighan is her leading man; Florence Billings, Alec B. Francis, Walter McEwen and Amelia Summerville are other important members of the cast. The star is presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

"SPORTING LIFE" AT THE ALLEN THEATRE

Maurice Tourneur, who recently launched his own producing company, the first offering of which is a magnificent picturization of "Sporting Life" a famous old Drury Lane melodrama which was all the rage twenty years ago, is widely known for his ambitious screen offerings.

Mr. Tourneur was identified with the Eclair and other French motion picture concerns for many years prior to his appearance in this country. He served as director for the World Film Company for a brief period and later joined the Paramount and Artcraft producing forces.

FEATURES AND NOVELTIES IN MY SOLDIER GIRL

Containing more than a score of novelties and elaborate scenic effects, the musical spectacle, "My Soldier Girl," the season's greatest success, at the Grand Opera House this afternoon and night, is without a doubt the most novel attraction of the entire season. The producers, Le Comte and Flesher, have spent money freely to make this play elaborate in every detail. The first act presents an evening at Col. Stone's home, Miami, Fla.; a lawn fete is in progress and a night of gayety prevails, while the last act presents a brilliant musical spectacle incurring well up to the Follies or Winter Garden in all its grandeur. The feature novelties are many, including the popular "Flirtation Walk," an illuminated run-board extending from the stage almost to the rear wall of the auditorium. The novelty presents many enjoyable features as the bewitching beauties make their way on the "walk." The girls, in novel drills and cleverly staged dances, are a treat to look upon. The aerial fight in a modern airship is one of the stirring scenes in this musical play when the captain of the girls' aviation corps is seen seated at the wheel. The famous "pony" ballet from the roof of the New York theatre is a revelation, while the cleverly selected cast is all that could be desired to make "My Soldier Girl" a success.

Mr. Tourneur produced "The Whip" based upon a celebrated old English melodrama, and he is also responsible for the "Blue Bird," a superb picturization for Artcraft of Maurice Maeterlinck's famous allegorical masterpiece. He believes that the star system is a fallacy and that a group of carefully picked screen players, each of high ability, is likely to please film fans most and tend to elevate the art. For this reason, he says, he picked for the cast of "Sporting Life" players of ability, each cut out for a distinct character type, the result being a charming performance from the standpoint of art.

That Mr. Tourneur's judgement was sound was demonstrated when "Sporting Life" was presented at the Rivoli theatre, New York. It scored one of the biggest successes of the screen year.

"Few motion picture directors equal, and few surpass, Maurice Tourneur in the art of making scenes for the screen," said the New York Times. "By this work he stands out prominently, even among the small group of exceptional men who appreciate the peculiar powers of the camera and know how to employ them in the production of a photoplay. Once more and in some ways more than ever, he has revealed his creative genius in 'Sporting Life,' the featured film at the Rivoli theatre. Mr. Tourneur has not faltered before any of the big comprehensive scenes, such as those of the prize fight and the Derby race, while in the little incidents also he has done not only the obvious and expected, but the surprising."

"The spectators were drawn into the excitement of the play's episodes applauding and exclaiming at the succession of climaxes, as people do only when they are thrilled by a sense of participation in what they see or hear. It is a remarkable picture."

"Sporting Life" will be presented for the first time in this city at the Allen Theatre for two days only, commencing Monday. There will be no advance in prices. That it will prove a superior drawing card is undoubted, and already much interest in the production is evident among the clientele of that play-house.

"I fear I must," replied the other man. "My duty calls. Yes, they will hound me. I shall bear much of peroxide blonds. I shall be asked again to name the ten greatest in history—a difficult, not to say dangerous task. But I must face the—er—music, as the vulgar expression goes. I bid you goodby, Mr. Bland. We part friends, I am sure."

He turned to Magee.

"I regret more than I can say," he continued, "parting from you. My eyes fell upon you first on entering this place. We have had exciting times together. My dear Miss Norton, knowing you has refreshed an old man's heart. I might compare you to another with yellow locks, but I leave that to my younger—er—colleagues. Mr. Cargan—goodby. My acquaintance with you I shall always look back on"—

But the mayor of Reuton, Max and Bland closed in on the old man.

"Now, look here, Doc," interrupted Cargan. "You're bluffing. Do you get me? You're trying to put something over. I don't want to be rough. I like you. But I got to get a glimpse at the inside of that satchel. And I got to examine your personal makeup a bit."

"Dear, dear!" smiled Professor Bolton. "You don't think I would steal? A man in my position? Absurd! Look through my poor luggage if you desire. You will find nothing but the usual appurtenances of travel."

He stood docilely in the middle of the floor and blinked at the group around him.

Mr. Magee waited to hear no more. Quietly and quickly he disappeared up the broad stair and tried the professor's door. It was locked. Inside he could hear a window banging back and forth in the storm. He ran through No. 7 and out upon the snow covered balcony.

CHAPTER XIX.

A Man From the Dark.

For fully five seconds Mr. Magee and the man with whom he had collided stood facing each other on the balcony. The identical moon of the summer romances now hung in the sky, and in its white glare Baldpate mountain glittered like a Christmas card.

"A lucky chance," said Mr. Ma—

"STRING BEANS" AT THE GRAND THEATRE

In his new Thomas H. Ince-Paramount photoplay, "String Beans," Charles Ray appears as the country boy who puts the schemes of a shrewd "bunco" artist from the city to naught. The idea is to raise money from the farmers to start a string bean canning factory, but it is a swindle, and Mr. Ray, as Toby Watkins, the no-account lad from the farm, upsets the whole thing and finally wins the mayor's daughter in the bargain.

Mr. Ray recently had a session with the dentist, which is the result of youthful vanity. When he was a lad he thought it would be fine to have some gold in his teeth so he discovered a couple of small cavities in two front molars. The dentist inserted bits of gold which looked fine in the eyes of the young man and were the envy of his associates. But in the pictures they looked anything but that. So Charles took advantage of his vacation to have them removed and replaced by porcelain. The Ray smile will be more than ever attractive now.

"String Beans" was directed by Scott Sidney, who is not only a clever film expert, but a musician of the highest order. He succeeded at times in infusing something of the musical quality into the scenes of his picture. "String Beans" is a country town story and Mr. Schertzinger has employed his imagination in making the various characters life-like in the extreme and giving to the action that semblance of reality that carries the audience with it and convinces the spectator to such an extent that he forgets it is merely a picture play.

"Indeed?" replied the other calmly. "May I ask what you want of me?"

"Certainly!" Mr. Magee laughed. "A little package. I think it's in your pocket at this minute. A package no bigger than a man's hand."

The stranger made no reply, but looked quickly about over his shoulder at the path along which he had come and then past Mr. Magee at the road that led to freedom.

"I think it's in your pocket," repeated Mr. Magee, "and I'm going to find out."

"I haven't time to argue with you," said the holder of the seventh key. His voice was cold, calculating, harsh. "Get out of my way and let me pass or"—

"Or what?" asked Billy Magee.

He watched the man lunge toward him in the moonlight. He saw the fist that had the night before been the Waterloo of Mr. Max and the mayor start on a swift, true course for his head. Quickly he dodged to one side and closed with his opponent.

Back and forth through the snow they ploughed, panting, grappling, straining. Mr. Magee soon realized that his adversary was no weakling. He was forced to call into play muscles he had not used in what seemed ages—not since he sported of an afternoon in a rather odorous college gymnasium. In moonlight and shadow, up and down, they reeled, staggered, stumbled, the sole jarring notes in that picture of Baldpate on a quiet winter's night.

"You queered the game last time," muttered the stranger. "But you'll never queer it again."

Mr. Magee saved his breath. Together they crashed against the side of the inn. Together they squirmed away across the balcony to the railing. Still back and forth, now in the moonlight, now in shadow, wildly they fought. Once Mr. Magee felt his foe slip from beneath him, but he saved himself in time. His strength was going—surely—quickly. Then suddenly his opponent seemed to weaken in his grip. With a supreme effort Magee forced him down upon the balcony floor and tumbled on top of him. He felt the chill of the snow under his knees and its wetness in his cuffs.

"Now!" he cried to himself.

The other still struggled desperately. But his struggle was without success, for deftly Billy Magee drew from his pocket the precious package about which there had been so much debate on Baldpate mountain. He clasped it close, rose and ran. In another second he was inside No. 7 and had lighted a candle at the blazing logs.

Once more he examined that closely packed little bundle; once more he found it rich in greenbacks. Assuredly it was the greatly desired thing he had fought for the night before. He had it again. And this time, he told himself, he would not lose sight of it until he had placed it in the hands of the girl of the station.

The dark shadow of the man he had just robbed was hovering at his windows. Magee turned hastily to the door. As he did so it opened and Hayden entered. He carried a pistol in his hand; his face was hard, cruel, determined; his usually expressionless eyes lighted with pleasure as they fell on the package in Mr. Magee's possession.

"It seems I'm just in time," he said, "to prevent highway robbery."

"You think so?" asked Magee.

"See here, young man," remarked Hayden, glancing nervously over his shoulder. "I can't waste any time in talk. Does that money belong to you? No. Well, it does belong to me. I'm going to have it. Don't think I'm afraid to shoot to get it. The law permits a man to fire on the thief who tries to fleece him."

"The law, did you say?" laughed Billy Magee. "I wouldn't drag the law into this if I were you, Mr. Hayden. I'm sure it has no connection with events on Baldpate mountain. You would be the last to want its attention to be directed here. I've got this money and I'm going to keep it."

"You're right," he said. "I'm not going to shoot. But there are other ways, you whippersnapper"— He dropped the revolver into his pocket and sprang forward. For the second time within ten minutes Mr. Magee steadied himself for conflict.

But Hayden stopped. Some one had entered the room through the window behind Magee. In the dim light of the candle Magee saw Hayden's face go white, his lips twitch, his eyes glaze with horrible surprise. His arms fell limply to his sides.

"Good God, Kendrick!" he cried.

The voice of the man with whom Billy Magee had but a moment before struggled on the balcony answered:

"Yes, Hayden. I'm back."

Hayden wet his lips with his tongue.

"What—what brought you?" he asked, his voice trailing off weakly on the last word.

"What brought me?" Suddenly, as from a volcano that had long been cold, fire blazed up in Kendrick's eyes. "If a man knew the road from hell back home what would it need to bring him back?"

U. S. GOLF TEAM TRIM CANADIANS

KANUCK BOYS INCLUDING E.M. DELAFOSSE AND F.M. HAMILTON BADLY BEATEN.

New York, Sept. 13.—In spite of the magnificent playing of George S. Lyon, the Canadian captain and doughty veteran of the links, the sturdy "youngsters" from the States brought the Canada team trophy and the Duke of Devonshire's Cup back to the U.S.A. today over the Apawamis course, winning by the decisive count of 21 to 7.

The international match was played with teams of fifteen men, all playing singles, with scoring on the Nassau system of a point for each nine holes and a point for the match. In the last contest played between these teams the Canadians ran off with the trophy, so yesterday's victory was doubly sweet to the winners.

Lyon Again the Star.

George Lyon was the bright particular star of the heavy going today. Three score and one years have no terrors for this famous all-round ex-athlete and he has been holing long putts since "Chick" Evans and Francis Ouimet were wrapped in swaddling clothes. Nothing would content him today except breaking 80, and he did it with a fine 79. When it is considered that the recent rains have made the fair greens heavy, this is a creditable score for the low handicap stars forty years his junior.

Lyon was drawn against William Clark of Misquamicut, who bids fair to be the reigning senior champion of the year with his low total of 169 for the thirty-six-score journey. Clark played well, getting an 87, but he was not up to the mark set by Lyon.

Five Fours in a Row.

The Canadian veteran started with five fours in a row, to the end of which he affixed a neat 3. Two 5's at this point and a 7 on the long fourth, gave him 40 for the outward journey, and a fast inward jaunt of 39 made up his 79. On the 107-yard seventeenth he was just five yards short of the green in two strokes. That is just an indication of the weight and muscle he was putting behind his shots. He was 5 up at the turn in his match against Clark, and won, old style counting, 5 and 4. His card:

FINAL GAME OF SEASON TODAY

THE OLD RIVALS, BELLEVILLE AND PETERBOROUGH AGAIN FACE EACH OTHER.

LAST AND BEST GAME OF SEASON

BELLEVILLE IN HIGH METTLE FOR PLAY-OFF WITH TORONTO LOCALS DETERMINED TO WIPE OUT DEFEATS.

The ball game today will in all probability be the last of the season. Goyer Mills and company are coming in full force and first rate condition. Goyer will again try to hand them up for the Petes who are determined to lean on his curves as they have never succeeded to do before. Of one thing we are assured and that is that both teams will be in full strength and determined to gain the victory over their rival.

The Belleville crew will be in especially high mettle as they are preparing for their play-off with the city champions of Toronto, but this is not discouraging the locals as they claim they can wipe out their defeats of the early season by trimming the Bay of Quinte boys good and proudly.

A very large crowd will be on hand and any baseball fan who misses to see the old rivals will be disappointed when he hears others talking about the game.

Mirror History.

In the early part of the sixteenth century mirrors first became articles of household furniture and decoration. Previous to that time—from the twelfth to the end of the fifteenth century—pocket mirrors or small hand mirrors, carried at the girdle, were adjuncts to ladies' toilettes. The pocket mirrors consisted of small circular plaques of polished metal fixed in a shallow circular box covered with a lid.

First Time Reckoning.

Perhaps the first reference to attempts to reckon time by mechanical means is found in Isaiah xxxviii, 8, written supposedly about 713 B. C., "the sun dial of Ahaz." Pliny says that Anaximander invented a sun dial about 550 B. C. The first sun dial at Rome was placed in the temple of Quirinus, about 298 B. C., when time was divided into hours. The clepsydra, or water clock, was the next time recorder invented.

Modern Greek Language.

The language spoken by the educated classes, that used in the newspapers and other modern literature of Greece, differs from the Romaic used by the lower classes. The former is distinguished by a greater resemblance to the Greek of antiquity, which renders it easy for anyone who has a satisfactory acquaintance with ancient Greek to read the literary Greek of the present day.

AN ISLAND OF TRAGEDY

Java Is Constantly Rocked by Earthquakes

Official advices received report that the recent eruption of the Klot (or Kalut) volcano in Java cost 40,000 native lives, destroyed 20,000 acres of crops, principally rice, by means of hot mud, and did millions of dollars' damage by the falling ashes in regions outside of the devasted districts.

Volcano made in the first place, and constantly being remade by them, Java has more volcanoes than any area of its size in the world. Estimates of the active and extinct craters range from 100 to 150. Everywhere in Java, in the huge crater lakes, in fissures that now are river beds, even in ancient temples, half-finished when interrupted by some fiery convulsion, are evidences of cataclysmic forces—such turbulent forces as now are in continuous hysteria in the Valley of the Ten Thousand Smokes in Alaska and break their crusted surface cage intermittently in Java.

The "treacherous Klot," as the natives call it, all but wiped out the town of Britar, but even its devastation, as reported, was mild compared to the violent upheaval of Krakatoa in 1883. Then Mother Nature turned anarchist and planted a Gargantuan infernal machine on the doorstep of Java. Krakatoa is a little island in the Sunda Strait, between Sumatra and Java. Australians, as far from the explosion as New York is from El Paso, heard the terrific detonation, more than half the island was blotted out, parts of it were flung aloft four times as high as the world's highest mountain, and to touch bottom below the water's surface, where most of the islands had been, henceforth required a plumb line twice as long as the height of the Washington Monument. Skyscraper waves flooded adjacent islands and rolled half way around the earth. Every human ear drum heard, though it may not have registered, the air waves as they vibrated three or four times around the earth.

Krakatoa levied a smaller toll in human life than Klot because of its isolation, and many of the 35,000 deaths from Krakatoa's eruption were at far distant points by drowning.

An eruption anywhere on the island means disaster. For Java, about equal in area to New York state, supports a population greater than the combined population of the empire state and the four other most popular states in the union — Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and Texas.

Naturally the native religion is fatalistic. A free translation of an inscription on an old tomb runs:

"What is the use of living, of kissing lovely flowers,
If, though they are beautiful, they must soon fade into nothing!"

In the native folklore are innumerable stories of the earth opening up to swallow a dancing girl. Such tales betoken another physical feature of the island fraught with human tragedy. Not only has its steaming vents, spout-geysers, sulphur lakes, but great chasms open and close, and they have been known to swallow villages.

TORONTO SCHOOL FOR LIBRARIANS

ADDRESSED BY HON. DR. CODY MINISTER OF EDUCATION

The school in Toronto for the professional training of librarians, was addressed at its opening by the Hon. Dr. Cody, Minister of Education, during the afternoon session. The Minister declared that the public library is a great popular university extension movement. A modern library is not merely to be a receptacle for books, but a means of circulating books, and is an integral part of public education. He stated that no system of education is complete that does not take into account opportunities for the adult population—for those who are not taking formal school training. "There are two kinds of education," said Dr. Cody, "that which is given to a person and that which he attains himself, the latter being the kind that counts most of all. The library is an institution for the encouragement of self-culture and self help, and the advancement of the library cause deserves every commendation. The Minister spoke of the value of professional training in librarianship as being the most important contribution to library efficiency.

A Large Class.

The class is a very large one, forty-four being present; two from the City of Halifax, and the remainder from the Province of Ontario. Students are present from Kenora on the west, and Ottawa on the east. Places of all sizes are represented, from the little village of Harrow to the city of Toronto; twenty of the students are receiving training in order to qualify for positions in the Toronto public library.

Five different types of libraries are represented; thirty-seven of the students are to be engaged in public library work, twenty different public libraries have sent students to the school; there are three normal school librarians in attendance, two university librarians; one representing a social service house; and one the technical library at the Mines Branch, Ottawa.

Standing Is High.

The educational standing of the students is exceptionally high. All have matriculation or something higher; seven of the students are trained teachers, and there are nine university graduates attending.

Specialists are acting as instructors in each branch of library study, and in addition to the regular instructors several special lecturers will be heard during the course which covers a period of three months.

Mr. George H. Locke, chief librarian of the Toronto public library, is assisting Mr. W. O. Carson, Inspector of public libraries, director of the school, by furnishing practicing facilities for the students.

CHANGE IN BOAT TIME. The morning boat from the Lake to Lakefield will be discontinued after Sept. 13.

NATIONAL DIFFICULTIES CALL FOR MORE WORK AND NOT LESS

Canon Davidson discussed certain interesting features of work in his sermon at at St. John's in connection with Labor Day.

He showed that work was in its nature a good thing for man and should not be treated as a necessary evil or something to be done only on compulsion. God was Himself a worker, evidencing this in the life of Jesus Christ. Our own experience, moreover, teaches us that work is good. Without it man would become soft, flabby and a prey to many temptations. Avoid of course, over-work. Life was not intended to be a treadmill, but avoid also under-work, the doing less than our physical powers will allow. The speaker was thankful that he had been brought up to work hard, as should be the case with all children. He had done rough work of many kinds, and experienced the satisfaction of it as well as the comradeship realized with other workers.

A National Call.

But whatever our ideas might be, our country was today loudly calling all Canadians to work more and not less. Our vast national debt, amounting to over $250 on every man, woman and child in Canada, was still increasing by leaps and bounds. The balance of trade was also heavily against us, involving constant financial loss. The only means of righting these huge national difficulties lay in far more work being done, especially of a productive nature, by all citizens. During the war extra exertions and sacrifices had been made by the whole body of our people with striking results. Weighed down by the debts of war, was this the time to be fixing our attention on increased leisure and ease? The speaker had admired the patriotic answer of a workingman whom he was urging to take a needed holiday. "I cannot take the time while my country is in this shape; it is up to me to work more and not less than in former years."

Work a Religious Act.

Canon Davidson went on to urge that ordinary work should be made a religious act, whether on the farm, in the factory or in the kitchen. Each one has been given a share by the Almighty in the great sum of the world's work, and "we should do it heartily as unto the Lord." The Church was in close relationship with the workshop, the office, the household and the farm. From the real work of hearty united worship in the Church we may naturally pass to other kinds of Divine service in the workshop and other departments of labor.

Work was not only to be done heartily, but also well, in the best possible fashion.

Good skilful work should be and perhaps was encouraged by Labor unions, as well as good wages.

Lastly, it was to be noted that work however valuable, was not the most important thing in life. Being was a more important thing than doing, character than work. But conscientious doing should help the being, and good steady work should do much to mould a good man or woman.

No doubt some kinds of work had less interest and training value, and all work tended to the monotonous and dull at times. Still we should take heart and carry through our contribution to the great whole.

For the sake of ourselves, our country and our God, let us set ourselves to do in a religious spirit good, useful and faithful work.

WEALTH OF STYLE AT TURNBULL'S

AUTUMN SHOWING SHOWS COMMENDABLE TASTE AND ADVANTAGEOUS BUYING

J. C. Turnbull's display of full millinery, coats, suits, skirts, dresses and waists is one which demonstrates commendable selection and advantageous buying. This autumn showing at this big store present a more varied and complete assortment of styles, materials and colors than seen in many years—something to suit every individual taste is here.

The millinery offering is especially attractive, with headwear suitable for the most particular and exclusive fancy. Among hundreds of models the helmet shape, perhaps, stands out most conspicuous. This has an arresting stylish appearance with a measure of substantiality and beauty. It is of violet metallic shale is acceptably natty, and almost irresistible to the lady of good taste and style. Then there are hats in large, black drooping design in different shades, which are so very becoming to many people. There is also the bright turban in red and black which is becomingly embellished with a veil of black and red adding much to its beauty and elegance. Most suitable of all to the more elderly lady are the quiet shapes and lines such as the seal brown plush with dainty pink flowers and midnight blue facing. Then comes the girl shape in satin and velvet, daintily trimmed with French roses.

But the favorite headwear this season is apparently the poke shape bonnet effect with shades of hanna and dark red.

In coats the browns and blues have the preference although many other rich substantial colors shown will undoubtedly become very popular. One of green broadcloth with full collar and cuffs, full back, wide deep arm holes and shoe-string belt. Those of the reindeer shade, with pleated backs and shoe-string belts, will without doubt find a ready sale as their appearance is particularly attractive, and the texture exceptionally good.

As to suits, although they are in all shades and hues, they vary only slightly in styles, the tailored back, shoe-lace string belt, slip pockets and convertable collar having the predominance. Probably the most attractive, and what is bound to be very popular, are those in silver tone and plane velour.

The dresses displayed by the Turnbull Company are especially beautiful, and desirable. The styles are principally in straight line effects with long waists. Some of the more expensive dresses are trimmed with handsome embroidery and neat, becoming tucks. The necks are both round and V shaped. The popular materials are serges, tricolletts, tricotines, satins and crepe-de-chine.

This big store abounds in a charming collection of new plaid skirts showing real art creation in style and pattern. They have fancy and plain pockets and come in pleated and plain models with approved belts. Besides the shopper will find an abundance of charmingly rich skirts for woman or miss in silk tricollett and serge.

An inspection of this autumn display at the J. C. Turnbull Company's store will reveal a wealth of fashions in sufficient variety to please all comers. It is a showing of styles, colors, patterns and textures, in ladies' fall needs which will make a visit really worth while.

DID BOLSHEVIKI GOVERNMENT MAKE FAVORABLE PEACE OFFERS FEB. LAST?

William Bullit, Formerly a Newspaper Correspondent, Declares That Such was the Case, but Pesident Wilson Did Not Agree to Publishing of Terms—Lloyd George Denied Knowledge of Incident in Parliament

London, Sept. 15.—With the exception of two or three anti-government newspapers, London journals give scant attention this morning to the evidence given by William C. Bullitt before the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate.

Accepts Story As True.

The Daily News gives great prominence to the story, and in its editorial comment accepts Mr. Bullitt's story as a true account of what happened at Paris and other cities, and Premier Lloyd George's statement before the House of Commons April 16, hen he virtually denied knowledge of Mr. Bullitt's mission to Russia.

Devastating Effect.

The Herald, Labor organ, gives similar prominence to the story, and in its comment says: "Mr. Bullitt's blunt facts will have a devastating effect," adding that "if Mr. Lloyd George cannot clear himself from the charges made by Mr. Bullitt he must resign."

Sent To Petrograd.

In his testimony last Friday before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, William Bullitt, of Philadelphia, formerly a newspaper correspondent, who went to Paris with President Wilson's party, said that in February last he was sent by Secretary Lansing to Petrograd to bring back from the soviet leaders a statement showing the exact terms on which they would agree to peace.

Wanted It Printed.

This report, which represented the Bolsheviki as making favorable peace offers, was never made public, Bullitt said, because the President would not agree. Lloyd George wanted it printed, he said, yet later the Premier denied all knowledge of it when questioned in Parliament.

AUSTRIA IS DRIFTING TOWARD INTERNAL CHAOTIC CONDITIONS

People Do Not Sternly Face Situation—a Demoralized, Spiritless, Irresolute Generation Walking Streets and Seeking Only Pleasure—Decrease in Value of Money

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Vienna, Sept. 15.—Austria continues to drift toward an internal situation approaching the chaotic, and leading men and newspapers are beginning to voice apprehension as to what may follow unless a strong central government can weld the country into a more harmonious national whole.

All Against Vienna.

At the present time it is apparent that each region or district is for itself and that all of them are against Vienna. At the bottom, seemingly, lie two principal factors, continued decrease in the value of the crown and the fear of famine. The central government thus far seems to have been unable to cope with either.

Demoralized People.

The Neue Tag says that instead of the people sternly facing the situation in which they find themselves, "we find a demoralized, spiritless irresolute generation walking our streets seeking nothing but pleasure, and only to outward appearance are we an organized state."

STARTLING FACTS DISCLOSED AT POLICE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Hamilnon the Former Proprietor of King George Hotel Tells Some Interesting Liquor Transactions.

The investigation into the charges against Detective Newhall and certain other members of the police was reopened this morning at the court house at 10 o'clock. Mr. Daniel O'Connell appeared on behalf of Mr. Stewart, Mr. R. R. Hall on behalf of Mr. Newhall and Mr. S. N. Gordon on behalf of Mr. Sullivan whose interests are concerned in the case.

His Honor Judge Huycke, their worships Magistrate Dumble and Mayor Duncan, appeared to investigate the charges. Mr. Widdifield is conducting the investigation on behalf of the Board of Commissioners.

The first witness called was Miss Edna Hohe, stenographer for the Board of License Commission, who stated she remembered statements being made by Mr. Hamilton in the presence of Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Stewart, licensed commissioner for Peterborough. She identified the statement as that made by Mr. Hamilton. The statements had not been signed and were not sworn to.

Replying to questioning by Mr. Hall the witness swore that neither Mr. Stewart nor Mr. Saunders had given any suggestions to Mr. Hamilton during the dictation.

The next person to enter the witness box was W. J. Hamilton, who before the 17th of June last, had been living in Peterborough, working for his father, proprietor of the King George Hotel, had become proprietor in April 1917. His application for a license for 1919 was refused by the Board of License Commissioners. He had been convicted for a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act in February 1918, and understood that his license was in the hands of Mr. Stewart, but was not handed on to him because he could not vouchsafe for some statements that Mr. Stewart wished him to make concerning liquor being brought to Kendry station. He told Mr. Stewart that he heard the liquor belonged to Mr. Roy Sullivan but of the truth of this he was not sure. Mr. Stewart asked him if he heard around the town talk of Blade going to give Sullivan police protection. He replied that Sullivan had told him that Mr. Newhall had promised him police protection for stealing some whiskey.

Promised License Back.

In a conversation with Mr. Stewart, he had been promised that if he stood behind these statements he would receive his license back. He was ordered to take Mr. Stewart with him to Toronto by the order of Mr. Flavell, to make a personal application for his license. On the way to Toronto he talked over the substance of the statement with Mr. Stewart. On arrival at the Parliament buildings, he was put on the carpet before Messrs. Flavell, Dingmore and Stewart, where he was informed that within eight days he would know if he were to get his license back or not. Then he went into Mr. Saunders' office and gave the statement as he had heard it from Mr. Sullivan, to a stenographer who took it down in shorthand. He identified the statement read in court as the one he had made. The information in the statement had mostly been heard from Mr. Sullivan.

On cross-examination by Mr. O'Connell he stated that he had received a phone call that there was whiskey at Kendry the day before it was seized. He had enkaged George Evans to go with him in the morning, to see the matter through. He understood another party was to get half the whiskey and he was to get the other half, but after the whiskey had been seized, the other party had told him he had heard nothing of the matter. He got to Kendry that morning about 8 o'clock and saw constable Moore with the whiskey. On seeing Moore, he climbed over the seat and covered himself with a robe and proceeded about one hundred yards, when he came out and was held up by Mr. Stewart.

Concerning the matter embodied in the statement, he stated that Sullivan wanted him to form one of a party, to steal some whiskey at Moore's house, and promised police protection. He swore he did not tell Stewart that another party besides Sullivan came and asked him to form one of the party to steal the whiskey.

On another occasion he went with Sullivan to Indian River to get whiskey. He never went to Kendry to get whiskey with Sullivan.

Case of Doubled Dressing

On one occasion some whiskey was meant to some to him for Sullivan. Gerald Dunsford was bringing it to Peterborough for him but he got news that Dunford was going to sell the whiskey to some other party so he went to Dunsford and informed him that the police were waiting for him and in that way induced him to hide the stuff in the bushes. He later sent a couple of men to change the hiding place of the whiskey. Sullivan came to him (Hamilton) and accused him of stealing the whiskey. As he had been endeavoring to save the whiskey for Sullivan this angered him and he decided that he would appropriate it. When he returned to the hiding place, however, the whiskey had gone and he surmised that Dunsford and Sullivan must have taken it.

Did Not Believe in Police Protection.

In answer to questions of Mr O'Connell, Hamilton said that he had told Sullivan that he did not believe he could get police protection to steal the whiskey from Constable Moore's house, but if he could, he would form one of the party.

When asked if he had ever approached detective Newhall concerning gaining protection at any time he stated that he had never, because he was afraid to. If he had had police protection he would certainly not have been fined $500 on the occasion of his conviction last February.

Mr. Hall's crown examination was adjourned until two o'clock.

DECORATED PARADE A GRAND SUCCESS

BURSTS OF APPLAUSE GREET EXHIBITION'S CALITHUMPIAN FEATURE TODAY.

Promptly at 1:15 the parade of floats and decorated automobiles, headed by the 57th Band, left Central Park and made its way down George street to the Exhibition Park. Many were the bursts of applause from the spectators who lined the streets as these floats passed. The Cressman Company had a most gorgeous representation of peace, their new truck being decorated by a masterhand. A large atlas of the world resting on a bed of white with a dove of peace floating above, and on a raised seat at the back a young girl with reins in her hands, who was supposed to be driving the chariot.

Barries Limited had a float made up of raw and dressed furs which was very well arranged. The De Laval Company's float showed one of their cream separators in action. Miller, Powell & Watson showed a complete electric kitchen. The Duffus Garage had a Fordson tractor drawing a gang plow, and the International Harvester Company showed one of their tractors driven by a young lady, and on a trailer was a gasoline engine driving some other farm machinery. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. had a float on which was a miniature representation of their huge head office building in New York. Oak Hall Co. were on hand with a gaily decorated wagon on which was a number of their sample suits for men. Bellegham's furniture was shown from one of their trucks suitably decorated. The J. M. Greene Music Co. provided music from one of their player pianos and also from a large Victrola which were carried on a handsomely decorated float. White Bros. had a splendidly decorated bicycle and showed what can be done in the way of decorating these vehicles.

The G. W. V. A. had a float upon which was shown a German soldier under guard of half a dozen Canadian soldiers with fixed bayonets.

Besides the decorated floats and automobiles there were fleets of milk wagons, bakers' wagons and private cars, all nicely decorated.

WARNING TO TAXI DRIVERS

Must Not Stand on Street to Solicit customers—Advised to Petition Council.

The police hereby issue a warning to taxi drivers that they are not allowed to stand their cars along the street and solicit customers. They have been accustomed, on holidays especially, of lining up on both sides of the corner of Charlotte and George streets and have caused considerable disorder to the traffic. If the taxi drivers wish a public stand where they may solicit customers, we would suggest that they petition the City Council for one, but anyone found standing on the streets, on holidays or at any other time, doing so, will be summoned and probably fined.

SPECTACULAR OIL FIRE YET BURNING

THIRTY-SIX TANKS DESTRIYED DAMAGE $2,000,000.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Sept 15.—The spectacular oil fire, which, since Saturday afternoon has raged at the plant of the Stone & Fleming Company, in Long Island city, with injury to more than fifty persons, was gradually burning itself out today.

Blaze Under Control.

Although officials of the fire department said the blaze was well under control, it still was burning briskly and promised to continue for two or three days until thousands of gallons of oil in the path of the flames have been consumed.

It is believed that thirty-six tanks have been destroyed, and property damage will be more than two million dollars, about five hundred thousand of this sum being represented by oil consumed in the fire.

LAWN BOWLING.

Frank Clark Trophy Won by Mayneord and McLean.

The trophy presented by Mr. F. Clark for competition between members of the local club was won by J. W. Mayneord and Carl McLean, who defeated T. C. Elliot and J. F. Convery in the final on Friday night. The game was very keenly contested, it being necessary to play an extra end before a decision was arrived at.

Mayneord got away to a good start and at one time was leading by eleven points to one. Elliot, however, played a very consistent game and overcame the lead; in fact, on going to play the last end he had two points to the good. Mayneord scored two on this end and tied up the score, eventually winning out in the extra end by two points, 16-14

To reach the finals Mayneord met and defeated G. F. Cairns, H. McCusker and R. Elliot while Elliot defeated W. J. Oke, D. H. Moore and Dr. Hammond.

PRINCE ACCLAIMED AT CALGARY ALTA.

Calgary, Alta, Sept. 15.—Calgary's thousands made no pretense of preserving the usual Sunday calm when they first glimpsed their boy prince as he stepped from the railway station to attend divine service on his arival here from Edmonton, yesterday morning.

At the big Protestant cathedral, the for faile nmembers of the Anglican Prince unveiled a memorial screen denomination in this district. The Prince was the guest of the Golf Club at an informal luncheon. In the evening he was a guest of the Ranchman's Club at a stag dinned.

WOMEN CANDIDATES

Guelph, Sept. 15 — (Special) — Strong efforts are aireany being made to secure women candidates for the Guelph Board of Education for next year, and when the January elections roll around it is expected that some seven or eight women will be in the field for positions on the board. At the present time Mrs C. R. Crowe is the only candidate.

ST. KITS NOMINATION.

St. Catharines, Sept. 15 — The Conservatives of St. Catharines riding yesterday afternoon nominated F. R. Parnell, the present member, a wholesale grocer here, as their candidate for the Legislature. He had announced the previous week that for business reasons he would not again be a candidate, but yesterday he agreed to run providing he had no opposition in the convention. E. C. Graves and C. H. Claus, who were also nominated, both withdrew in his favor. Mr. Parnell hinted that the general elections were near, and that it would be a quick, sharp, decisive campaign

The challenge of J. Jordan, local lightweight boxer, has been accepted by a Buffalo man in Jordan's class. The Buffalo sport ahs contested many good bouts, and Jordan promises a battle worth while. This will be one of the preliminaries at the skating rink on Thursday night, September 18th.

INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE OPENED THIS MORNING BY MINISTER OF LABOR

Sir Robert Ill, Sends Long Message, Giving Survey of Pre-War Conditions

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept 15—The great Industrial Conference, organized as a result of recommendations made by the Royal Commission, which travelled throughout the Dominion and made a study of industrial conditions opened this morning in the Senate chamber.

Notables Present

The conference was formally opened by the Minister of Labor, with several cabinet ministers and other notable public personages present.

Sir Robert Not Present.

Sir Robert Borden was unable to be present, owing to illness, but in calling the meeting to order, Senator Robertson read a long message from the Prime Minister giving a comprehensive survey on after war conditions.

Addressed Conference.

Hon. A. L. Sinton, Hon N. W. Rowell and Hon. MacKenzie King also addressed the conference.

NO GRATUITY FOR CANADA'S VETERANS

ADMINISTRATION WILL NEITHER GRANT THE DEMANDS NOR BE INTIMIDATED

Ottawa, Sept. 15 — The Returned Soldiers' Gratuity League endeavored to see Sir Robert Borden Saturday afternoon, but as he is confined to his room by illness he referred them to the cabinet. The cabinet was in session at the time and received the delegation in the privy council chamber. Sergt. Flynn presented the case on behalf of the veterans in connection with the gratuity of $2000. Hon. C. J. Doherty, minister of justice, replied on behalf of the Government. He said that the condition of the country was such that the Government could not entertain the demands and added that the Government had carefully considered the question and could not be intimated. The veterans are returning to Toronto greatly disappointed, but again will present their claim to the special committee of the House of Commons to be appointed next week.

PETERBORO EXHIBITION OPENS UNDER FAVORABLE AUSPICES

Excellently Varied Exhibits and Splendid Special Attractions.

Peterborough Exhibition opened today under the most promising auspices. Large crowds, splendid exhibits, feats of daring and skill, two airplanes, one a genune German Fok, improved grounds and conveniences, all made for congratulations to the directors in preparation for the best exhibit ever in this growing city.

Running races, prohibited in the latter years of the war, and only just recently revived, gave an attraction quite new in the history of our Fair, and speedy trotters offered arresting contests.

Death Defiers.

Bonnette Bros., death defiers, made a thrilling balloon ascencion with human bomb, showing a slide for life from balloon to ground by means of a 500-foot cable, which gave the spectators a few tense breath-holding moments.

Daylight fireworks, quite a novel feature, should be missed by none.

Vaudeville acts on the open stage facing the grand stand afford amusement for all, old and young, and leave a pleasing impression of wonder at the human skill displayed.

There are two bands, that of the G. W. V. A. and the 57th Regt., so that acceptable music is continuous.

Thrilling Air Stunts.

Of course, it goes without saying that thrilling air stunts by Capt Salter, twice decorated by the French Government for service, and Lieut Dallin, who also saw distinguished service overseas, are features more than worth while a visit to the Ex.

Speed Program.

The speed program provided by the amusement committee for the Peterborough fair promises to be the best in its history. Never before were so many high class animals located at the Fair grounds for both harness and running events, the accommodation on the grounds being taxed to capacity with high class animals. The running events for the thoroughbreds, which will be a feature of the card each day, have at least six starters.

The conditions for the first running event today call for three-year-olds and up to go four and one-half furlongs of two heats, and with such horses as Old Pop, Little Pete and Ella Jennings included among the number, a stirring contest is assured. The remaining three contestants are Mike Carlin, Waska and Hemisphere, the former being a particularly speedy horse at this distance. Jockey Kelly will have the mount on Old Pop; Chappell will ride Little Pete, and H. Gibson Ella Jennings, and this trio seem to be most favored.

The event for the runners tomorrow will be over the five-furlong course and will also bring together an evenly-matched field. Thomas G., John Thompson, Mone G., Hemisphere, Waska and Mike Carlin will be among the contestants.

Among today's arrivals was Jockey M. Fallon, who has just arrived from Lexington, Ky., where he has been riding with a fair measure of success. He will have a mount each day in the running events during the Fair. Another arrival from Ottawa was the well known driver, W. Collins, with J. Payette's string of five trotters and pacers for the harness events. Mr. Collins has campaigned many high class horses in this country, and included in his present string are several promising animals new to racing admirers here.

Be There Tonight.

The afternoon program, excepting the races, will be repeated tonight under electric illumination. Take advantage of it.

OCT. 13 THANKSGIVING

Ottawa, Sept. 15—Monday, October 13 been proclaimed Thanksgiving Day for Canada

GREAT RUNNING HORSE AT THE EX.

One of the horses running at the Exhibition grounds, during the Fair, is a beautiful, quiet-dispositioned five year-old, "Old Pop" owned by C. A. Trew, of Toronto.

"Martimus," now dead, was at that time the property of Wiliam Hendrie of Hamilton

"Old Pop" has a great record as a runner. He won six races as a two-year-old; four when three years old; none in his fourth year, running being then barred for the remainder of the war, and is racing at the Exhibition grounds now for the first time as a five-year-old.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

MONDAY, SEPT. 15, 1919

MORE TRADE AND MORE WORK.

CANON DAVIDSON of St. John's Church, in a sermon on Labor, said Canada needs more work and not less. The reverend gentleman is quite correct, but, not to enter into an eight-hour day discussion, the need is for more work for more men than present opportunities afford. Expand, reach out for trade abroad that will call for increased industry at home.

The De Laval Comany, in our own city, did so, and has secured business with England, France, South Africa, Argentina (South America), and even form India. This is the sort of enterprise we need today, an expansive one, which will win for Canada the greater amount of work for the greater number. This country needs its own or borrowed capital applied to the exploitation of its own resources. Canada has not suffered the ravages of war, but it has been somewhat somnolent in the matter of exploitation. Boards of Trade, municipalities and governments, and the Labor party should direct their attention to this end. More work by more workers of British citizenship, more capital invested, an awakened policy of trade expansion, lies open to Canada, if time is taken by the forelock. Canada's armies in the great war have advertised Canada as a land so glorious as possible, perhaps by no other means. Let the powers that be, in finance, in industry, in commerce, aye, even in Labor, see to it that that advertising is not thrown away.

CARDINAL MERCIER'S VISIT.

CARDINAL MERCIER'S arrival in the United States brings to this country one of the most remarkable figures of the war. His was a leading part, says the Chicago Daily News, not in the physical contest of arms, but in that great struggle of spirit against spirit, of morale against morale, that the German strategists recognized in the beginning as likely to prove decisive. And he did his part under extraordinary conditions. Others fought their fight against the enemy from opposing lines. He waged his contest with the invaders of his country while within their power and subject to their regulations. Unequal as these conditions seemed, he emerged from the contest victorious through the impregnable moral force of his position his indomitable patriotism, his unconquerable optimism, and his absolute confidence in the ultimate triumph of right.

Not all the difficulties of his position could bring him to a single concession of principle, the least abatement of his unflinching courage. His pastoral letters, issued from time to time and usually the signals for official remonstrance and interference, are great documents of pure patriotism, aside from their religious character as the messages of the pastor to his flock. In them he solemnly affirmed that the invaders had no right to the people's esteem, attachment or obedience, and that "the sole legal power in Belgium is that which is derived from our king, our government and the representatives of the nation." In them he bore testimony to his absolute confidence in the final victory. In them he gave sage, practical counsels, suited to the situation and calculated to restrain useless outbreaks and to sustain the soul of the nation in the midst of its unparalleled misery and martyrdom.

The war ended, Cardinal Mercier immediately concerned himself with the reconstruction of his stricken country. In a statement issued several months ago he pointed out how America could aid Belgium by providing new materials, and credit. He declared that what Belgium now needs is no longer charity but the chance to work. But the thoughts of Americans on the occasion of his visit will naturally dwell on his earlier and more glorious service of his country. They may well feel that the great lesson of that service is one that applies not to Belgium alone but to every nation in the world in these times of change and uncertainty: "As long as the patriot soul stands sure, so long will a nation overcome all the difficulties in its path and rise triumphant at the last."

It is to be hoped that the Cardinal's itinerary will include Canada.

BELGIAN ART TREASURES.

AN ATTRACTIVE method has been adopted for the foundation of a fund for the restoration of Belgian art treasures that have suffered in the war—the preparation and publication "sur-la Belgique do livre le plus beau et le plus complet qui eut jamais ete conscare." The subject is an inspiring one—"all the great incarnations of beauty and heroism of the soul of Belgium"—her beautiful cities, her architectural glories, her picturesque history, her old masters, and her "local color" generally, which is full of artistic delights. Verhaeren, Maeterlinck, poets and painters, musicians, soldiers, statesmen, scholars, all the great men of modern Belgium, and many of those of other countries, are to be pressed if pressure be needed—into the service; and the work should be a monumental one. It is to be lavishly illustrated and some of the colored reproductions are admirable works of art. It will have a hundred pictures, in color or in black and white, presented with it. And its title will be "Terre de Belgique." The only regret is that, for the good of the fund, the price is to range from $100 to $300, according to the amount of "luxe" that the purchaser is prepared to pay for. But, even so, it should not fail to sell.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REQUIRED.

ABOUT $18,000,000 a year is being paid in small pensions of $10 a month or so, to partially disabled Canadian men says the Ottawa Citizen. It is the opinion of many of the men so pensioned that a more practical method of helping towards their re-establishment might be worked out, with benefit to the country as well as to themselves. It takes $360,000,000 of national capital to provide $18,000,000 a year at five per cent. With half of this capital sum, 100,000 men could be furnished a credit of $1800 each to help them set up in some line of productive industry, or otherwise make themselves independent of their monthly pension dole. Surely the Government could give more consideration to the possibility of putting this into effect, for the benefit of men who would prefer a grant of money, or a substantial credit on easy terms of re-payment, instead of dribbling away millions in small monthly pensions.

THAT GRATUITY.

SO, HON. C. J. DOHERTY, Minister of Justice, tells the Veterans that the Government could not entertain their demands for a gratuity of $2000—the condition of the country would not stand for it. But whatever the condition of the country is, in all probability it is that very condition, in part, which has aroused the Veterans to their gratuity demand. The situation of a certain element of every community, who stayed at home and waxed fat on economic opportunities made possible by those who went to France and Flanders and lived and fought under conditions appalling enough to deter the bravest of the brave, is most likely responsible for the Veterans' discontent. The fabulous prices paid for war supplies and consequent fabulous wages paid munition workers and all engaged in producing needs for that army of Canadians standing between their homeland and the ambitious German, offers too much of a comparison with a dollar-ten a day to pass without question. The one fought and died and lived-as-live-can in order that we at home might enjoy immunity from Hun oppression; the other received the maximum wage from a war-burdened country to maintain that country's army at the front. Big, husky men of $2-a-day pick-and-shovel vocation were paid in some cases up to $10 a day to turn out shells, while their, in many cases, delicately nurtured brethren "stopped one" at the front or took the chance of doing so day in and day out. The one lived on the fat of the land, bought automobiles and property, while his preserver floundered in filth and mud and danced to the music of hell. Wealth was created for the slacker; but danger, sudden death, or, if lucky, a return to conditions in their country which forces unfavorable comparison between the stay-at-homes and the men who voluntarily shouldered arms to their Empire's call, was and is the lot of Veterans. Then, can it be wondered at that the saviors of the Empire, in reply to that of the Government that the country's condition will not allow of a $2000 gratuity, should cry, "Take it out of the profiteers and slackers."

No matter what conditions in Canada are, and they are head and shoulders above conditions in some lands today, with a future seemingly refulgent with promise, the conditions during the war have bred dissatisfaction so far as those who fought in the war are concerned. The burden of their thought is: "We went over there and took up work that meant a gamble with death for us, and it would have been fairer to all concerned had labor also been drafted, not pampered with big pay and coddled by a compliance with every demand." The boys go even further and claim support on the principles of democracy in the thought that as the war was fought in defence of each and every interest individual and collective, then conscription should have been applied to war munition labor. They feel that the Government should have treated Labor at home as it treated the men at the front; that democracy in Canada's army in France and Flanders, and democracy in lines of business and labor essential for prosecuting the war, worked in contrary directions.

As to the condition of Canada to permit paying a big gratuity in cold cash, the Government might be embarrassed; but there are veterans who suggest long-term bonds transferrable only under conditions of real benefit to the owner, and this suggestion offers food for earnest consideration. Canada, with her expansion prospects, her vast acreage, her unexploited mineral resources, her manufacturing and commercial opportunities, should and no doubt will strain every nerve to foster the weal of those of her citizen armies who remain to tell the tale of horrors and sufferings at the front, even as she set an example of heroism, pluck and undying loyalty to democracy and Empire yet without a precedent.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

MAN'S RIVAL.

(Farmers' Sun.)

An honest man's the noblest work of God. But, say, how about a bright Ayrshire cow, as she stands in a silage-scented stable giving down that creamy milk?

WOMEN'S WEAR.

(New York Herald.)

A traveller from the South Sea Islands says the women are very happy there, because it costs them nothing for dress. If he means to imply by that that the less a woman wears the more money she saves, he must guess again. Experience shows that in this part of the world the less women wear the more it costs.

A JOINT AFFAIR.

(Calgary Herald.)

Whatever the provincial authorities may think of it, members of the new Dominion Board of Commerce have no doubts as to the responsibility resting upon the provinces with respect to enforcement of the new Federal Act for the regulation of commodity prices. Judge Robson, chairman of the board, has wired the provincial authorities asking that they detail members of their police forces to gather information as to food conditions in their respective localities, the available stocks, and prices thereof. He also asks that the attorney-general of each province shall engage counsel to prepare files to be submitted to the board wherever it is believed food products are being sold at inordinate prices.

In this fight against high living costs the victims are the consumers. They are the most numerous portion of every community, and are the least able to help themselves. With right they look to the government to see that they get a square deal, and they are not particular from which source their protection comes—Federal or Provincial. As they have to pay the bill for both Federal and Provincial Government, they have a right to look for aid in this, as in other matters, from either or both.

With respect to high living costs, the law is so framed as to make the work of protection a joint affair. The Dominion Government makes the law, appoints a court for the hearing of cases, and enacts the penalties to be imposed upon offenders. The court very properly looks to the local authorities in each province for assistance in the work. With the provincial police department machinery available it will be a comparatively easy matter for the provincial authorities to secure the evidence and prepare cases. It will not be healthy in a political sense for the provincial authorities to refuse to do what Judge Robson has asked.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, acounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

"Women's Union Wakes Up Husbands."

Bert and Cal Norris, two young men who own a furniture store here and one at West Chicago, Ill., are known all over the Fox River valley by reason of their original methods of advertising, but that did not curb one whit the interest which was stirred up by the following notice which appeared one Wednesday recently in the local papers:

Woman's Union in St. Charles.

It was stated on good authority this morning that a woman's union is to be started in the Fox River Valley. Bert Norris has it that the ladies of Bert and Cal Norris' the piano movers in the proposition. They refused the Beacon reporter any information on the subject this morning.

The very next day a short notice appeared, equally puzzling:

Statement to the Public.

Reports circulated in St. Charles yesterday that we were in trouble with the authorities in regard to the formation of a woman's union are absolutely false. We believe our plan will be indorsed by Judge Landis and Judge Hoover and we will go to the by-laws of the union, to the public tomorrow and let the people judge for themselves.

(Signed) BERT C. NORRIS
CAL W. NORRIS

According to promise Friday there appeared in large display space in both of the local papers the following copy, surrounded by a heavy black border:

ARISE, WOMEN! STRIKE!
By-Laws Fox River Local No. 1
W. W. N. U.

Whereas, We, the wives of wage-earners in the Fox River Valley, have worked hard for our husbands (from fourteen to sixteen hours per day) and have done the baking, sweeping housecleaning, taken care of his babies, and of him, the biggest baby of all, he requiring more care and attention than all the rest; and,

Whereas, our Husbands have their work where they meet other men and joke and gossip as little events happen that vary the monotony of life, and,

Whereas, We have to stay at home and work and seldom have a chance to leave the house and therefore want the home convenient, comfortable and one to be proud of, therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the women of the Fox River Valley serve the following notice upon our husbands at once:

Date.....1919.

I, Mrs.——being the true and loving wife of Mr.——, do hereby serve notice upon him, my husband that from this date I refuse to cook or bake for him, the following article——(enter in this space his favorite dish)——until he has furnished me with the following article of furniture——from the quality store of C. E. Norris & Sons at either St. Charles or West Chicago, Ill. Upon presentation to me of a receipt, showing the purchase of above article countersigned by either the president of this society, Bert C. Norris, or the vice-president Carroll V. Norris I promise to resume the cooking of the above named article of food and to use extra care in making it palatable and to give it just the right flavor.

(Signed) Mrs——

The royal emblem of that society shall be a kitchen cabinet.

The "union" was the means of selling a number of pieces like kitchen cabinets and washing machines, according to Bert Norris, the man who conceived the idea of it and wrote the copy.

"While it was in a way a kind of joke, there was a mighty good sermon written into that copy," said Mr. Norris, "and a lot of old chaps felt the point and came in during the next few days and bought presents for their wives that had been acting for a long time. Some of them were kind of sheepish over their sudden decision to buy things for their wives to lighten housekeeping duties, but most of them took it good-naturedly, the way we intended it, and we actually had some fellows come in and buy stuff and then thank us for 'waking them up.'"

Home-Made Book Counter Big Success.

Appreciating the truth of the merchandising law that "Books well displayed are half sold," H. R. Munger, book buyer for John Schoonmaker & Sons, a department store of Newburgh, N.Y., constructed an original book display rack some time ago that has not only had thousands of extra books but has made this firm's book department the most attractive and progressive in the city.

When the Schoonmaker store installed its book department and Mr. Munger, a strategist determined to make every inch do its bit.

Ordinarily, books are bulky and difficult to display. At best, only the ends—showing titles—appear in a pack of books on a table or a counter, with a few books standing upright to display the covers or the colored wrappers. Mr. Munger was confident that if he could show the covers and wrappers of hundreds of his books at one time, he could get people to stand and look at the wrappers, if nothing else.

In a few spare hours, at a cost of $8 he constructed this upright, two-sided counter that stands in the center of the floor. The counter shows from 662 to 912 volumes, with 312 in full front view. This quantity is in excess of the reserve stock underneath.

The counter itself is 180 inches long, 24 3-4 inches high and 37 1-2 inches wide. The grooves provide for the display of 312 books, full front view. The sixteen inch spare shelves supported by the two by four inch posts will hold stacks of twenty-five to a hundred books of a title. Six of them may be used on a counter of this length.

Upward of 2000 books may be stored below and an extra shelf eight inches wide might be provided at the bottom to hold stocks of five books each laid flat. This would take care of 250 more books or in all 3000 to 4000 books in a space approximately thirteen by three feet.

The Book Nook, of Walla Walla, Washington, also constructed a rack after Mr. Munger's directions and the president of this company stated: "We have two racks now in use and they are a huge success."

The Hot Range Window.

A western stove dealer added tremendous stimulus to his sales of gas ranges in summer by a display which consisted mostly of "reverse English." In other words he made the feature of his window not the coolness in the use of the gas range but the heat of a room with a coal stove.

A large coal range was placed in the window. Red grass and a clever lighting scheme told the story of the meadow heat radiation.

A big thermometer which permanently registered 98 degrees drove the lesson home. Then the public eye wandered to the indicated separation of this room from one in which the gas range stood, with a thermometer of 80 degrees, in which a card suggested, "Reduce the temperature of your kitchen 18 degrees with a gas range."

Rapid-Firing Bathing Caps.

Bathing caps sell on sight in summer in any locality near water, if given half a chance. But a method which has proved very successful in even further stimulation consists of a little display, which can be "home made." Select a poster with a pretty face of about life size. Paste it on cardboard and cut it out. Draw the cap over the head. A notice or advertising that a full line of wide selection is carried will enable the merchant to place the general stock of caps and save the price it would otherwise take up.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used annually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

LIFE ON THE SAHARA.

Farming Is Possible on the African Desert.

Contrary to popular belief, it rains in the Sahara, plants grow there, and animals live there. J. Nicholas Brusse, writing in Le Nation, Paris, tells us that this vast region would have been developed long ago but for the anarchy and lack of safety that prevail. Oases may be enlarged and even created, advantage may be taken of underground streams, and when there is no longer fear of spoliation by nomadic robbers, the most favorable places will become settled, as has already happened in some localities protected by the French. Then there will not only be agriculture in the Sahara, as there is to-day in the former deserts of the United States, but mines and industries. In other words, the Sahara is to be rehabilitated. We quote from a translation and abstract of Mr. Brusse's article in the Scientific American Supplement:

"As far back as 1893, Henri Schirmer, whose ideas on the geography of the Sahara and its climate are to-day accepted by all the world and no longer inspire criticism, proved that the Sahara is not entirely lacking in rain, although the regimen of the winds occasions its present sterility; he has explained that the Sahara is not absolutely unfit for life, either for plant life or for animal life; but that Saharan agriculture has but little resemblance to that of other countries; that the European cannot suppress a desert as some of them dream of doing, and that a strategic road could be constructed across it as far as Soudan; that its oases should be developed, and 'that land long left barren should be restored to cultivation.' The surface of the Sahara is estimated at 2,394,200 square kilometers and its population at 450,000 inhabitants. It is incorrect to believe that this expanse is a recently emerged bottom of the ocean. It consists of a vast series of plateaux with a few groups of mountains.

"The Sahara has been incorrectly represented as an immense expanse composed of shifting sands, receiving no rain whatever, and entirely destitute of vegetation.

"The Sahara is, to be sure, a very dry region; but it does rain there. It also contains a number of wells or pools of water—without mentioning the numerous Ghodirs, 'temporary ponds or water holes, spots where rain water stands for a certain length of time.' But for many centuries those wells have received no attention and no care.

"Another legend which does injustice to the Sahara is that this immense expanse is entirely deprived of vegetation; but the largest portion of this immense surface proclaimed as a desert in reality possesses a plant life which is quite various and often very abundant. It contains numerous pastures and some pieces of woodland, even outside the oases.

"Besides the palm tree, which requires rather a large sheet of water, various other sorts of trees are found in the Sahara (aside from numerous shrubs and tamarisks); principally the rubber tree and the ethel, a variety of the tamarisk. In the southern Sahara the Doumor Egyptian palm is found; it does not bear fruit, but the trunk and branches serve various purposes. The Apir possesses other arborescent species—notably mimosas of all sorts; in the most unpromising regions. Fourcau has even met with woodED plateaux still exist.

"The Sahara contains a number of forage plants and shrubs. It was upon these that the caravans pastured, and that even the 1,200 or 1,300 camels of the Foureau-Lamy expedition and its auxiliary convoys succeeded in sustaining themselves.

"It must not be forgotten that we are speaking here of spontaneous vegetation, which grows without demanding help or labor from man. It is, therefore, an incontestable fact that these pasture lands are capable of a certain degree of improvement, provided there is an initial establishment of roads of communication. This improvement can be attained by the selection of the best grasses, forage plants and arborescent species. According to Messrs. L. Trabut and R. Mares, the Saharan plants are very remarkable in their adaptation to a dry climate and a salty earth. The date tree is adapted to those Saharan regions, which are well provided with water; beneath the date trees cultivation in kitchen garden is very well developed. In the oases are found the fig tree, the apricot, the peace and the grape. Agriculture succeeds well in the oases of the north as at Biskra. The cultivated cereals are barley, wheat, sorghum and millet; lucerne is the forage plant of the oasis. It is of a very beautiful variety, with wide leaves and seems very resistant to salt." Industrial cultivation is now confined to a few plants, such as madder and a variety of tobacco used for snuff.

Rails Across Africa.

Plans are under way in Africa for the restoration of the railway and steamer connection across the continent from where the Congo empties into the Atlantic to the former German capital at Dar-es-Salaam, or "Harbor of Peace," on the Indian Ocean. The connection was completed just before the war, and the eastern terminal of the line was almost immediately destroyed when the town was shelled by British vessels. The German end of the line, now lost to Germany, ran for some 800 miles from Dar-es-Salaam to Lake Tanganyika, and a small steamer had been "made in Germany" and carried in sections over the new railway line to the lake, where it was to be put together and launched to ferry passengers across to the beginning of the Belgian part of the system. The Belgian railway ran from Tanganyika to the upper Congo, passing two unnavigable stretches of the upper river, and from this terminal the traveller continued by steamer to the Atlantic. Few ever made the journey, for the war began within a short time of the completion of the last link. But the next few months are likely to see the development of a steady traffic back and forth across what was once called the "dark continent."

REVENGE IS HOLY.

How German Churches View the Peace Treaty.

What, asks the writer, is the guidance offered by the leaders of the churches to this crisis in the affairs of the nation? We are in no doubt as to its character. In the Kreuz Zeitung recently Dr. Conrad, one of the ex-kaiser's chaplains, wrote a homily on the attitude which religious men should adopt toward the peace which is being "dictated to Germany." He wrote: Possess your souls and do not despair. God in His good time will turn our sorrows into joy. Is there a German man with the fear of God in his heart who does not realize that this humiliation is but for a time and that before long the drama of the new fashioning of the earth will begin again? When that time comes Germany will rise supreme from the fire of her trials. It was in 1870-71 that began it; that was the prelude; we are now at the close of the second act. The coming third act will give us our final place, and God will be with us. All I can counsel is this: Be patient. Our hour is coming. Certainly, sign the peace, for this will give us the breathing time we require, and also time for reflection."

In the Kirchen-Anzeiger there is a sermon by Stadt-Pfarrer Brockhaus, headed "What Is Now Our Duty?" Then after denouncing "the cruel and incredible terms" of the treaty, goes on: "There is a revenge which is holy and ennobles all of those who nourish it in their hearts. We cannot sit down under this awful humiliation. But we must wait God's time. We must wait for Him to dictate our course. He who led the German people from weakness to strength. He who once blessed our efforts in our world mission, is punishing us now for our sins; but He has great work for us yet, and He will see that we yet stand on the necks of our adversaries." All through these sermons dealing with the peace and the present situation generally the German clergy continuously exhort their flocks to be patient, to be steadiest during the days of tribulation. In a perfunctory sort of way they acknowledge that tribulation has come upon the people because of their sins and shortcomings, but the sins and shortcomings have nothing to do with guilt of causing the war or with the ineffable crimes committed by Germany in the four years of its duration.

Substitutes for Hickory.

Specifications for handles for intrenching tools were prepared during the war by the forest products laboratory at Madison, allowing seven substitute species in place of hickory and also certain minor defects, thereby making possible greatly increased production for this class of material and at the same time giving satisfactory handles.—University Bulletin.

Look Decent.

Bobby's father was a photographer, and the little fellow had often seen him take pictures and heard him admonish the people to "Look pleasant, please." One day he obtained a small, vermont camera and pretended to take his little playmate's picture. Getting her to stand for a snapshot, he directed: "Now, Hazel, stand still and look decent, please."

SACRED ARABIAN BOOK

GERMANS MUST RETURN THE OTHMAN KORAN.

Teutons Carried Off the Roll of Parchment Which Meant So Much to People Who Believed In the Prophet of Islam. But the Allies Now Give It Back to the Original Owners.

A LARGE roll of parchment yellowed by thirteen centuries and covered with ancient Arabic script, played an important part in the construction of another and formidable historical document, the Peace Treaty. Germany is required by this treaty to disgorge, along with provinces, billions in cash and various art treasures, among them the Koran of Othman. Just what importance attaches to this particular copy of the Koran is a question that smites the public mind as allied to secret diplomacy.

A World Magazine interviewer carried this query to Leon Camen, Orientalist, hailing from the universities of Petrograd and Oxford — a familiar of the East, well versed in the depths and shoals of Mahometanism.

The Prophet of Islam left nothing written, for the sufficient reason that he could neither read nor write. The numerous suras, or chapters, of the Koran stand for so many sermons, so many prophetical outbursts, which, attended by flaming disciples, were nixed in the tenacious memories characteristic of the East. Only sporadically was a passage jotted down by a rare one possessed of the gift of letters.

These considerations gave extraordinary importance to a canonized compilation, made at Abu Bekh's command, of the revelation of Mahomet. A commission prepared the work, headed by Zaid Ibn Tabit, a young man who had been secretary to the Prophet.

This first Koran, derived of scant writings, but chiefly "from the breasts of men," was inscribed on palm leaves, from which it came to be known as the "Book of Leaves." It was a very important Koran, but it was not the one mentioned in the Peace Treaty.

A generation later Calif Othman had another Koran problem pulling at his Islamatic beard. A number of compilations from divers unofficial sources were in circulation. All were more or less incorrect, and much spiritual and political disturbance resulted therefrom.

Again a commission was formed, headed by the same Zaid Ibn Tabit, now an old man, who had figured in the earlier compilation episode. Based on the venerable "Book of Leaves," which had been deposited in Medina, Mahomet's birthplace, a new and authoritative Koran was drawn up. Three copies of this original were made, and all other copies of the Koran were ordered done away with. Even the sacred "Book of Leaves" was destroyed a little later. The possession of an incorrect version was pronounced heresy, an easy passport to subterrestrial parts.

The three copies were given to as many Moslem centres and subsequently lost. The original, known as the Othman Koran, was deposited at Mecca, where it remained through the centuries until the late war.

All this, however, is but a prefatory chapter in explaining the mysterious veneration which led the Turks, when the Arab insurrection and the menace of the British Sues forces made Medina unsafe, to transfer the Othman Koran to Constantinople, for later removal to Berlin, when the allied fleet was promising to run the Dardanelles.

This Berlin transfer was a dreadful piece of sacrilege. The Othman Koran, one of the holiest things of Islam, had reposed for centuries in its little casket at the Mosque of Medina. No infidel had ever gained sight of it. Only Sir Richard Burton, the great Orientalist, contrived to enter the holy place—by disguising himself faultlessly as an Arab. And now this sacredest of Korans was taken to Berlin.

In the month of Ramadan the pilgrims go to Mecca. From all parts of the world they take their arduous way to pray at the holy places, and thus gain for themselves the title of Hajji and the privilege of wearing the green turban.

Thus it has obtained for a thousand years, with a good proportion of the pilgrims further betaking themselves to Medina to pay devotion to the Othman Koran.

Now, these pilgrims have ever been a source of large revenue. They pay admission to the holy places, and the Arabian high cost of living does astonishing tricks for their exploitation. The district of the holy shrine would be sorely grieved if permanently deprived of any considerable portion of the pilgrim patronage.

This is precisely the misfortune that the Turk threatened to visit upon the insurgent Arabs.

The Othman Koran is essential to the economic development of the recently formed Arabian kingdom.

Suppose the Germans in a raid had carried off the English royal crown. The King would still be King, but the mislaying of his diadem would be an embarrassing circumstance. A king of the Hejaz, such as has been made recently. If he were without the Othman Koran would have more pointed questions to answer than any one but a Moslem can know.

And the home coming of this Koran will strengthen the King of the Hejaz.

"Do you think the Germans intended to keep the Othman Koran?" I asked the Orientalist.

"I don't," he replied. "It would take a strong imagination to picture the pilgrims, in the month of Ramadan, dragging their pious Moslem feet to Berlin."

AMONG THE CANNIBALS.

How the Period of Famine Came to an End.

Famine had come upon Atuona valley, says a passage from "The Flowing Lava Bowl," by Frederick O'Brien and Rose Wilder Lane, in Asia Magazine. Children wailed with hunger on the paepaes, and the breasts of mothers shrunk so that they gave no milk. Therefore, the warriors set forth in the great canoes for Motopu. Meat was the cry, and there was no other meat than puaa oa, the "long pig that speaks." In the darkness the hungry fighting men of Atuona soundlessly beached their canoes and crept upon the sleeping people of Motopu. Seven were killed before they could fly to the hills, and one was captured alive, a slender, beautiful girl of ten years, whom they tied hands and feet and threw into the canoe with the slain ones.

Back they came from their triumph, and landed on the shore here, within a spear's throw from the paepae of Broken Plate. Their people met them with drumbeating and with chanting, bringing rosewood poles for carrying the meat. The living girl was slung over the shoulder of the leader, still bound and weeping, and in single file heroes and their people marched up the trail past the Roman Catholic Mission. Tohéaa, Great Sea Slug, chief of Atuona, was foremost, and over his massive shoulder hung The Girl Who Lost Her Strength.

Then from the mission came Pere Orens, crucifix in hand. Tall he stood in garment of black, facing Great Sea Slug, and lifted on high his hand with the crucifix in it. Pere Orens was tapu, not to be touched under pain of death, for he had been adopted by Great Sea Slug, to whom he had explained the wonders of the world and given many presents. Powerful was the God of Pere Orens, and could work wonders. In his pocket he carried always a small God, that day and night said "Mika! Mika!" and moved tin arms around and around a plate of white metal. Great Sea Slug heard now the voice of this little God in the stillness, and he paused before the uplifted arm of Pere Orens, while the hungry people came closer that they might hear what befell.

"Where are you going?" said Pere Orens.

"To Pekia, the High Place, to cook and eat," said Great Sea Slug. Then for a space Pere Orens remained silent, holding on high the crucifix, and in the stillness the voice of the small God spoke without ceasing.

"Give to me that small piece of living meat," said Pere Orens then.

"Me mamaloe, if it is your pleasure, take it," said Great Sea King. "It is a trifle. We have enough, and there is more in Motopu."

With these words he placed his burden upon the shoulder of the priest, and heading his band, again led them past the Mission, over the river and to the High Place, where all night long the people feasted in the deep roaring and booming of the twelve-foot drums. But The Girl Who Lost Her Strength remained in the house of Pere Orens, who cut her bonds, fed her and nursed her to strength again. Baptised and instructed in the religion of her savior, she was secretly returned to her surviving relatives. There she lived to a good age, and died four years ago, grateful always to the God that had preserved her from the oven.

Controlling Airships.

For some time experiments have been carried out in various countries with the object of controlling aircraft from the ground, and a French machine succeeded recently — on a prescribed course with certain specified detours—in covering a distance of 180 kilometers (about 110 miles), and in landing, when required, at a certain airdrome. A similar machine has been developed in the United States which, according to a recent statement of Secretary of War Baker, can travel without a pilot some 100 miles and land close to a designated post.

Some Desert Reptiles.

Quaint and curious are the ways of some reptiles of the desert, as revealed by the famous naturalist, Mr. C. L. Camp, who has been studying them in the Colorado Desert.

He tells of some reptiles—the burrowing snake sonora, the gridiron-tailed lizard, the ocellated sand-lizard, and the desert "horned toad"—which actually swim into the loose sand by the strong lateral movements of their heads. The gridiron-tailed lizard is very swift and agile, and when chased will race over the sand at fifteen miles an hour.

Most of the desert reptiles of the Colorado Desert are colored like their surroundings and are difficult to detect. Others can change their colors to suit their surroundings, while not a few of the desert lizards are able to part with their tails very rapidly when they are seized.

There is humor in the ways of desert tortoises. When one meets another — unless both are males, when a fight invariably takes place — each nods its head rapidly up and down as though in salutation, and sometimes noses are touched as they pass. —Tit-Bits.

Two Lovers

By RALPH HAMILTON

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union)

The belle of the village, Gladys Marcy, had two aspirants for her favor upon whom she bestowed especial attention.

They were Alan Druse and Morton Bayne opposites in every sense of the word. They had each attracted Gladys and it was difficult for her to decide which appealed to her liking most: Alan, with his flashing, fun-loving ways, or Morton, with a soul enwrapt in music and seeming always in a poetic dream.

Alan loved her, or fancied he did, and his vivacious ways bade fair in the eyes of the gossips to outvie Morton so far as courting went. It had begun to dawn upon Gladys, however, that Alan was somewhat frivolous.

It was all Morton with Gladys when, in the church choir at entertainments, or passing an evening in the Marcy home he wrought from his violin bewildering witchery of harmony and expression that caused her heartstrings to quiver with a rare delight. He had never, however, hinted at anything more than friendship. His income was modest and seemed a steady one, for a number of his compositions had become generally popular and likely to remain so, and out of royalties he had received he had already accumulated several thousand dollars.

Gladys fluttered visibly one evening when Morton appeared at her home while Alan was already in evidence. Somehow the manner of the latter had indicated to her that he was on the verge of a proposal, and she had wondered how she could seek to evade a direct decision, feeling instinctively that she scarcely knew her own mind as yet. A certain suiteness overspread the face of Alan as he discerned that he was not to have Gladys exclusively for that evening at least. He looked bored as the parents insisted on some music and Morton, ever accommodating, brought out his violin.

It was in the midst of a lovely sonata that entranced all his auditors save Alan that the unexpected happened. Gladys was seated by the lamp on the table when there was a quick hiss and then a sudden outburst of flame. She uttered a vivid scream, her hands went up to her face with frantic suddenness. Alan shrank back, quite unnerved and affrighted. Morton cast aside his violin with a fling and sprang toward her, noting that one sleeve of the light, dainty dress she wore was all ablaze. There was a second explosion, and he had extinguished the flaming dress when his eyes closed with a spasm of pain. Then—darkness, so utter for himself that he groped blindly about him.

"Is Gladys safe?" fell from his lips in an eager, anxious gasp. "I cannot see! I fear—"

There he paused, appalled. In vain he strove to strain his darkened vision. It was only from the exclamations of the others that he could trace what was happening. Gladys, insensible and sustaining frightful face burns from the second explosion, himself helpless to assist her, the injured girl carried to her room, a collapse on his own part, a fading away of all consciousness, its feeble, bewildering return, and a realization that old Doctor Moore was at his side examining his eyes.

"He probably saved Gladys by extinguishing her flaming dress," Morton caught the physician's tones, "but at a terrible cost—he is utterly blind!"

It was many days before the lives of those disturbed by the startling event of the explosion settled down into the old peaceful grooves. Only once did Alan Druse call at the Marcy home. He was genuinely solicitous. A glance into the next room, a sight of Gladys so shocked him that soon he left the house, never to return. And Gladys, understanding, turned her head on her pillow and wept bitterly. Then, when her nurse had left her alone, she stole to a mirror with her eyes almost affrighted as she staggered back to the couch. Her beauty was gone! She realized now why Alan Druse had fled as from a pestilence.

It was a week later that Morton Bayne knew the worst. He was told that his case was hopeless. For a time that gentle, sensitive soul was dumb. Then in sorrow, in self-counsel and prayer he emerged, chastened, patient, with a rare smile upon his face and his mind at perfect peace.

"There is music!" he whispered raptly to himself, and then, half doubtingly, but with a longing quiver in his tone: "There is Gladys to dream of, to love, even though she never thinks of me save as a friend."

The mother of Gladys one day led the welcome adored hero who had saved the life of her daughter into the room where that daughter sat. She left those two afflicted ones alone, went out and closed the door. Before that patient face and the sightless eyes and at a thought of what this sacrifice meant to her, Gladys impulsively extended her trembling hands to meet the groping ones of her visitor.

The face of the blind man was momentarily glorified—heart to heart, he could feel the responsive thrill to his ardent own, and lo! there flooded his soul a light that could never dim—the radiance of lasting, perfect love.

"SHE withstood everything in the field and above all was, and still is, the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities"—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

Figures Don't Lie.

"Kansas is dry; Nebraska is wet. Kansas had 91.1 sentenced prisoners per 100,000 of population; Nebraska has 55.1.

"Kansas is dry; Nebraska is wet. Kansas' wealth per capita is the largest in the country; its death-rate is the lowest; it has the most home owners.

"In thirty years insanity has increased 83 per cent. in Maine and 94 per cent. in Kansas.

"Maine is dry; Minnesota is wet. Maine has 127.3 paupers per 100,000 of population, Minnesota has 46.2.

"Kansas is dry; New York is wet. Kansas has 286 divorces per 100,000 of population; New York has 60.

"Maine and North Dakota are dry; Rhode Island and Pennsylvania are wet. Wages run higher in the wet states.

"And so it goes. You could, I could, anybody could, fill pages with those things. They are the smoke-screens of knowledge; the harassing fire of wisdom takes more skill. Dry Kansas has a greater per capita wealth than wet New York; but when you ask whether the Kansan is happier than the New Yorker, you soar at once into metaphysics, and the chances of a fatal vrille are big."

Chinese Seclusion.

So successfully has China succeeded in secluding herself from the rest of the world that there are places within her borders where Christian white men have never set foot even to this day. How very remarkable this fact is will be realized when one considers that the Christian white man has been the most restless wanderer known to history.

Hardy Palm.

The hardiest palm at all common is California's "Trachycarpus excelsus," known as the windmill palm. Not alone is it hardy in withstanding low temperatures, but it is tough and will endure rough treatment, but boxed it is not a success, say those who know.

HAD THE LOOK ON COOTIES

Soldier's Humorous Explanation of Why He Was Wearing Such Giddy Lingerie.

Life on the front had its whimsicalities at times in spite of rolling barrages, the hail of bullets, the jangle of shrapnel and the whirring of truck motors. Lieut. Harry B. Henderson tells of a beautiful red rose on his camp table in a letter to the Wyoming State Tribune, beside an Austrian shell with a bit of scenery painted on it, which served as a paper weight. Then there are incidents that excite the "risibles" and afford needed diversion to the mind. For instance:

"The other day they were keeping us a bit busy and I had my ear on top of my head all the time deciding on each 'whiz' as it approached. Just in the hottest part of it, one of my gunners came tearing down a rutty road, clad in a Prince Isaac coat he'd found in a raid and wearing a Boche cap. He was pushing a baby-buggy full of potatoes and dynamite which he thought I could use. We had the eatables for lunch and then blasted a new dugout with the explosive. You can't imagine how you laugh when you've been a bit under a strain for several days of firing, and then see something funny. But for my sense of the proprieties I'd describe the giddy lingerie the young man was using for underwear. He explained to me that cooties get so tired of wandering through lace!"—Literary Digest.

SALE GETS WEBSTER'S HOUSE

Historic Building at New Haven Has Recently Become the Property of the University.

In purchasing and taking possession of the famous Noah Webster house, Yale university has come into possession of one of the oldest and perhaps the most historical building in New Haven.

When the venerable lexicographer wrote the dictionary a century ago, he never dreamed that the home in which he performed his literary chores would prove the quarters of United States troops in the greatest of world wars. Yet that was the destiny of the plain wooden building. The university turned it over to the Student Army Training corps and it was occupied by soldiers till the final demobilization.

It was the home of Webster while he resided in the city, although part of his dictionary was written at Amherst, Mass. He was one of Yale's most famous professors, his work ranking in world value with that of his fellow professors, Samuel F. B. Morse and Eli Whitney.

The home stands at the corner of Grove and Temple streets and was formerly the property of Courtland T. Trowbridge, a relative of the lexicographer. The university has acquired it because of its scheme to fill the square bounded by Wall, Temple, Grove and College streets with dormitories for the Sheffield Scientific school. The entire group, it is expected will be given by Frederick W. Vanderbilt of New York city, a graduate of the class of '76. He already has given two large dormitories.

Solitary on a Texas prairie there will be seen next spring a heroic bronze statue of a man and horse. It is a memorial to young Charles Noyes of a ranch near Melvin, who was killed in a range accident three years ago, and is the work of Pompeo Coppini. The Texas lad was six feet four inches in height and the sculptor has modeled him as he was in life, while the horse stands 16 hands high. The pose is striking. Mr. Coppini is now at work on Chicago's monument to her heroes.

A MATHEMATICAL FREAK.

Farmer Knows Multiplication Tables Up to a Million.

Have you ever heard of any person who is able to say his multiplication tables up to 1,000,000?

William Strong, a farmer of Washington, Ill., claims the distinction of being the only person in the world who can solve, mentally without pen, pencil or paper, any problem given to him in addition, subtraction, multiplication, division, fraction, cube and square root.

Bankers, auditors and public accountants who are familiar with handling figure which run into the millions have for the past five years tried in vain to originate some problem which will stump the Illinois farmer.

Not long ago a half dozen bankers, auditors and expert accountants got together and decided to stump Strong with mathematical problems if such a thing was possible.

These experts carefully compiled and computed the answers to 100 problems, including problems in addition, fractions and cube and square root. When the work was complete Strong was asked to appear.

The experts had prepared for a long session. They had taken most of one day to originate and compute the answers to the problems.

367,892

Scarcely had the expert accountant finished 892 of the last number when Strong gave him the answer. Strong's answer tallied with the experts.

The next question was something like this: Subtract $1,428,967,232 from $9,453,778,999. Strong flashed the answer immediately, and again it was correct.

The next question was in multiplication. The experts asked him to multiply 456,999 by 999,999. Without any apparent effort the answer came instantly, and it was correct.

The accountants then shot one at Strong, confidently expecting him to fail, admitting that the problem was a difficult one to figure, even with paper and pencil.

"Strong," the accountant said, "tell us how much 1,243,677,999 2-5 times 999,988,766⅞ is?" Strong didn't even hesitate and gave them the answer almost instantly. Again it was correct.

It took less than ten minutes for Strong to solve the hundred problems and every answer given by him was found to be correct. He asked neither pencil nor paper, the calculating all being done mentally.

"How about higher mathematics?" Strong was asked. "Nothing doing in my line above cube root," Strong replied.

ALWAYS HAS HOPE

Prospector for Gold One of Fortunate Men.

With Belief in One's Luck to Be "Just Ahead" the Buffets of Fate Are Things at Which to Laugh.

The typical prospector for gold, still met with in the far hills and deserts, may well be taken by all men as an example and an inspiration as far as the blessings of staying hopes are concerned, says the Los Angeles Times.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," says the proverb. But it is not a good proverb. No matter how long deferred a hope may be it should never be abandoned. It should never be anything but an inspiration and an incitement.

Take this nomadic tribe of prospectors, for instance. The typical prospector is a man who has spent perhaps the most of his life pursuing a hope that has never been realized. Yet we never find them discouraged. We never know them to end their days in despair. No matter how many their years of failure may be they will tell you that just beyond the next chain of hills or in the heart of a still unexplored desert the treasures they seek are surely awaiting them.

A most sincere and persistent man is the prospector. He believes in his quest and respects it. The little or the much that he wins by spasmodic toil he invests in his dreams. He braves the solitudes and the lonely wastes of the world to reach the goal for which he strives. Hunger, thirst and other hardships and sufferings he endures with a willing heart.

And he never despairs. That is the glory of the prospector—he never despairs.

The average man, hedged in by the traditions of towns and cities or settled in the humdrum of the country, looks upon the prospector as a queer and somewhat demented individual. We laugh at this strange fellow who is pictured to us as plodding along in the wilderness—and the sandy desolations with his pack and his burro, following the will-o'-the-wisps of fortune.

But the prospector is only doing in his way what we are doing in ours. We are following each our own dream as the prospector is following his.

The only difference is that we proceed in safety and without adventure. Otherwise we are the same as the wanderer of the desert and the hills. And also we are soon discouraged and we are easy prey to defeat, while it is death alone that can defeat the prospector.

It seems to us that of all the misfortunes there are in life—and heaven knows there are many the misfortune of hopelessness is the worst. "Only for hope the heart would die," said a poet. It was a true thing to say.

And about this wonderful thing of hope there is another way to look at it and that is that we should always have at least one hope ahead. That is to say, we should always have something that we look forward to. Then, if what we have in hand fails us, the other thing that we look forward to will stay us.

Hope is something to be busy with. It is something of which we should accumulate a store. Always have plenty of hopes and have them so that they will reach out and last away into the years of the future.

There is really something mysterious about a hope. If you will cherish it faithfully and keep it warm in your heart you will be almost sure to sometime realize it. It is said that we are what we believe ourselves to be. But perhaps we might better say that we are what our hopes are.

Since even a long-cherished hope is most likely to be realized, surely it were foolish of us to harbor hopes that will not bring us comfort and joy. Hope for the best there is—not great riches, not any material possession, but peace for the heart and a serene path for the white years of old age.

Cotton Growing in China.

Now that China has decided what kind of cotton seed does best in that country, and is distributing it by the ton to farmers, cotton growing starts on a new geographical development. The time may yet come when the Chinese laundryman, far from home, will croon over his collars that he is "still longing for the old plantation." Work done during several years in four experiment stations indicates that out of forty varieties of seed the kind known as "Trice" is best suited for Chinese cultivation. It appears that "Trice" yields 141 catties to the mow, which is the Chinese way of saying something more than 141 pounds per one-sixth of an acre, for the catty weighs about one-third more than the English pound. The Chinese pound, for that matter is called "kin," but for some reason foreigners prefer to call it a "catty."

67,948 Animals Sent Overseas.

In a statement made by the war department it appears that since the United States entered the war and to January 11, 1919 this government shipped overseas from this country 67,948 animals, which included 5,489 cavalry horses, 33,396 draft horses, 28,088 draft mules, and 975 pack mules. The total number of animals lost en route overseas so far reported is 600 horses and mules, or less than 1 per cent of the total number of animals shipped.

A DATE PRE-EMPTED

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13TH. BE SURE AND KEEP IT IN MIND.

When the Chautauqua was in this city no speaker was heard with more enthusiastic appreciation than was Dr. George Adam, who, as the close friend of Hon. Lloyd George, lectured on his life.

Mr. H. G. Weber, the president of the Men's Association of Murray Street Baptist Church, is our authority for the announcement that his association will introduce Dr. Adam again to Peterborough, when he will lecture on the subject, "My Experiences with Harry Lauder in the trenches," on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13th.

THIS WAS FRAUD

Mr. U. J. Flach, principal of the High School, says the Pembroke Standard, who has returned from Toronto, where he was engaged for a month examining matriculation papers, tells of a novel means of making money, conceived by some ingenious person in a little village near Toronto. This person, in some way, intercepted the question papers between the education department of Toronto and the town in question, and set up a little business of letting the candidates for the examination have a peek at them at the rate of $5 for a five minute look or ten dollars for a paper. No doubt had the officials not heard of this scheme, there would have been a very large percentage of successful candidates in that town, but they did, and without notice had the pupils write on the entrance to Normal School papers, which were entirely different. The result was a number of plucked pupils. The matter caused considerable inconvenience and detained the examiners in Toronto two weeks longer than usual.

HARVEST FESTIVAL CAMPAIGN.

Teh annual harvest festival campaign in connection with the local branch of the Salvation Army was launched yesterday, and the many friends of the corps will be receiving a call from canvassers during the coming week.

The same method will be carried out as was worked with the Self-Denial effort in the Spring, namely, an envelope will be dropped in the door one night and will be called for during the week. Friends are requested to enclose their contributions in these envelopes.

The envelopes which are being used are those which were left over from the Self-Denial campaign hence will be marked "Self Denial Effort" instead of "Harvest Festival." This is due to the fact that some three or four thousand envelopes were left over in the spring, and instead of wasting them they are being used this fall. The proceeds of this campaign, however, will go towards the work which is usually covered by the Harvest Festivale anvass.

Contributions large or small will be gratefully received.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

DARKENS BEAUTIFULLY AND RESTORES ITS NATURAL COLOR AND LUSTRE AT ONCE.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients; a large bottle at little cost at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound no one can tell because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

GARDEN FETE.

Event in Aid of Serbian Children a Huge Success.

The garden fete in aid of the Serbian children, which took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Cuffe, 32 Benson avenue, was a most successful event. The organizers of the affair were eight or nine girls from the Collegiate Institute, Misses Martha Kirn, Jean Kidd, Dorothy Thompson-Curry, Helen Roberts, Irene Bates, Violet McEwen, Anna Bulmer, Kathleen Cuffe, Marion Duncan. Cake, coffee, candy, ice-cream were sold at the booths which were very prettily decorated for the occasion. A special feature of the entertainment was a dance by the Y. W. C. A. girls under the supervision of Miss Price, which was enjoyed by all. Addresses were given by Capt. Rollins, Mayor Duncan, Mr. Joseph Waering. Later in the evening, when the house was thrown open for dancing, a number of those present enjoyed themselves tripping the light fantastic toe, music being furnished by Mr. Cyril Devey and Miss Isabel Ball. Sincere thanks was extended to all those who by their contributions helped to make the event the success it was. Among those who donated towards the affair are: Mr. G. A. Gillespie, five gallons of ice cream; Mr. John, tea, coffee and cocoa; Mr. Harvie, tent and flags; Mr. Harper milk; Mr. Boyd and Mr. A. Davidson, sugar.

The proceeds amounted to $35.

WARS SET UP PRINCIPLES

Momentous Questions Troubling Mankind Have Been Settled by the World's Greatest Conflicts.

Wars are milestones. Victories set up tablets, upon which are inscribed the principles that have been vindicated.

The battle of Marston Moor destroyed feudalism; overthrew the doctrine of the divine right of kings, gave England an elective parliament, Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis said in a sermon reported in the Brooklyn Eagle.

The war of 1776 was the last civil war of Great Britain—a war of a good section of the English people against the bad section of Great Britain which had enthroned a crazy German king—George III.

The war of 1861 established on sure foundations the republic, the last best hope of man, and vindicated industrial democracy without regard to color.

The war of 1914 has settled certain things for all time. War shall be no more! Hereafter disputes between races shall be settled by an international supreme court. Militarism shall be no more; never again shall the people's resources be wasted in piling up munitions, nor the man in the furrow carry a soldier upon his back. International treaties hereafter shall be sacred! Alas for the next nation that counts its written pledge a scrap of paper and defies international law! The small races and peoples are free! No big bully nation like Germany can ever again trample upon Belgium, as King Ahab trampled on Naboth and seized his purple vineyard. Terrorism and frightfulness henceforth are outlawed. That clay god called "the state," that Germany made unto herself and has long been worshiping, is an idol that has fallen.

NOTHING LEFT TO CHANCE

In modern warfare a man's head is his chief asset, writes Duke Bolivar in Boys' Life. You all know that the St. Mihiel salient, encompassing 152 square miles of territory and 73 villages, was taken by the Americans. Did you know it was done by head work? Elaborate plans were made in advance and given out wholesale to the troops. One hundred thousand maps, covering minute details of the country, including natural defenses, and how it was manned by the enemy, were distributed, plus 30,000 photographs, scattered among officers of the artillery and infantry. Five thousand miles of telephone wire and 6,000 instruments were employed, and this elaborate system kept up with the advance of the army. By this service flanking troops could telephone their position back to the artillery. The telephone business of a city of 100,000 could have been handled by this equipment in whose operation 10,000 men were engaged. Thousands of carrier pigeons aided the signal corps. Extensive hospital facilities, 4,800 trucks, miles of railroad, were provided for this big military operation, and 10,000 feet of movie film were exposed, so all the soldiers had to do was to fight.

Prepared for the Future.

It was at the door of a store which had advertised exceptional bargains for that day, in the jam, that Mrs. Blank saw Mrs. Brown and rushed to shake hands with her and say:

"Oh, Mrs. Brown, are you here?"

"Yes, I am here, but I did not expect to meet you."

"Why, you see, I am going to join the new league and I am getting ready for it."

"Is it the Woman's league where we pledge ourselves not to buy a hat or a garment costing more than $10?"

"Yes, that is the one and I am going to join it, too. I am getting ready for it."

And they entered the store together and each bought a dress marked down from $40 to $48, and $20 hats and coats that cost over $60 each. They went out feeling that they could stand by their pledge.

"Take One."

"Office Window" of the Daily Chronicle of London was once told a pleasing little anecdote of Dame Agnes Weston, the friend of sailors, concerning jam tarts. Some lady helper at a sailors' rest had been mistaken enough to hand the sailors tracts while they were having a meal. Miss Weston advised that some better method should be adopted. The tracts were then placed in a pile on the buffet counter, with a card inscribed, "Please take one." A sailor with a sense of fun transferred the card to a dish of jam tarts, and, as the rush to the buffet began, the servers were amazed to see sailor after sailor lift a tart and walk away, while the tracts remained in an undiminished pile.—Christian Science Monitor.

Spain Fighting Malaria.

Through reforesting marshes as a preventive measure and cultivating medicinal herbs for curative purposes, Spain is credited with a recent material reduction of malaria, in spite of quinine scarcity and other war disadvantages. The chief malarial area of the country is estimated at 741,330 acres, and the effort is being made to reclaim as much of this as possible. The 223,404 cases of malaria in 1913 caused a loss in work of 3,515,595 days with a money loss estimated at $35,450,000.

SEE GOD'S HAND IN RESCUE

"Saved by the hand of God," is the way the nine natives composing the crew of the 80-ton schooner Oromana characterize their escape from death, after having drifted helplessly 50 days on one of the loneliest bits of ocean in the seven seas.

When the wreck of the Oromana was towed into Papeete harbor, Tahiti, one of the most remarkable voyages known in these waters was completed. The vessel, a two-masted schooner, owned by natives of Rimatara, an island about 300 miles southwest of Tahiti, left her home port, without cargo, bound for the island of Rurutu, in the same group, where she was to undergo repairs and take cargo of copra for Tahiti.

Two days out, she was struck by a storm, which carried away both her masts and later her rudder, leaving her a helpless derelict.

With never a glimpse of land or sail to give a ray of hope, the Oromana drifted for 50 days. After 15 days the supply of food was gone. The natives managed to catch a shark with hook and line. This lasted them five days. The rest of the time they had no food. An occasional shower prevented death from thirst.

Then the "miracle" happened. The mountains of Tahiti rose slowly over the horizon. The shifting sea current brought them nearer and nearer until they were finally sighted from shore and a powerboat sent to tow them in. They were too weak to rise to their feet, but, after a few days ashore all appeared to be rapidly recovering from their experience.

The natives say the hand of God guided their craft, for the prevailing winds in these latitudes are from the northwest, a direction which would never have brought them to Tahiti.

SHE KNEW THE GREAT STORY

Girl Lacked Gift of Narrative, but Was Able to Tell All About Chateau Thierry.

As we crawled up a railroad track in the vicinity of Chateau Thierry (this was in October)—a railroad track which seemed the only new and complete object in sight—the Y. M. C. A. girl, who had been sitting in the corner of the compartment resisting all advances at conversation, volunteered a remark.

"Our division took it," she said.

It turned out that she had gone in with her canteen just behind the division, during that fight wherein America made good. She lacked the narrative talent, that girl, but she came out at intervals with flashes like this:

"When our boys came up the stragglers said to them: 'You can't stay in there!' And our boys said: 'We'll not only stay there, but we're going forward.' When the stragglers saw that, they formed, too, and went back with them."

Or this, as we drew into sight of a road bordered by blackened ruins:

"There's where our divisions came into sight, singing, 'The Yanks Are Coming.'"—Will Irwin in the Saturday Evening Post.

Pretty Polly.

"Polly, want a cracker?"

"Why, yes," answered Poll as she plumed her plumage and neatly brushed out her cage with her portside wing. "Now that the war is won and the necessity for food conservation has been reduced to a certain degree, I feel that I may indulge in my favorite dish without serious damage to my conscience."

And the wealthy munitions worker who overheard the remark bought her on the spot for $1,000 cash, saying that she should be surrounded with luxuries for the rest of her days, yea though she lived to be as old as the mother-in-law joke.

Note—Gentle readers who look for a moral to this particular piece of patriotic persiflage will please try to bear up under the disappointment. There ain't none.—Indianapolis Star.

Matter of Patches.

Seven-year-old James and his mother were visiting the latter's spinster aunts. As was their custom these maiden ladies showed their visitors their vast supply of home-pieced quilts. "This is the first four-patch Jane ever made," announced one proudly, displaying a quilt whose blocks were made up of four square pieces.

"And this is Mary's nine-patch," explained Jane. "She made it when she was only seven years old."

The third quilt was an embroidered silk one, made of myriads of tiny irregular pieces—the gifts of friends and the remnants from ancient wedding and reception clothes. James stared at it a few minutes and then he turned to his mother. "Is this one an all-patch?" he asked.

Round Trip.

Aunt Mary Wells is one of the few "befo' de wah" darkies left in a little Kentucky town. Recently she was discussing with her employer the merry-go-round that was running up on the corner.

"Nawsuh, Mr. Malcolm," she said, "nawsuh, I don' ride on none o' dem things. Why, Mr. Malcolm, I've seen some o' these here fool niggers git on that thing and ride as much as a dollar's worth, and git off at the very same place they gits on at; an' I sez to 'em, 'Now you spent yo' money, nigger, whah yo' been?'"—Saturday Evening Post.

HUN HATE PLAINLY SHOWN

How the Germans regarded us in the period of the war with Spain is set forth by Andrew D. White, ex-ambassador to Germany, in his autobiography published by the Century company.

"On my settling down to the business of the embassy (1897-1904)," he writes, "it appeared that the changes in public sentiment since my former stay as minister, 18 years before, were great indeed. At that time German feeling was decidedly friendly to the United States. But all this was now changed. . . . During the Spanish war it was especially virulent, their newspapers being full of statements and arguments to show that corruption was the main characteristic of our government, cowardice of our army and navy, and hypocrisy of our people. . . . Various newspapers in Germany charged our government with a wonderful assortment of high crimes and misdemeanors; but, happily, in their eagerness to cover us with obloquy, they frequently refuted each other.

"Thus they one day charged us with having prepared long beforehand to crush Spain and to rob her of her West Indian possessions, and the next day they charged us with plunging into war suddenly, recklessly, utterly careless of consequences. One moment they insisted that American sailors belonged to a deteriorated race of mongrels and could never stand against pure-blooded Spanish sailors; and the next moment, that we were crushing the noble navy of Spain by brute force. Various presses indulged in malignant prophecies; the Americans would find Spain a very hard nut to crack; Spanish soldiers would drive the American mongrels into the sea; when Cervera got out his fleet the American fleet would sink away; American ships, built under a regime of corruption, would be found furnished with sham plating, sham guns and sham supplies of every sort. . . . Against President McKinley every sort of iniquity was charged. One day he was an idiot; another day the most cunning of . . . at one moment an overbearing tyrant anxious to rush into war; at another a coward fearing war."

Holland's Oyster Industry.

In the industry represented by oyster cultivation, Holland is the most systematic in its operations and employs more elaborate methods than any other country in the world. The numerous sounds that indent the coast of Holland, particularly in the region of the River Scheldt, afford excellent facilities for the propagation of the oyster, and enable the country to conduct the most successful oyster industry in Europe. Public dredging is not permitted, as the result of that system was the threatened exhaustion of the fisheries, and the beds have been carefully surveyed, and specific tracts are leased to individuals and companies who are thus enabled to conduct the propagation of the oyster in a systematic manner that ensures the best results from the territory available. Many growers lease several tracts in different localities, and adapted to different purposes, which facilitates the various operations, as the oysters can be shifted from one place to another, according to the season and the stage of development. A few of the oystermen plant shells on the banks, as is done in many places in this country, but the largest and most successful propagators are equipped with their own tanks and ponds, located in convenient shallow bays, in which they carry on the culture.—Family Herald.

Time Fiddling.

There is a lot of time fiddled away in this world, one way and another, by good people who have the best of intentions. We will venture to assert, along this line, that more time is fiddled away by folks who peck at languages than in any other manner. Almost everybody is seized at some stage in his life with a desire to add another tongue to his own, but it usually results in nothing more than time wasted.

Repentant Patsy.

Minnie and her little dog, Patsy, were playing in the kitchen. Minnie's mamma was cooking supper and stumbled over Patsy, causing her to drop an egg on the freshly scrubbed floor. She put Patsy out on the porch and scolded Minnie in a temper. In a few minutes Patsy scratched on the door and began barking. Minnie said to her mother: "Mamma, can Patsy come in now? He's sorry. Don't you hear him 'pologizing?"

NORMA TALMADGE AN AMERICAN GIRL AGAIN

Having appeared in her last two productions in character roles—in "The Forbidden City" as a Chinese girl and in "The Heart of Wetona" as an Indian maiden. Norma Talmadge comes back to the screen in her latest Select Picture. "The Probation Wife," as an American girl.

In this picture, which Select Pictures offer today, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand theatre, Norma Talmadge is seen as Jo, a child of the underworld, while her supporting cast includes Thomas Meighan, leading man, Florence Billings, Alec B. Francis, Walter McEwen and Amelia Summerville, in addition to several others who are also well known on the screen.

"The Probation Wife" is the story of a girl inmate of a dive. The cafe is raided and she is sentenced to three years in the reformatory. After two years she escapes and meets her benefactor of two years ago. They are married, but petty jealousy and a number of important incidents serve to draw them apart. The day finally arrives when Jo and her husband are once more reunited.

THE PROBATION WIFE

Norma Talmadge Again Demonstrates Remarkable Versatility.

In "The Probation Wife," Norma Talmadge's latest Select Picture, which can be seen today, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand theatre, Norma Talmadge again demonstrates that remarkable versatility in her roles for which she is rapidly becoming distinguished.

At the opening of the picture we see her as an inmate of a notorious cafe. She is young, vibrating with life, and with an inner refinement which makes this life repulsive to her—and Norma Talmadge is the girl who can make you feel all these things.

The cafe is raided and Miss Talmadge as Jo, is sent to the reformatory with the rest of the girls for three years. Here we have this talented Select star in another role. In gingham dress and tousled hair, she scrubs floors and drudges most of the twenty-four hours every day during the year. She is young and wants to live. She rebels against the lot fate has chosen for her and after two years in the reformatory she manages to escape.

She meets Harrison Wade and offers herself to him for whatever he deems fit to give her. He marries her and she becomes his probation wife. Here we have another Norma Talmadge. In the luxurious and refined home of Harrison Wade she develops into a different woman. From an inmate of a cafe, to a slavey, to a lady—Norma Talmadge is all of these in "The Probation Wife," and she is as perfect in one part as in the other. Her acting is excellent. One can feel what in words she cannot tell us. She is a vital, living force on the screen. Never has she done better work. Thomas Meighan, as her leading man gives her splendid support.

LARGE AUDIENCE SAW SOLDIER GIRL

TUNEFUL MUSIC, BRIGHT COSTUMES AND WITTY DIALOGUE.

"My Soldier Girl" drew large audiences to the Grand on Saturday afternoon and evening, and by its tuneful music, bright costumes and witty dialogue earned and received a large measure of applause. The principal parts were well taken by a superior cast, and the chorus was well drilled in their dance numbers. A runway down the centre aisle of the theatre gave the audience an opportunity of viewing the chorus at closer quarters.

Some very catchy songs were introduced, "My Soldier Girl" being probably the one which will be whistled and hummed. The comedy characters, of which there were two sang some witty songs, one of which was entitled "I Saved Up for a Dry Day," which appeared to please the house. A male quartette also rendered several selections in good style.

Although the title of the piece has a decidedly military tone, there was nothing to make one think of soldiers, either girls or boys—nothing but genuine nonsense of the kind that is supposed to appeal to the "tired business man."

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT PICTURE SPORTING LIFE

A Classic Screen Show at Allen Theatre To-day—Production a Picturization of Famous Drury Lane Melodrama All the Rage Twenty Years, and Which Deals With Sporting Life in England.

The first photoplay produced by Maurice Tourneur, the famous director, under his own management and by his own producing organization, will be shown at the Allen Theatre today and tomorrow. It is "Sporting Life" a superb picturization of the famous Drury Lane Melodrama which has held the stage in this country and in England for more than twenty years. The photoplay was admirably produced and it scored an instantaneous and decisive hit.

The scenes of the photoplay are located in England. Harassed by debt John, Earl of Woodstock, conceives two plans by which he may regain his financial standing and make a fortune. A thorough sportsman, he is interested in boxing and he wagers huge sums on John Lee, a gypsy boxer, and upon his horse, Lady Love, to win the Derby. His sworn enemy De Cateret, determines to ruin the Earl by frustrating both chances open to him to become wealthy.

He forces his wife Olive to attempt to make Joe Lee cease training for his ring fight. Kitty Cavanaugh, daughter of the Earl's head trainer, loves Lee not wisely but too well, and when Olive begins to draw Lee into her toils, she runs away to London where she attempts suicide. Olive arranges to have Lee drugged by Kitty's father just as he steps into the ring and this plan might have succeeded in ruining the Earl had he not entered the ring himself and fought a winning battle to a victorious finish.

De Cateret then decides to steal Lady Love and thereby disqualify the Earl at the Derby, and to render this doubly sure he causes the Earl to be kidnapped and held a prisoner aboard an old fery boat. Norah Cavanaugh, the fiancee of the Earl, learns of the kidnapping of the Earl and his horse and she sets the machinery in operation by which both are rescued in time for the great race which Lady Love wins despite the fact that the mare is nearly left at the post. De Cateret is ruined while the Earl's fortune is restored. All ends happily for the Earl and Norah, and while Lee makes amends to Kitty, the former celebrate their nuptials.

The photoplay is filled with stirring action from start to finish, and there are numerous splendidly photographed scenes. It teems with suspensive interest, the villains being constantly foiled at the eleventh hour. Excellent views are shown of the Earl of Woodstock's country estate, the Gypsy camp, racing stables, yallyhos, the National Sporting Club of London and last, a genuine picture of the famous English Derby at Epsom.

Ralph Graves as the Earl of Woodstock is excellent. Constance Binney as Norah Cavanagh, and Fair Binney as Kitty, prove delightful in their portrayals. Willete Kershaw, as Olive De Cateret, wife of the arch villain of the story, is eminently artistic in her arduous characterization. The exacting role of Malet De Cateret is capably delineated by Charles Craig, while Warner Richmond as Joe Lee, a prize fighter, is quite acceptable.

It may safely be said that the photoplay which has been so well done as to make you forget even to think as you follow the fortunes of the principals in the story, will be hailed as one of the finest pictures produced in this country in many years. Great credit is due Mr. Tourneur for the good taste he has displayed in the presentation.

Mr. Maurice Rosenthal, the local manager of the Allen Theatre personally recommends this superb photoplay to his many friends and clientele.

THE GREAT BLACKSTONE: WORLD'S MASTER MAGICIAN

The Grand Theatre offers the great Blackstone, known as the world's master magician. This is the first time Blackstone has ever appeared here, and the super-man of mysticism is prepared to open the eyes of those who doubt that the hand is quicker than the eye.

He comes with fifteen attendants, the largest troupe carried by any magician. He carries a carload of scenery and magical paraphernalia, offering the same program of novelties and sensations that made New York City gasp with amazement.

His mysterious and weir performance runs the gauntlet of magical innovations covering Oriental mysticism, physic phenomena, spiritualism, black and white magic, mind-reading and card manipulation.

Peculiar Bush Beans.

Careful tests have shown that certain kinds of bush beans which as a rule bear one good crop of early beans and then cease to produce, will, when started in flowpots under glass, produce a fine crop much earlier than those planted in the open soil, and continue to produce beans all through the summer up until the vines are cut by frost in autumn. It is supposed the age of the plant makes the difference, as the one started under glass is older before it bears any beans at all.

Make Best Use of Time.

Every man has the same chance in the use of time. One may be faster than another, but there are usually compensating conditions that equalize things. Not always to the swift is the race. Many a tortoise has beaten hares in life. It's the use of the hours that counts. Make the minutes hum with well directed industry and you have a profitable life in the making. It's every man's right to make the most of himself. He does this by his use of the minutes.

How Chinaman Drinks Tea.

The Chinaman in preparing tea places a pinch of leaves in a Chinese teacup, which is without a handle, pours boiling water over them and places the cover on the cup. In a few seconds the tea is ready for drinking; the covered cup is raised to the mouth, and, with the fingers of the hand holding the cup, the lid is moved just sufficiently to permit the liquid to flow into the mouth as the cup is tilted.

Where Gold Is Found.

India's production of gold is principally from Mysore. Russia is the oldest gold-producing country in the world. Mining is carried on principally in the Ural mountains, but climatic conditions impede progress. Mexico has many mines, but labor troubles have a restrictive influence on the industry. Other countries which produce gold in small quantities are China, Japan, Chile, Peru, Persia and Hungary.

"Pals" With His Daddy.

The other evening I had company and of course my small brother had to be on hand, and as usual was tormenting me. After so long a time, I said, "If you don't behave I will send you in to papa," and as he always has an answer for everything, I was not surprised to hear him say, "Well, I'm not afraid of dad, 'cause we are old pals."—Chicago Tribune.

Zinc Shapes at Boiling Point.

Zinc is ductile between 212 and 302 degrees Fahrenheit and can then be shaped as required. But when either above or below these limits it becomes brittle and unpliant and therefore not adapted for treatment. It melts at about 786 degrees Fahrenheit if volatilization is guarded against.

Tit for Tat.

A very fat man was much amused by the ludicrous appearance of a bow-legged youth, who called upon him with a message. "By jingo," he exclaimed, "you look as if you'd been riding a barrel!" The bow-legged one smiled as he retorted: "And you look as if you'd been swallowing one!"

Had a Narrow Escape.

"Yes, sir," remarked ... upon individual in the noisy clothes, "I'm a self-made man, sir—and the architect of my own fortune." "Well," rejoined the matter-of-fact person addressed, "it's a lucky thing for you that the building inspector didn't come ... at the time."—London Tit-Bits.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

Hayden stood with his mouth partly open. Almost a grotesque picture of terror he looked in that dim light. Then he spoke in an odd, strained tone, more to himself than to any one else:

"I thought you were dead," he said. "I told myself you'd never come back. Over and over—in the night—I told myself that. But all the time I knew—I knew you'd come."

A cry—a woman's cry—sounded from just outside the door of No. 7. Into the room came Myra Thornhill. Quickly she crossed and took Kendrick's hands in hers.

Kendrick looked into her eyes, sheepishly at first, then gladly as he saw what was in them. For the light there under the tears was such as no man could mistake. Magee saw it. Hayden saw it, too, and his voice was even more lifeless when he spoke.

"Forgive me, David," he said. "I didn't mean"—

And then as he saw that Kendrick did not listen he turned and walked quietly into the bedroom of No. 7, taking no notice of Cargan and Bland, who, with the other winter guests of Baldpate, now crowded the doorway leading to the hall. Hayden closed the bedroom door. Mr. Magee and the others stood silent, wondering. Their answer came quickly—the sharp cry of a revolver behind that closed door.

It was Mr. Magee who went into the bedroom. The moonlight streamed in through the low windows and fell brightly on the bed. Across this Hayden lay. Mr. Magee made sure. It was not a pleasant thing to make sure of. Then he took the revolver from the hand that still clasped it, covered the quiet figure on the bed and stepped back into the outer room.

"He—he has killed himself," he said in a low voice, closing the bedroom door behind him.

There was a moment's frightened hush; then the voice of Kendrick rang out:

"Killed himself? I don't understand. Why should he do that? Surely not because—no"— He looked questioningly into the white face of the girl at his side; she only shook her head. "Killed himself," he repeated, like a man wakened from sleep. "I don't understand."

On tiptoe the amateur hermits of Baldpate descended to the hotel office. Mr. Magee saw the eyes of the girl of the station upon him, wide with doubt and alarm. While the others gathered in little groups and talked, he took her to one side.

"When does the next train leave for Reuton?" he asked her.

"In two hours—at 10:30," she replied.

"You must be on it," he told her. "With you will go the $200,000 package. I have it in my pocket now."

She took the news stolidly and made no reply.

"Are you afraid?" asked Magee gently. "You mustn't be. No harm can touch you. I shall stay here and see that no one follows."

"I'm not afraid," she replied. "Just startled, that's all. Did he—did he do it because you took this money—because he was afraid of what would happen?"

"You mean Hayden?" Magee said. "No. This money was not concerned in—his death. That is an affair between Kendrick and him."

"I see," answered the girl slowly. "I'm so glad it wasn't—the money. I couldn't bear it if it were."

"May I call your attention," remarked Magee, "to the fact that the long reign of 'I'm going to' is ended and the rule of 'I've done it' has begun? I've actually got the money. Somehow it doesn't seem to thrill you the way I thought it would."

"But it does—oh, it does!" cried the girl. "I was upset for a moment. It's glorious news. And with you on guard here I'm not afraid to carry it away—down the mountain—and to Reuton. I'll be with you in a moment ready for the journey."

She called Mrs. Norton, and the two went rather timidly upstairs together. Mr. Magee turned to his companions in the room and mentally called their roll. They were all there—the professor, the mayor, Max, Bland, Peters, Miss Thornhill and the newcomer Kendrick, a man prematurely old, grayed at the temples and with a face yellowed by fever. He and the professor were talking earnestly together and now the old man came and stood before Magee.

"Mr. Magee," he said seriously, "I learn from Kendrick that you have in your possession a certain package of money that has been much buffeted about here at Baldpate Inn. Now, I suggest—no, I demand"—

"Pardon me, professor," Mr. Magee interrupted. "I have something to suggest, even to demand. It is that you and every one else present select a chair and sit down. I suggest, though I do not demand, that you pick comfortable chairs, for a vigil that you are about to begin will prove a long one."

"What do you mean?" asked the mayor of Reuton, coming militantly to Professor Bolton's side.

Magee did not reply. Miss Norton and her mother came downstairs, the former wrapped in a great coat. She stood on the bottom step, her cheeks flushed, her eyes ablaze. Mr. Magee, going to her side, reflected that she looked charming and wonderful and wished he had time to admire, but he hadn't. He took from one pocket the pistol he had removed from the hand of Hayden; from the other the celebrated package of money.

"I warn you all," he said, "I will shoot any one who makes a move for this bundle. Miss Norton is going to take it away with her. She is to catch the 10:30 train for Reuton. The train arrives at its destination at 12. Much as it pains me to say it, no one will leave this room before 12:15."

"You—crook!" roared Cargan.

Mr. Magee smiled as he put the package in the girl's hand.

"Possibly," he said; "but, Mr. Cargan, the blackness of the kettle always has annoyed the pot."

The little professor of comparative literature stepped forward and stood pompously before Magee.

"One moment," he remarked. "Before you steal this money in front of our very eyes I want to inform you who I am and who I represent here."

"This is no time," replied Magee, "for light talk on the subject of blonds."

"This is the time," said the professor warmly, "for me to tell you that Mr. Kendrick here and myself represent at Baldpate Inn the prosecuting attorney of Reuton county. We"—

Cargan, big, red, volcanic, interrupted.

"Drayton?" he bellowed. "Drayton sent you here? The rat! The pup! Why, I made that kid! I put him where he is! He won't dare touch me?"

"Won't he?" returned Professor Bolton. "My dear sir, you are mistaken. Drayton fully intends to prosecute you on the ground that you arranged to pass ordinance No. 45, granting the Suburban railway the privilege of merging with the Civic in exchange for this bribe of $200,000."

"He won't dare!" cried Cargan. "I made him!"

"Before election," said the professor, "I believe he often insisted to you that he would do his duty as he saw it."

"Of course he did," replied Cargan. "But that's what they all say."

"He intends to keep his word."

"I will shoot any one who makes a move."

CHAPTER XX.

The Professor Sums Up.

THE mayor of Reuton slid into the shadows.

"As I was saying, Mr. Magee," continued the professor, "Mr. Kendrick and I came up here to secure this package of money as evidence against Cargan and—the man above. I speak with the voice of the law when I say you must turn this money over to me."

For answer Magee smiled at the girl.

"You'd better go now," he said. "It's a long walk down the mountain."

"You refuse?" cried the professor.

"Absolutely. Don't we, Miss Norton?" said Magee.

"Absolutely," she repeated bravely.

"Then, sir," announced the old man crushingly, "you are little better than a thief, and this girl is your accomplice."

"So it must look on the face of it," assented Magee. The girl moved to the big front door, and Magee, with his eyes still on the room, backed away until he stood beside her. He handed her his key.

"I give you," he said, "to the gods of the mountain. But it's only a loan—I shall surely want you back. I can't follow ten feet behind as I threatened—it will be ten hours instead. Good night and good luck."

She turned the key in the lock.

"Billy Magee," she whispered, "yours is a faith beyond understanding. I shall tell the gods of the mountain that I am to be—returned. Good night, you—dear."

She went out quickly and Magee, locking the door after her, thrust the key into his pocket. For a moment no one stirred. Then Mr. Max leaped up and ran through the flickering lights to the nearest window.

There was a flash, a report and Max came back into the firelight examining a torn trousers leg.

"I don't mean to kill anybody," explained Mr. Magee—"just to wing him. But I'm not an expert—I might shoot higher than I intend—so I suggest that no one else try a break for it."

"Mr. Magee," said Miss Thornhill, "I don't believe you have the slightest idea who that girl is nor what she wants with the money."

"That," he replied, "makes it all the more exciting, don't you think?"

"Do you mean," the professor exploded, "you don't know her? Well, you young fool!"

"It's rather fine of you," remarked Miss Thornhill.

"It's asinine if it's true," the professor voiced the other side of it.

"I hope every one is quite comfortable," remarked Mr. Magee, selecting a seat facing the crowd. "It's to be a long wait, you know."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:

"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance. As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 230480) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $60.00 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said "and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada) "there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

Outlawing the Submarine

IN the deliberations at Paris and elsewhere since the armistice was signed there have been specific propositions toward a general limitation of armaments, and these propositions lean rather strongly toward outlawing the use and possession of submarines.

The danger of a repetition of the German submarines' inhuman warfare on commerce by some nation that the future may develop into similar irresponsibility and ruthlessness. This is the strongest argument of the abolitionists and is easily appreciated by everyone. Their opponents, while condemning the inhumanity of the German submarine warfare to the utmost, do not think that those past horrors should be a determining factor. They also point out the enormous effect on the war occasioned by the German submarine campaign, as compared with the actual cost of life. It is generally granted that the Germans failed in their plan to win the war by submarines only, because they could not bring them into service in sufficient numbers; at their best, the average number of Germans actually fighting at sea in submarines was about 1,000 officers and men, and there were literally hundreds of thousands opposed to them; the number of men in Allied vessels engaged continuously and exclusively in strictly anti-submarine work outnumbered the German submarine personnel many-fold. Exact statistics are not yet available, but estimates of the actual cost in lives of the German "unrestricted" warfare are between 10,000 and 15,000 - the best figures give about 12,000. Many single days' operations on land cost more lives than that and with submissional results compared with the effect of the submarines.

Those not in concurrence with the abolitionists think that the factor of possible mercilessness of submarine warfare should not be separated from bombing from the air and mines. As for the latter, the parallel seems closest. Only the absolutely ruthless submarine commander with the automatic mine which knows no difference between the bottom of battleships, hospital ships and passenger ships filled with women and children. That due attention must be given this point is shown by actual losses returns; the losses of British merchant ships during the war were by Submarines ..... 5,732,000 tons
Mines ..... 6,377,000 tons

A second argument given emphatically in favor of abolition is that submarines when restricted to their legitimate use of torpedoing the man-of-war of their enemy are not effective—as shown by the small losses of Allied surface warships caused by them in the last war. Those favoring retention point out the fact—as shown by captured instructions that the objective given German submarines—after there was a sizeable force of them—was merchant tonnage, because they estimated the results to be thus attained would soonest win the war for them. It is pointed out that, with the exception of the abortive attempt of last November for which their submarines only went to sea, the Germans never planned to have a fleet action and that during the encounters that did occur only casual German submarines participated. Submarine advocates therefore argue that the war furnished no data in the way of results in which conclusions should be based. However, it appears that of the 14 surface warships which the British navy lost during the war by enemy action 62 were sunk by torpedoes from German submarines.

The argument is made that [illegible] their decent and kindly [illegible]

WEDDED AT GRAVE'S EDGE

Remarkable Ceremony by Which Philadelphia Jews Hoped to Stop Ravages of Influenza.

With the hope of protecting the orthodox Russian Jews in Philadelphia from further ravages of the influenza epidemic two Hebrews were married at the first line of graves in the Jewish cemetery a few months ago. More than 1,200 Russian Jews watched the rabbi perform the wedding ceremony.

When the couple were pronounced man and wife, the orthodox among the spectators filed solemnly past the couple and made them presents of money in sums ranging from ten cents to a hundred dollars, according to the means and circumstances of the donor, until more than $1,000 had been given.

After the last offering the bride and bridegroom walked to the greensward farther from the graves, where a wedding feast was quickly spread from the two truckloads of food that others of the faithful had provided.

The marriage in a cemetery, with the idea of warding off the ravages of an epidemic, is a revival of a custom that has prevailed for hundreds of years among the Jews in the heart of Russia. When Russia was swept by cholera several centuries ago Jews died by the hundreds. Panic seized them, and they called a council of elders and rabbis, who decided that the attention of God should be called to the affliction of their fellows if the most humble man and woman among them should join in marriage in the presence of the dead.

So they asked a young man and a woman, who were unknown to each other and who were without wealth, to marry in order to save their fellows from the cholera scourge. The young people agreed, and the ceremony was performed. According to the tradition, the ravages of the cholera subsided within three days.—Youth's Companion.

A Papuan Fishing Net.

Somewhat skeptical concerning a story he had heard of how the natives of a South Sea island caught fish with a net made of spider webs, a recent visitor has been at some pains to see for himself all the evidence he could find and is now convinced that this remarkable fishing actually happens. The most explicit account comes from a man who a few years ago spent some time in New Guinea, where, says he, "one of the greatest curiosities I noted was the spider-web fishing net. In the forest here spiders' webs, six feet in diameter, abounded. They were woven in a large mesh, varying from one inch square on the outside of the web to about one-eighth inch at the centre. The web was strong in proportion to its size, and the natives, long ago discovering that it would serve to catch fish, had ingeniously set the spiders to spinning their fishing nets. At the place where the webs were normally the best, the canny native sets up long bamboo poles bent over to form a loop at one end, and this loop immediately becomes an invitation for any spider that feels inclined to spin a web. The spider finds the pole, goes to work, and presently the loop has been crossed and recrossed with the meshes of the web, and the Papuan fisherman has his fishing net ready. With these nets the Papuans are able to catch fish of about a pound in weight; and it is their custom for several men to set up poles for the spiders and then go off together for a fishing party with the spider-made contrivance.

Life of a File.

Efficiency experts have been studying files and find that the life of one of these tools, on the average, is 25 days' strokes. To employ a file for more than its normal period of usefulness, it is claimed, more than doubles the cost of the work.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Effect of Bolshevism.

What Bolshevism on the job, in full working array, will do is described in the current issue of Forbes' Magazine by Jacob de Julin, president of the Commercial Mission of the Finnish Government. Early in January of last year, while on a business trip to Helsingfors, he was warned that the Reds had taken over his plant at Lake Samia, promoted a machine offer to the post of manager, discharged most of the original working force, every one of which was glad to escape, and undertook to run the plant according to true Bolshevist rules. The result was that without technical direction and trained executive skill they managed to run the mill exactly two weeks, and thereafter it operated no more. There were seven months' supply of food—which was short in Finland—at the plant. The Bolshevists took it over and divided it. By the time the White Guard, or anti-Bolshevist troops, arrived on April 26, this food was all gone, for the Reds had not only eaten double rations but had sold much of it.

Finally the White Guard forced the Reds to surrender — and Mr. Julin was again in charge of the plant. Out of 2,000 employes only 150 were left, the rest having fled or had been made prisoners. To sum up: The net result of Bolshevism in the plant was idleness for everybody and comfort for nobody for nearly all of the three months because of the lack of skilled men, waste of food and raw materials, with starvation in its wake, terrorism, disorder, looting and robbery. And after Mr. Julin resumed control of the plant it took him nine months to restore it to normal efficiency—nine months to repair the ravage of three.

Ancient Sweetmeats.

Who invented sweetmeats and confectionery?

Diving deep into the story of the ancients the writer has come to the conclusion that some, if not all, the credit must go to old friend Noah.

He it was who first hit upon the idea of boiling down the starch of the wheat and the juice of the grape. The result was a paste, said to be the original of our present-day "Turkish delight."

Whole fruits, particularly figs and dates, were used for flavoring purposes, the latter especially for preserves and cakes. In old tombs date sweetmeats have been found; also records of honey jellies.

The making of confectionery, in fact, goes back 3,400 years, proof of which is to be found on the walls of Egyptian tombs.—Tit-Bits.

Dust of Meteorites.

To an enormous extent the bed of the ocean is covered with lava and igneous stone, says the Family Herald. Still more remarkable is it to find the floor of the ocean covered in many parts with the dust of meteorites. These bodies whirl about in the heavens like miniature comets, and are for the most part broken into innumerable fragments. We are all familiar with these heavenly visitants as shooting stars; but it has been only lately discovered that this cosmic dust forms layers at the bottom of the deepest seas. Between Honolulu and Tahiti, at a depth of 3,315 fathoms—over two miles and a half—a vast layer of this material exists. Falling upon land this impalpable dust is indistinguishable; but, accumulating for centuries in the sea depths, it forms a wondrous story of the continuous bombardment of this planet by cosmical bodies.

A Tall Chimney.

A big reinforced concrete chimney in Japan, 550 feet high and tapering from 42 feet 8 inches to 27 feet 5 inches, is the second tallest in the world. Measurements have shown that a wind of twelve miles an hour vibrates the top less than one-twenty-fifth of an inch. A wind of 54 miles increase s the vibration about an inch, and with hurricane force it reached 7.7 inches, the oscillation lasting about 2.51 seconds.

Try to Be Agreeable.

We should wisely cultivate the art of being agreeable, not only in the company of our business associates or those persons whom we meet socially but in our own homes as well. By thus deporting ourselves we shall find life more pleasant and people in general—the home folks in particular—more considerate. On the other hand, if we continue to think only of ourselves we shall find life a trying affair.—Exchange.

Rugby Football.

At the famous school of Rugby, England, originated that form of football, now bearing the name of the school. An inscription, at Rugby reads: "This stone commemorates the exploit of William Webb Ellis, who, with a fine disregard for the rules of football, as played in his time, first took the ball in his arms and ran with it, thus originating the distinctive feature of the rugby game. A. D. 1823."

Frogs as Wasp Eaters.

The common green frog has been discovered to possess an insatiate greed for wasps. This extraordinary appetite does not seem to be in the least checked by an occasional sting. The protecting color of the frog, which sits motionless upon leaves, no doubt deludes the most wary of insects into a sense of security.—Nyack Evening Journal.

Commerce and Art United.

The period of Antwerp's great rise to commercial prosperity was also that of the city's chief artistic production. The names of Quentin Matsys and of Rubens are specially connected with the city, for Rubens was essentially an Antwerp man, although he was not, like Teniers and elder, and Van Dyke, a native of the place.

Japanese as Gymnasts.

Nearly all Japanese soldiers are expert gymnasts, and every barrack has a gymnasium. So well trained are they that in less than half a minute they can scale a wall 14 feet high by simply leaping on each other's shoulders, one man sustaining two or three others.

EDITOR'S MAIL

WHY VOTE NO.

Editor Review: Here are ten reasons which, I think, should influence us to vote NO four times at the coming referendum:

1—Because the O. T. A. has proved itself to be the best Act yet passed in the Province of Ontario to control the drink traffic and limit its evils.

2—Because thousands of homes have been made happy through the reformation of a drunken husband and father.

3—Because thousands of children who were ill-treated and half-starved through the drink are now well fed and cared for.

4—Because many families who were deeply in debt have now a nice balance at the bank.

5—Because even the liquor men themselves admit the fact that whiskey is of such an evil nature that it is necessary for it to be kept under control.

6—Because we cannot destroy a bad thing too soon.

7—Because present conditions of life, with its multiplicity of means of mechanical transport, makes it imperative that people's brains should be kept free from the effects of alchol which would result in tragedies too awful to contemplate.

8—Because the return of the drink traffic would work evil to all and good to none except the drink seller, and then only in a monetary sense.

9—Because liquor is the enemy of the home, the church and the state, and fights against all law both of God and man.

10—Because the drink traffic has wrought more evil in the world than war, pestilence and famine combined, has caused rivers of tears to be shed, has severed the dearest ties, has shown no pity for the wife or mother, widow or orphan; it has taken shoes from the baby's feet, blighted the fairest promise of youth, destroyed the noblest manhood, poisoned the lives of the most virtuous women and wrecked the eternal future of millions of souls. It is the foe of God and man.

Yours truly,
GEORGE LEADER.

NO O. T. A. DEBATE.

Editor Review: Mr. Burnham intimates in Thursday's issue of the Examiner that "he has accepted my challenge to debate the Ontario Temperance Act" with him, so I suppose it falls to me to say that this statement has been made, in perfectly good faith I believe, on account of a slight misunderstanding. I tried on a former occasion to make it clear that I had no intention of taking part in a set debate with my representative in Parliament, but evidently I failed to make my meaning clear, to him. A set debate with but two debaters is generally regarded by the public as a personal contest, and those who attend are for the most part more intent on who shall be the winner than on what is the truth.

If Mr. Burnham, your humble servant, or anyone else has anything to say that might be expected to make for the public good, it is my conviction that it is a public duty to say it. If you will be so good as to allow me the further hospitality of your pages, I would like to contribute an open letter to Prohibitionist, one to anti-Prohibitionists, and one to Ordinary People in which my views of the situation would be a contribution for the common good. If the justice of my contentions are not evident, it will be the duty of those who see my error to put me right, and to warn all and sundry against my doctrine. I feel that I may well trouble both you and your readers with my views, for the reason that I am simply one of the common people, having no axe to grind and being tied up to no party.

I am, dear sir,
Yours for the common good,
JOHN GALT

The funeral was held today to the Little Lake Cemetery.

BEAUTIFUL MEMORIAL SERVICE IN MEMORY OF LT. ARTHUR HUYCKE

Rev. Dr. Wilson Delivers Inspiring Address Filled With Glowing Praise of War Hero

A touching memorial service was held in Trinity Methodist Church, yesterday morning in honor of Lieut. Arthur Huycke, younger son of His Honor Judge Huycke. This was the occasion of the dedication to Trinity church of three handsome windows and a bronze tablet by His Honor Judge Huycke and family, in memory of their son, who gave up his life while serving King and Country.

Lieut. Arthur Huycke went up in his aeroplane a year ago last Thursday in pursuance of his duties as an aerial officer and never was heard of again. Hope of his recovery was entertained for some time, but finally abandoned.

Four Years of Trial.

It was very fitting indeed that Rev. Dr. Wilson should deliver the address on this momentous occasion for as he expressed it himself in his opening remarks, he had passed those four terrible years together with the congregation of Trinity church and had with them watched the boys and girls go out from their midst to serve King and country. During that time their faith had never faltered because they had felt that behind the shadows of adversity God kept a guardian eye on the defenders of Christian liberty and justice.

And now that faith has been rewarded for our Empire has emerged blood stained from the battle, but still the old flag flying.

A Noble Empire.

"This is a noble empire of ours," the speaker said. "Our King saw rallying around him, the sons of our empire, ready to sacrifice their all in his defence. This is the widest empire of all time. For thousands of years it has been a world wide Empire, and still stands firmly knit together. This empire sprang from many bloods—the native Briton, the Saxon, Celt and Norman—but everywhere British thought prevails and the steady Saxon principles hold sway.

An Old Idea.

"The idea of memorials is old," continued Dr. Wilson. "When Israel crossed the River Jordan, they erected a monument to the Lord for their salvation. The British people have always been strong for erecting memorials in honor of fallen heroes; and it is proper that they should be. Memorials in memory of Canada's fallen heroes tell of heroism of the past, of the principles held so dear that half a million Canadians offered their lives as a sacrifice for them. We owe a debt to those who have fallen, and those who have returned to us, for all offered themselves a ready sacrifice."

Dr. Wilson went on to plead that we honour our heroes because we owe to them for honoring us. Why did they go? Why did Lieut. Arthur go? Because so many heard the call of God to volunteer and offer their lives a living sacrifice wholly acceptable unto Him. These men were too Christian and too British not to heed that call, but gave their lives to God, for the women and children and those who were afraid to fight. It was not for money, honour, glory, that these men fought, but for those principles we are now called upon to live up to. What a tragedy it would be if all those Canadians had laid down their lives for principles we are afraid to stand behind. It is our part now that this land is safe, to keep it pure and clean.

Thought For Others.

Speaking of his friend who had gone, Dr. Wilson said, it brought to his mind the thought of many others, boys he knew and who had been very close to him and who had made the supreme sacrifice. Then he thought of Lieut. Arthur Huycke. His character was always strong, sweet and beautiful. God had made him good. One of his intimate companions had stated that he never heard Arthur say a mean thing. He remembered the first time he had seen him when as a boy. He was engaged in a game of football. He had noticed this, that he "played the game," and he had played the game to the end. He remembered one Sunday morning when Arthur had pleaded to be allowed to go to war his father told him that if the war lasted one year more he might go. He remembered how a look of contentment overspread his countenance as he learned that some day one would answer the call from heaven and join those of his own build across the sea.

Reverent Character.

He had always noticed in Arthur's character a reverence for the house of God, for aged people and things sacred. It was from the church that the best of the men went overseas. Arthur had grown up into an atmosphere of worship and pure Christian surroundings, so it was no wonder he displayed such strong, true and faithful character. His life was short and well spent. Paul lived only a short life, but it was worth more than the long life of Methuselah.

A Mother's Heroism.

The speaker referred to the heroism of Mrs. Huycke when she went to console her over the loss of her son. She had such honor for that boy that she said she would rather see him die the noble death that was his fate, than live to an old age tending to trivial matters. This was a true mother's heroism.

He did not know if Jesus had started out in life intending to be crucified, but He did know that He had set out to do the will of His Father, even unto death. Arthur had belonged to that Christian host of heroes, who, like their Master, thought only of duty. His life was one of self-sacrifice and service for others.

Civilization Saved.

Civilization had not been saved by the survival of the fittest, but by the sacrifice of those who had laid down their lives for others. What service are we rendering? Dr. Wilson asked. If a man does not serve he does not really live. The only thing that matters in living is service.

Dr. Wilson, in conclusion, referred to the solos "Crossing the Bar," and "Peace," which were beautifully sung by Mrs. King and Mr. Park, as consolation messages from the gospel, and he closed his appropriate address with the words "greater love hath no man than this that he layed down his life for his friend."

Glowing Praise.

Canon Davidson added a few words at the close of the service in glowing praise of the men who had sacrificed their lives for Canada, and especially of Lieut. Arthur Huycke whom he had always regarded as belonging to a family of pure Christian character.

HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE LOSE THEIR LIVES IN GULF OF MEXICO HURRICANE

Corpus Christi, Texas, Slowly Emerging From Wreckage Left in Storm's Wake---Number of Injured Will Total Over Two Hundred---More Than Three Thousand Homeless---Seventy Bodies Washed Up From Bay Shore Territory---Ten Foot Tidal Wave

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Corpus Christi, Texas, Sept. 16.—Corpus Christi today began slowly emerging from the wreckage caused by a Gulf hurricane which struck the city at an early hour Sunday.

Correct Estimate Impossible.

It was impossible this morning to get anything like a correct estimate of the fatalities in the city proper, but the death list was placed by some officials at between 15 and 25, and that was regarded by many as far too conservative. In some quarters it was said that the number injured would exceed two hundred. One report in circulation today was that 120 bodies, most of them recognized as residents of Corpus Christi, had been taken from a reef on Nueces Bay.

Three Thousand Homeless.

More than three thousand persons were made homeless by the storm.

Fears are entertained that a heavy casualty list will be reported from surrounding towns as several of these were directly in the path of the storm.

Huge Tidal Wave.

The storm sent a tidal wave ten feet high over the business and North Beach districts of the city. That the loss of life was not appalling was due to a prompt warning sent out to the lower portions of the city early Sunday morning urging all persons at exposed places to seek safety in the higher districts of the city.

Seventy Bodies Recovered.

Sinton, Texas, Sept. 16. — Seventy bodies of flood victims, mutilated beyond recognition, have been recovered at Sinton relief headquarters for the entire surrounding bay shore territory.

$20,000,000 FRAUD BY GANG SWINDLERS

SIFTING VAST "INDUSTRIES" BASED ON FABULOUS BOND ISSUES.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Hotbeds of "industry," established in Victoria, B. C., and Ottawa, Ont., by Charles W. French and his gang of alleged swindlers, were under investigation today, together with S. E. Taylor head of the S. T. Taylor company, 1322 South Wabash avenue, said to have printed all the commercial paper for the French concerns, by Assistant State's Attorney John P. Melaniphy.

Bonds Ready For Marketing.

Bonds, stock certificates and other commercial paper the greater amount of which is said by Prosecutor Melaniphy to have been printed by the Taylor concern, were ready to be placed on the market within a few weeks. The guarantors of the paper, which meant the Federal Guaranty company, were to satisfy proposed purchasers that the stock was genuine. This was to be done by exchanging other worthless paper issued by French for the "securities" issued by the syndicate.

An idea of the ramifications of the outfit may better be obtained by a perusal of the following concerns established at Victoria, none of which had a dime of capital, so far as it is known to the state's attorney.

The Pacific bank, "paid up" capital, $2,500,000.

The Pacific Development company, capital $1,050,000.

The Pacific Coal company, no capital mentioned.

The Pacific Realty company, no capital mentioned.

The Pacific Power company, no capital mentioned.

The Pacific Equipment company, no capital mentioned.

The Pacific Shipbuilding company, no capital mentioned.

The Pacific Railway company, no capital mentioned.

$20,000,000 in Paper Issued.

In order to provide money for the various concerns personal paper was issued by French amounting to $20,000,000, which was to be exchanged for that of the guarantors. In addition to the Pacific concerns, those of the Atlantic title, Which were mainly of the same business, were to be similar.

STEWART ALLEGES CHIEF THOMPSON IMPLICATED IN LIQUOR DISAPPEARANCE

Gives Evidence as to Reports in This Direction—Sergt. Blade, Constable Boyd and Detective Newall said to Have Publicly Ridiculed Inspector Stewart, When in Discharge of His Duties—Investigation Promises To be a Lengthy Sitting

The cross-examination of Mr. Hamilton by Mr. Hall was continued yesterday afternoon at 2:15 o'clock. Under cross-examination, witness stated that he told Mr. Stewart all about the plans for stealing the whiskey under the protection of Detective Newhall, while on the train going to Toronto. Mr. Stewart had informed him that if he stood behind this information he would get his license back, which was the only way he had of making a living.

Prompted by Mr. Stewart

He admitted that while he was making the statement in Mr. Sanderson's office, Toronto, he had been prompted by Mr. Stewart. He had insisted at the time that the information should be strictly private and Mr. Saunders and Mr. Stewart both understood this. Mr. Stewart promised this information would be kept private.

Witness stated that he had not received his license because Mr. Stewart had come to him and stated that he would not receive it because he had sold more whiskey since the time he made the statement.

Mr. Stewart had asked Hamilton to sign the statement but he refused to do so, because it did not state it to be true. Also he saw no need of signing it as it was to be kept strictly private.

Witness stated on cross-examination that Mr. Stewart told him that Mr. Dumble had canceled his license at the time Sullivan was fined for a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act. Sullivan had always denied being in any way connected with the whiskey, which was seized at Kendry.

Police Alleged to be Hampering

Mr Stewart had made a statement to the witness that the police were in the habit of warning him of Mr. Stewart's approach towards his hotel. That this was true the witness emphatically denied.

Sergt. Blade Next.

Witness swore he never heard of Blade trying to steal whiskey out of Stewart's office except the time Mr. Stewart had told him of the occasion. Mr. Stewart had told him of this as though he believed it to be true.

Mr. G. N. Gordon was the next witness to enter the box and swore that Chief Thompson had requested him not to call any members of the police force as witnesses for the defence of the Sullivan liquor case for he wished to show his force was assisting the inspector rather than than the defence. Mr. Gordon thought in justice to his client he was called upon to use members of the force as witnesses of the defence and did so.

Stewart in the Box.

Then Mr. Stewart was summoned to give testimony. He swore he had declined to listen to Hamilton's story while on the train. He stated that he had received Hamilton's license but withheld it on acount of Hamilton's connection for a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act, which was his duty, he swore that he had been informed by Bert Howden that the police were in the habit of giving warning to Hamilton of Stewart's approach. He had not received this information from any other source. Howden refused to give information in police court because if he did he would not be able to get a drink, he had stated.

No Encouragement Given

Referring to his trip to Toronto with Hamilton, Mr. Stewart swore that Hamilton had started to tell his story without any request from him. He told him of the frame up for stealing the whiskey by Newhall and Sullivan, and told him that in the event of the theft he (Stewart) was to be accused with the stealing. Then he declined to listen to any more of the story. The witness swore he had never prompted Hamilton while the statement was being made. He swore that Hamilton had never stated to him that he did not believe the statement.

Statement Not Kept Private.

The witness admitted showing his copy to certain citizens of the city in defense of himself as he had been informed tha he was accused by certain members of the police force of seizing water at Kendry while the whiskey was let off at Indian River. Witness emphatically denied having mentioned Sergt. Blade's name to Hamilton, while on the train going to Toronto, as stated is Hamilton's evidence.

Doubtful Methods.

Mr. Stewart made the peculiar statement that between the hearing of the evidence and the conviction in the Sullivan case he had gone to Mr. Dumble's office and stated to him that he was certain Sullivan was the guilty man and had at the same time, showed him Hamilton's statement.

Friction Between Departments

Until November 1918 he had always got along harmoniously with the police force. At that time there had been some liquor confiscated by the police force. The chief of police had requested the board for permission to distribute the liquor among the hospitals. The Board requested Mr. Stewart to investigate and he found that the hospitals were not in need of liquor at that time. After reporting this to the Board he learned that the chief of police had been ordered to hand the liquor over to him. One day he met the chief on the street and mentioned the matter to him. The chief refused to give him any liquor and accused him of getting liquor under other people's name. This was quite corect stated Mr. Stewart as he had received liquor along with other parties under their name in 1917. This was done quite legally. Mr. Stewart stated that he always had liquor at his house although he never used it himself. Replying to a question from Judge Huycke, he stated that even if the O. T. A. passes, he thinks he can still have it the same.

Some excitement was shown at this stage when Mr. Hall jumped up and implored Mr. Stewart, who had while giving evidence, implicated several of the force including Chief Thompson in doubtful practices, to make these in the form of charges so that they could be defended. "It is the act of a coward," continued Mr. Hall "to spread such information as that under the cloak of being informed without the courage to even attempt to prove the charges."

The court adjourned at this stage till 10 o'clock this morning.

The morning session of the investigation opened with Mr. O'Connell suggesting charges against the Chief of Police for seizing confiscated liquor in several cases definitely given and of appropriating the same to his own private purposes. Also he suggested charges against Sgt. Blade, Constable Boyd and Detective Newhall, for publicly ridiculing Inspector Stewart and thus encouraging friction between the two departments.

Then Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Hall engaged in an argument as to the nature of the investigation. Mr. O'Connell submitted as they had been requested to come to the investigation to submit information they were not called upon to make definite charges.

Mr. Hal submitted that for fairness to the defense definite charges

PETERBOROUGH FAIR SHOWS A MARKED SPIRIT OF PROGRESS

Generous Ebibits of Arresting Nature—Grand Stand Attractions Tense Running and Trotting Events-

The lure of the exhibition proved irresistible to quite a number of citizens last night, despite the threatening weather, and the general concessions of opinion was that Peterborough's Fair shows marked improvement each recurrent event, the past few years.

Grounds and buildings and booths were refulgent with electric illumination, which offered equally as good opportunity for taking in the fair at night as durnig the day. Moving the main building freshened up with bright and cheerful interior renovation, to midway along the main avenue from George street entrance, is quite an improvement, while annexing to this building's ground floor large booth accomodation for exhibits that properly belong to the main structure, gives an appearance of that enlargement which is to be substantially put into effect next year.

The exhibits in art, high grade house furnishings, electrical novelties, stoves, hardware, musical instruments and premier merchandise in general, reflect credit on the cooperation of our business men to advance the interests of the exhibition. The floral displays are beautiful and complete in the extreme, while the showing of vegetables and farm truck, point to the conclusion that nature has been commendably generous to tillers of the soil this year, notwithstanding all unpromising forecasts midseason.

The exhibits of stock is a revelation as to considerable advance in this direction, while the magnificent showing of all grades of poultry reveals quickened interest in thoroughbred breeding.

The midway itself offers the usual attractions, including Ferris wheel and a merry-go-round of modern form, song and dance artists and a freak or two.

The special stage attractions in front of the grand stand, last night, were of exceptional merit and the fireworks by Professor Hand, illumined the air with coloured splendour, and art designs in fire quite irresistible to young and old.

Altogether, with improved grounds added accommodation, increased prizes, good music by the 57th Regiment and G. W. V. A. Bands, well-selected attractions, and exclusive exhibits from industrial, mercantile and farm enterprise, to say nothing of trotting and running races by fast horses, Peterborough Industrial Exhibition should this year, if the weather man is only kind, break all previous records in point of attendance.

The Races

These events yesterday afternoon proved of arresting interest to hundreds. Good horse running and trotting under excellent governing conditions offered tense sport.

In the running race "Old Pop," 5-year-old, son of "Martimus", owned by Chas Crew, Toronto, won two firsts; "Ella Jennings" 6-year-old, owner H. Gibson, Toronto, took two seconds and "Little Pete," 3-year-old J Lewis, Toronto, owner, won two thirds. "Waska," 4-year-old, owned by R. E. Whitewood, Toronto, came to the post fourth in both heats. "Mike Carlin" property of J. Wilson Toronto, was withdrawn after getting fifth place in first heat; and "Hemisphere," owned by J. Johnston Toronto, suffered the same fate after racing in sixth place.

Two-thirty trot—"B.U.B." property of Dr. Johnston, Port Hope, won two firsts, one third and two seconds "Mona Hall" owned by Sam Palmer, of Port Hope, took two seconds and three firsts. "Babe Parker," owned by H. Parker, Marchmount, won three seconds and two thirds. The other entries were withdrawn.

MUST HAND OVER EX EMPEROR

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 16. — Premier Lloyd George is determined to have it settled that the Peace Conference demand from Holland the handing over of former Emperor William, according to Le Journal today. The newspaper asserts that the premier, who is planning to leave Paris today, will insist before his departure, upon having such action decided upon.

BOY CHARISTERS CANNOT LAND

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Sept. 16. — Eighteen boys, members of the Vatican Choir of seventy voices, which arrived here today on the steamship Belvidere, were sent to Ellis Island by immigration officers and not allowed to land, because they are under eighteen years of age and not accompanied by their parents.

This action closely follows the detention o fCarlo Rodini, an italian tenor who arrived last week and was ordered excluded from the country by a special board of inquiry, on the ground that, having been engaged as a member of a metropolitan opera chorus, he was a contract laborer.

MEDALS PRESENTED FOR SAVING LIFE

DON. FITZGERALD AND CHAS. BEGLY DECORATED BY JUDGE HUYCKE

For saving the life of the little daughter of Mr. A. G. Roberts last spring in the river near Inverlea Park, two boys, Don Fitzgerald and Chas. Begley, were today presented with the Royal Humane Society medals. The presentation was made at the Exhibition Grounds in the presence of a large concourse of people including all the Boy Scouts of the city. Mayor Duncan acted as chairman and after a few complimentary remarks, called upon Mr. Roberts to relate the circumstance under which the rescue was effected. Mr. Roberts had his little daughter with him on the platform.

His Honor Judge Huycke was then introduced by the chairman and in his customary good style spoke of the bravery of these two lads. He said that even while the most of Canada's young manhood was overseas fighting the Hun the act of these boys showed that there were boys left who, though too young to go to fight the country's battles, were made of the same stuff, and no matter what the casualties had been there were boys who were growing up who would be proud to take the places made vacant by the fallen.

The Judge said that the medals were of bronze with the words "For Bravery" engraved thereon. Bronze was the most enduring of metals and he was sure that the memory of the brave deed for which these medals were awarded would endure forever. He then presented the medals to the boys and after he had congratulated them the Boy Scouts gave three rousing cheers. The choir of school children, under the direction of Miss Rannie sang "They Are Jolly Good Fellows."

Rev. Father Phelan, in a few well-chosen remarks, replied on behalf of Charles Begley and Rev. Canon Davidson replied on behalf of Don Fitzgerald.

CHILDREN'S DAY A HUGE SUCCESS

SINGING BY STRONG CHOIR OF LITTLE FOLKS IS ATTRACTION TODAY.

Today was Children's Day at the Fair and it is safe to say that nearevery child in Peterboro was on hand. Most of them were accompanied by their parents at that. The singing of the choir of school children was one of the attractions this afternoon and great interest centred around the new stand near the main building. A choir composed of the smaller pupils of all the city schools under the direction of Miss Rannie, directress of music in the public schools, sang several patriotic selections. In their performance they showed the result of great care and much training and their numbers were received with much appreciation by the large crowd of people who surrounded the stand. Miss Rannie deserves great credit for the manner in which she has trained this choir and the children themselves deserve no small measure of praise for their effor

This is Substance of Message Delivered to Canada's National Industrial Conference This Morning—Adopt a Spirit of Human Goodfellowship

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 16.—"There is no use Canada trying to settle disputes in Europe if problems in Canada cannot be settled first, and the Labor problem is one of our greatest." This was the message to the National Industrial Conference delivered by John Bruce of Toronto, who is spokesman for the Labor group, this morning. He appealed to everyone to drop all feelings of hostility and political views and approach questions before the conference in a spirit of human good fellowship.

No Voting Power.

Thethird group in the conference, representing agriculture, civil service, G. W. V. A., and public interests generally, aha been given voice in shaping committee reports, although their delegates on the committee will have no voting power.

Industrial Relations.

A special committee was decided upon to take up consideration of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Industrial Relations, that the findings o fthe commission be put into effect in all work controlled by the Government, where the principles of democratic management can be applied. It was pointed out by Tom Moore, president of the Dominion Trades Congress, that the purpose of this committee was simply to give civil servants and public employes the same rights as enjoyed by employes of corporations and private employers.

WAR-BRIDES ARRIVE

White Star Steamer, Cretic, Reaches New York With Number on Board.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Sept. 16.—The White Star steamer Cretic arrived here today with 273 cabin passengers on board, including 120 Canadian officers and thirty Canadian war brides.

NO LABOURERS APPEAR TO BE OBTAINED IN THIS CITY

The people were clamoring for a long time for the work to commence on the new Hunter street bridge to supply labor for the "hundreds" out of work in this city. For the past three or four days the Russell-Townsend Company have been advertising for laborers, and have announced that unless they are supplied with labor from local sources in a very short time they will be forced to go outside the city, in order that they may go properly ahead with their work.

Does this mean that everyone is supplied with employment in the city or are Peterborough laborers declining to take up the pick and shovel and do the rough work? At any rate, if there are any laborers out of work at the present time they can have no excuse, for they are wanted at the bridge, and wanted immediately.

SERBIA WILL SIGN

Only Remains Rumania to Agree to Peace Terms With Austria.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 16.—Serbia, one of the two nations interested which did not sign the Austrian peace treaty, Roumania being the other, will attach its belated signature to that document, according to the Echo de Paris, today.

Peter S. McLaren, a pioneer contractor and lumberman of Bruce county, is dead at the age of ninety.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENTS.

THE STORY OF the highways of Ontario is very similar in main features to that of the New England States. A period of pioneer effort a century or more ago was followed by a period of toll road construction; then came the era of railroad buildings, during which common roads were neglected and toll roads became unprofitable; and latterly there was an awakening, which took practical form in 1901, when an Act of the Provincial Legislature appropriated $1,000,000 for the construction of model roads.

A description of the present road situation in Ontario should be prefaced by the explanation that the scheme is largely based upon an excellent system of municipal organization, consisting of town (township) councils and county councils, composed of the heads of all township or other local municipalities within the county. The ability to carry on good local self government is notably a quality of the Anglo-Saxon race and while it has been suggested that roads were in a state of neglect prior to 1901, this is to be qualified by the fact that a good system of municipal government had been built up, was doing much with roads in a local manner, and was ready for greater responsibilities.

The Highway Act of 1901 was one of provincial (or state) aid, and authorized a Provincial grant of one-third the expenditure made by a county council on any road designated for improvement. This Act has been made the basis of subsequent legislation and has developed into permanent aid for county roads, both construction and maintenance. There are two classes of county roads, to the more important of which the Province now pays sixty per cent of all expenditure, and to secondary roads the Province contributes forty per cent. of county expenditure.

In 1917 a marked step in advance was taken when a Provincial Act was passed authorizing a system of provincial highways to be wholly under the control of the Provincial Highways Department.

The trunk of this system is a leading road from east to west across the Province from Windsor (opposite Detroit) to the Quebec boundary, near Montreal, with main branches to the Federal Capital Ottawa, and to the international boundary at Niagara Falls.

The Provincial highway is now merely in its initial stages. It follows a line of early pioneer routes and toll roads directly across the Province, joining a series of the chief cities. In addition to being a series of important market roads for farm traffic, in its relation to urban centres, it will undoubtedly become a great commercial route for business and for motor truck transportation.

The limited system as at present designated serves directly more than half the population and assessment of the Province. As a line of main traffic bequeathed from pioneer days, it is of exceptional value for development to meet modern needs.

Thus it will be seen that the road organization of the Province is comprehensive, making provision for main trunk lines undert he sole control of the Provincial Government; the chief market roads radiating from cities, villages and shipping points and for which county councils are responsible, but aided by substantial provincial subsidies, and purely local roads for which township councils remain responsible.

The Province of Ontario has, in all, 42,000 miles of graded roads, of which 22,000 miles, or 52 per cent., have been surfaced with gravel, broken stone, concrete or other material, a record of improvement which affords an excellent basis for further development. These surfaced roads, it is true, are in many cases not well built nor are they all well maintained. Nevertheless the mileage is representative of the ambitions of the rural population, and of their ability to carry on the further development of these roads under the stimulus of provincial assistance and control.

County road systems now aggregate 9,500 miles, which are designated for construction and maintenance under county and provincial co-operation. Of these roads, 3,000 miles have already been substantially macadamized or gravelled. It is estimated that the county roads and provincial highways carry fully 80 per cent. of the rural traffic, leaving only 20 per cent. of the traffic to be cared for by township authorities. Townships have still the greater mileage of roads to care for, but the unit of cost is not mileage, but traffic; and it is therefore evident that the bulk of the cost is now assumed by the central and stronger authorities, county and provincial.

Provincial expenditure is now based largely on but not confined to income from motor vehicle registration. This in 1918 amounted to 109,000 vehicles with a revenue of $1,214,000. A registration of 140,000 vehicles in 1919 and a revenue of at least $1,500,000 is certain. Townships are yearly spending about $2,500,000 on local roads and counties are spending about $4,500,000 annually on market roads, so that, coupled with provincial and Federal appropriations, a total annual outlay of $10,000,000 on the rural roads of Ontario is well within the combined financial ability of the municipal and central governments.

Road improvement will undoubtedly be facilitated throughout Canada by a recent Act of the Federal Government setting apart $20,000,000 in aid of provincial highway construction. This financial aid will be made available in proportion to population, so that Ontario will be entitled to nearly $6,000,000, conditional upon provincial expenditure of $15,000,000 in the next five years.

The Ontario system differs in an important respect from that of the majority of the American states. A state as a rule takes over a system in short units for construction, and cannot make expenditure for repair until after construction. Under the Ontario method the council or province designates its entire system as a unit and immediately becomes responsible for repair and maintenance. Many portions of the provincial highway system were formerly toll or country roads. A moderate amount spent on substantial repairs will enable the Province to give immediate service, and it is anticipated that by a process of development and heavy surfacing the entire system can be brought into passable condition for through traffic by the end of 1920. More permanent construction can then follow as required to meet the needs of heavy local traffic.

The American system usually places emphasis on construction with maintenance in a secondary position. Ontario is establishing and placing emphasis on a general scheme of maintenance for the roads as they exist, to be the after co-operative with substantial development and construction.

Ontario has designed a network of roads that will form a magnificent heritage for the future as a lure for the tourist. Southern Ontario is surrounded by the cool waters of Lake Huron, Georgian Bay, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, the River St. Lawrence and the Ottawa River, and the northern districts are a web of delightful inland lakes and streams.

THE NEW PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

THE DISCOMFORT of using makeshift offices in the museum building during another winter session is hardly a pleasing prospect for members of Parliament, says the Ottawa Citizen. It is highly desirable that everything possible be done to expedite the work on the new buildings. But very few responsible members would wish to cause any of the permanent work on the buildings to be sacrificed for the sake of getting into the new national edifice one session earlier than would otherwise be the case.

The interior work on the Commons chamber is sufficiently advanced to impress the ordinary layman with the dignity and nobility of the structure. One is conscious, too, on visiting the buildings under construction, that this fine architectural environment is bound to tend to elevate the whole tone of Parliament. When the Parliament buildings are ready to be taken over by the legislators of the Dominion of Canada, it will seem to be as if, out of the war, a new tablet had been prepared for the Canadian people, on which to write their records of political development in the science of government.

Great credit is due to the architect, Mr. John Pearson, for the breadth of vision he has displayed in planning the new Parliament buildings, on a plane of thought in harmony with the spirit of the Canadian people in this momentous period of history. Some of the most important work from a national point of view has still to be done; for architecture is not concerned alone with use and comfort, but is controlled also by aims of beauty, grandeur and other aesthetic principles. Ruskin says, in the "Seven Lamps of Architecture":

> Architecture is the art which so disposes and adorns the edifices raised by man..... that the sight of them contributes to his mental health, power and pleasure.

In the haste of German kultur to subdue the world some of the finest works of Gothic architecture were destroyed. The new Canadian Parliament buildings will be one of the first national works of art in building to emerge from the war period. Any member of Parliament who may, at present, incline somewhat to a feeling of impatience at the prospect of another winter session in the inconvenient temporary quarters of the museum building, should pay a visit to the new buildings under construction. Temporary personal inconvenience would soon seem to recede to the background, as the national character of the new buildings, built to reflect the new Canada in the unfolding years ahead, is appreciated.

FORTY VEHICLES.

How to Make Unique Trip Round the World.

Now that the Atlantic has been crossed and there are plans afoot to fly over the Pacific, the day may not be far distant when some aerial Magellan will make an airplane tour around the world.

There are still many corners of the world where airplane, automobile and even the horse would be curiosities. And if a man set out to tour the globe and "do as the Romans do" in respect to adopting native conveyances he would have to—

Resort to a donkey in Spanish America and in the Holy Land;

Climb aboard a camel to traverse African deserts;

Cross some rivers of India on the inflated skins of bullocks, and others by a bridge of one rawhide rope;

And in China be prepared to climb into a jinrikisha, a sedan chair or a wheelbarrow.

A few of these curious means of travel are described in a communication by O. P. Austin as follows:

"In all parts of that great line of deserts, stretching from North Africa, the camel is everywhere in evidence; the total number in the world being estimated at about three millions.

"Not only is the camel a valuable freight carrier, but he serves as the travelling car of the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, the Morgans, and the Harrimans of the desert. When he is chosen for this more pretentious service, a light frame work is placed upon his back and covered with cloths to screen the occupants from the sun and the observation of the passers, and decorated with pompons of varied colors. In this gorgeous compartment, which may be not inaptly termed the 'Palace car of the desert,' the master of the camel train places his wife and children, his choicest merchandise, his cooking utensils, and daily requirements, and travels in state, the observed of all observers, the envy of the wandering native of the desert.

"On the Euphrates and the Tigris are still retained the curious water transports of centuries ago — the raft of skins and the circular boats. These rafts are sustained by inflated skins, prepared for this especial purpose, and after the raft floats down the river to its destination the inflated skins are removed, the air permitted to escape, and the skins carefully folded and carried back to the upper waters, where they are again inflated and used as the support of another, and still another raft.

"Even more curious, to the eyes of the traveller from other parts of the world, are the circular boats, made of wickerwork and covered with skins, or made water-tight with pitch, which are still in daily use on the Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

"The three principal methods of transportation of people in Central and Southern China are the sedan chair, the jinrikisha and the wheelbarrow.

"Probably more freight and more passengers are transported in China by the wheelbarrow than by any other land method. The wheelbarrow there used differs from that used by us, in the fact that the wheel is set in the centre, and thus supports practically the entire load, while the handles are supported in part by a strap or rope over the shoulders of the man who operates it. As a result, the wheelbarrow coolie in China will transport nearly a half ton on his vehicle."

PEACE-MAKING AT PARIS

Mr. Sisley Huddleston is first in the field with a book describing events before and behind the scenes up to the signing of the Treaty with Germany. It is an unfinished tale and it will be many years before we know the whole of it, but it is not too soon to set down the vivid first impressions which are so large a part of the truth, and which also are so apt to fade before the historians get to work. The tale he has to tell is not different in substance from that which he has unfolded day by day in our columns during the last eight months, but in the consecutive form in which it is now presented it enables us to trace some of the cross-currents which have driven all the negotiators from the course which they laid down for themselves at the beginning and compelled them in the end to consent to a settlement, of which none of them is the author, and which, in a measure is a disappointment to all of them. For Marshall Foch from one point of view, the whole course of events since January has been blighting of hopes and ambitions, and none of them, we may conjecture, believes in his heart that the compromise finally accepted is more than a passing phase which must be revised according to experience. Mr. Huddleston lifts the curtain sufficiently to enable us to see the divergences of views which for long periods paralysed, and at certain periods all but broke, the Conference, and he does not disguise his opinion that much was sacrificed that might have been saved by the indecision and weakness of the advocates of a clean peace. Especially he is of opinion that peace should have been made with Germany on the principal issues within a few weeks of the armistice and the details left over for leisurely settlement. This would have enabled the blockade to be raised, and Europe to get back to work, while the Conference completed its task. It would also have protected the Conference from the incursions of domestic politics and electioneering which so greatly weakened the hands or some of its members. But Mr. Huddleston is by no means wholly pessimistic. He holds the League of Nations Covenant, even in its present form, to be a great achievement, and believes that with its aid the Treaty can be so shaped and amended as to be the foundation of European peace, provided always that the Allies give up their shilly-shally and discover some intelligible working policy towards Russia.

Of Mr Lloyd George, Mr. Huddleston paints on the whole, a sympathetic portrait. He presents him as a good man struggling with adversity, sincerely anxious to deal justly and humanely with Germany, in earnest about the League of Nations, but a good deal hampered by electioneering pledges, and yielding rather too often to his inclination to act as the wizard of conciliation. But even greater were President Wilson's adversities, and at a critical moment his hand was fatally weakened by the elections in America, which threw a doubt on his claim to speak for the people of the United States. Possibly his chief mistake was to have come to Europe without a plan for the League of Nations adjusted to the American Constitution. He was supposed to be the chief exponent of the idea, but, as it developed under British influence, he was again and again compelled to take up an attitude of seeming hostility to his own proposal, lest in detail it should conflict either with the American Constitution of with overwhelming American sentiment on such matters as the Monroe Doctrine or the colour question. That the Covenant emerged from these difficulties was mainly due to Lord Robert Cecil's sagacity and energy, but the course of events inevitably weakened the President's hand, and prevented him from taking the uncompromising stand on principle which had been looked for when he came to Europe. Europe, he found, was much more complicated, at close quarters than it looked from Washington, and little by little he was drawn into the characteristic compromises of the old diplomacy, and too easily persuaded that they did not conflict with his fourteen points. It is easy to blame him, but the alternatives before him were immensely difficult and dangerous. Should he have broken up the Conference and departed in the George Washington, as he all but did, at one peculiarly exasperated moment? Should he have put his foot down against the Sarre Valley proposals as he did against the Italian annexation of Fiume? Should he have insisted on his own "acid test," as regards Russian policy? Mr. Huddleston poses these questions rather than answers them, but his narrative enables us to see the pitfalls which await an American President who comes to European politics with an American experience and the American Constitution on his back.

Mr. Huddleston gives us also a lively picture of the third great figure of the Conference, M. Clemenceau, who will perhaps be judged by history to have been its dominating personality. M. Clemenceau had the immense advantage of working on his own ground. The others were in a sense his guests, and it was inviddium for them to oppose the French view, except on the most peremptory grounds. The "Tiger" appears with all his familiar characteristics, unceasingly persistent, courageous and energetic, and never more so than after he had got the assassin's bullet in his shoulder. A believer in the old ways, a sceptic about the reversal of 1871 to be the great things, and stood on guard for them against Leaguers, pacifists, and humanitarians. At all stages of the negotiations we see the passion of France against the defilers and devastators of her territory flaming out at those who would soften the terms or pass a sponge over the past; and for this the Germans have largely themselves to thank. The journalists generally have been somewhat hard upon Mr. Balfour, but Mr. Huddleston pays him a handsome compliment. He says "it was chefly on his counsel that Mr. Lloyd George a tell that "the memoranda ... he prepared were models ... and that ... most ingenious combinations ... two opposite ideals were reconciled came from his subtle brain." Perhaps it could have been better for the world if there had been fewer of these subtleties, but Mr. Huddleston goes too far in his way of saying that the Conference must have come to nothing and broken up without agreeing but for these contributions from Mr Balfour.

Mr. Huddleson abounds in vivid detail; it provides the context which is necessary to make the principal events intelligible; it shows, e.g., in the Russian affair, the numerous fatalities which have prostrated good intentions, and it leaves us reflecting on the enormous difficulty of ideal settlements in the ancient secret entanglements of the old diplomacy. A book of this kind can be nothing more than a first draft of a first chapter in the new volume of history that has now to be written, but to get that right is highly important, and it is well that eye-witnesses of scene should record their impressions while they are yet fresh.—(Westminster Gazette.)

A Womans' Warning

Why will women continue to drag around in misery, suffering with the ailments peculiar to their sex, that drag them down to misery and despair, with backache, nervousness, the blues, derangements and irregularities, when there is a proved remedy for just such conditions?

For more than forty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been overcoming these ailments until it is now recognized everywhere as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

For Twenty Years the Friend of This Woman

Akron, Ohio.—"I am fifty-one years old and going through the Change of Life, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is doing me lots of good. I felt run-down and weak but since taking the Vegetable Compound I am much stronger and better. I can eat and sleep, am gaining flesh and can do more work than I have for some time. Twenty years ago your Vegetable Compound helped me during childbirth. I wish you would print this in your paper so that other women may read it. There is nothing better for the relief of suffering womanhood than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It does away with sickness and nervousness which is very often responsible for the lack of perfect harmony in the home."

FARMS MORE VALUABLE

When the Well Water Is Pure and Wholesome.

Price of Hogs at High Level—So Prepare to Rear Fall Litters of Pigs—Choose the Strongest and Healthiest Young Sows—Litters Should Be Farrowed Before Cold Weather.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE well is the usual source of the farm water supply, and a good well, that is, one which supplies plenty of pure fresh and wholesome water the year round is certainly one of the most essential and valuable assets of the farm. Without it no man could live there for long, to say nothing about bringing up a healthy family, or building up an efficient dairy herd. The well must be there first and last and all the time, and we cannot conceive of an intelligent man buying a farm without a good well if he intended to live on it and make it pay dividends.

Fortunately, most of Ontario's farms are well supplied with water, in fact it is a rare thing to find a farm where it could not be secured in sufficient quantities by drilling to reasonable depths. The supply, therefore, will probably never cause us any serious worry, but judging by a recent report on analysis of many well waters from this Province one seems justified in concluding that there is still need for education of the rural public in regard to the protection and care of the farm well. The following suggestions will be found helpful to any farmer desirous of making his water supply safe against possible underground and surface contamination.

The first step in the solution of this problem of pure water supply is the location of the well. This should be by all means on ground higher than any source of contamination such as barnyard, cesspool, or outside privy. If there should be no choice in location, and this cannot be done, then the well should be kept a considerable distance from such contaminations, at least 100 feet in clay, and 200 feet or more in sandy soils, and the cribbing and top of the well specially protected as detailed later against the entrance of any seepage and surface washings. In the second place the cribbing for at least 10 feet below the surface should be made impervious to water so that any contamination in solution reaching the well would have to pass down through this extra depth of soil before getting into the well, when in all probability it would be taken up by the soil and never reach the well water. This may be done in case of an old well by putting a wall of puddled clay 1 foot thick and 10 feet deep around the well cribbing, and in case of a new-dug well, or recribbing an old one, by using large concrete tile for the cribbing and setting the joints thoroughly in rich cement. Before the tile are placed in the well the outsides should be washed with pure cement plaster in order to fill up all pores and make the tile absolutely impervious to soil waters. Thirdly, the cribbing should be extended at least one foot above the ground level and the soil banked up to the top of it to provide good surface drainage away from the well. Fourthly, the well should be provided with a strong and tight-fitting cover made of heavy plank or concrete so that it will always be safe for man and beast and proof against the entrance of dirt, small animals like frogs, etc. Even better still the pump may be placed over a shallow dry well to one side and the top of the real well made absolutely tight by a concrete cover. In this case the well should be ventilated by putting a small iron pipe, with the exposed end turning downwards, through the top or cover. And, fifthly, the stock should not be allowed to tramp about close to the well.

What has been said refers chiefly to dug wells, but even the drilled or driven wells should be well drained and protected at the top, for otherwise contamination may work down along the well casing and reach the water, especially if the casing is not tightly driven into the rock below.

Attention to such matters of construction and protection of the farm well as I have detailed and an occasional pumping out and cleansing of the well with a little lime will assure a pure and wholesome water supply.—R. R. Graham, B.S.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Early After-Harvest Cultivation.

"A stitch in time saves nine." In case of weeds prompt and thorough after-harvest cultivation prevents many thousands of weeds from developing seeds, and thus saves hours of tedious labor the succeeding season. Early after-harvest cultivation is one of the best ways to destroy annual and winter annual weeds, such as False Flax, Corn Cockle, Wild Buckwheat, Pigweed, Ball Mustard, Wormseed Mustard and Annual Sow Thistle. Plough shallow not more than three or four inches deep immediately after harvest, and harrow and cultivate frequently. By the shallow ploughing the weed seeds are kept near the surface and by the frequent stirring of the soil they are made to sprout, and having sprouted they are easily destroyed by further cultivation.—Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. College, Guelph.

SILKS OF GORGEOUS COLOR

What is perhaps the most wonderful exhibition of old French silks in the world is to be seen in the library of the International Buyers' club at 130 West Forty-second street, New York, says Scientific American. The collection comprises more than 700 specimens of silk manufactured by the descendants of the Huguenots who settled in Spitalfields and Bethnal Green, London, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. It has lately come into possession of the International Buyers' club and is said to be the most valuable of its kind in the world.

The fabrics of the collection are as durable and the colors as brilliant as if they were turned from the looms yesterday. The disintegration of the silk fabric that one sometimes sees in Chinese mandarin coats has not taken place. Indeeed, the old French silk workers did not develop their art from the ancient Chinese, who jealously guarded the secrets of their craft. The silk industry was originated in the western world by two Persian monks who had resided in China and who in about 550 brought to Constantinople the eggs of the silk worm in a hollow bamboo tube. From these contents developed the silk industry of Europe.

There is an elusive delicacy about the French silks that quite defies description. Many of the French patterns are quite up to date and are said to be in line for any revival of styles. This is particularly true of the tiny patterns in checks, blue, red, green and brown in fields of white silk, all of which are adapted to cravats. The gorgeous colors are shown in the silks of upholsteries; the most delicate and evanescent in those evidently intended for women's apparel or draperies. Wonderful dyes the French weavers used, vegetable dyes that increase in their beauty as the years go by. Gold, pure yellow, brilliant gold, is shown; white, ivory, flesh, coral, turquoise, apricot, ocean green, ashes of rose, chartreuse, honey, maple, geranium, scarlet, cardinal, garnet and a thousand other tints that would be hard to match today even when we have 323 shades of navy blue alone.

The strength and durability of the silks in this collection, some of which are hundreds of years old, suggest that with reasonable care they are proof against disintegration of the ages. There is not a cracked, worn or thin sample among them. The brilliance of their dyes, some of whose formulae are at present lost to the world, is evidence that the world may never be forced to be completely dependent upon any one nation for its dyes and that the forgotten lore in the art of dyeing fabrics reveals the varied future that may be revived under the spur of necessity.

One of the Last of Old-time "Reds."

Tom-o-Wah-Teet, who remembered the first coming of the white man to the Klickitat valley, Washington state, has gone to the happy hunting grounds at the age of at least one hundred and ten. He was known and liked by everyone in the region, and would tell vividly of the events of days when white people invaded the territory of the Yakimas and Klickitats. He was present at the council of Walla Walla plains in 1855, and was a warrior under Kamiakin in the Yakima Indian war that followed. He took part in the block house battle and massacre of white settlers at the Cascades, where Lieut. Philip H. Sheridan was in command of the troops sent from Fort Vancouver to defend the garrison. After the revolt was crushed Tom-o-Wah-Teet was always friendly to the whites, and his many services have been repaid, for since he became nearly blind about five years ago and could no longer support himself and his aged squaw by working on farms, those he once aided have looked after his wants.

Rubber Plantations.

In the past the world's supply of rubber has come chiefly from the Amazon. Today the demand is so great that Brazil supplies only about one-fourth of the product. The Malay peninsula, Ceylon, Sumatra, and of late the Philippine Islands, have been cultivating rubber plantations extensively, and it has been discovered that rubber trees will grow almost anywhere along the equator where there is sufficient rainfall.

"Here's my idea of a razor
—one that sharpens its own blades"

"Yes, sir, you certainly must admire the AutoStrop Safety Razor when it comes down to real shaving."

"Why, I remember with my other razor I always had to throw away a blade after a couple of shaves. Now, I simply take it and give it a few turns on the strop and it's as good as ever."

"As for shaving, well, when I get through—and it only takes three minutes—my face is as smooth and slick and comfortable as when the head barber used to go over it. When it comes to cleaning, all I do is simply put the blade under the tap and wipe it off. There's no taking the razor to pieces and messing around with parts. In fact the whole thing is so simple and easy, I wish I had had one long ago."

For $5.00 you get razor, strop and 12 blades, complete—and a money back guarantee of satisfaction.

UP TO THE MINUTE MOTOR EXHIBIT

ARRESTING SHOWING OF CARS AND TRUCKS FROM GILLESPIE'S GARAGE.

A booth just east of the George street entrance to the Fair Grounds contains an arresting exhibit from the Gillespie Garage, Aylmer street, city. The showing consists of up-to-the-hour models of one and one-half ton Maxwell truck, a five-passenger Maxwell car, a one and one-half ton Maxwell lorrie, a Chalmers six-cylinder five-passenger auto, and a Cleveland tractor—the latter a veritable money and time saver on any farm, and which is attracting in its demonstration considerable interest. In designing this farm tractor the object was to produce a machine which would adapt itself to the widest possible variety of uses, and that this object has been achieved is testified to by the thousands now in use by farmers in Canada and the United States.

The gas-saving and all-service Maxwell passenger car is too well known to require extended reference; suffice it to say that its newest models embody all the qualifications desired by the autoist both for city and country use.

The beautiful Chalmers motor. Mr. G. A. Gillespie's newest acquisition, is a dream for getting every last bit of power out of gas, and a car for comfort and general utility that cannot be surpassed. The dominating feature of this car's construction is its famous Chalmers hot spot engine with its Ramshorn manifold and advanced specialities in design. The Chalmers chassis, in fact, has been so perfected within the past two seasons that it does seem that nothing is to be desired further in the way of a collection of well-balanced units which make for a perfect whole.

Mr. J. L. Gillespie is in charge of this commendable exhibit, and visitors will find courteous attention and acceptable demonstration. Give this booth a call when at the Ex

SHOWING OF RICH FURS

Barries Ltd. Exhibit Furs and Skins of Many Rare Animals.

The exhibit of Barries Ltd., in the main building comprises furs of every description. There are sets of seal, opposum, natural and black lynx, crossed fox, silverpointed fox, white fox, black fox, red fox, plucked beaver, blue and grey squirrel sets. Coats of plucked beaver, coon, otter, a combination of opposum and Hudson seal trimmed with lynx. An exhibit of great interest is that of a bunch of real Alaska seal and a bunch of Russian ermine skins. There are fur sets made up of muskrat, mole rat, badger, Persian lamb, civet lynx, Russian ermine, Canadian ermine and coats of Hudson seal. A large assortment of stoles, muffs, etc. goes to make this exhibit a most interesting one. Many of the coats shown are lined with the new pussy willow linings in various shades. A ten-foot polar bear mounted is on the floor in the centre of the exhibit. Great interest is being taken in guessing the value of the furs on the float in yesterday's parade and announcement of the winner will be made immediately after the fair closes. Altogether this exhibit is one of the most comprehensive in its line ever seen in Peterboro and is well worth seeing.

INDUSTRIAL MEN IN BOWLING EVENT

INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPHIC TOURNAMENT IS SUGGESTED.

To prevent a laxity of interest in sporting events amongst the industrial workers, because of the cold winter season which is now almost upon us, an International Industrial Telegraphic Tournament has been suggested, which will no doubt create a great deal of enthusiasm in the industrial concerns throughout the United States and Canada. A tournament similar to one proposed, will, because of the great expanse of territory it covers, determine just which team is the real class of the ten pin game amongst the industrial workers.

Each five entered will bowl at its home alleys, the scores to be wired to headquarters immediately upon the completion of each game. This scheme of handling the Tourney will attract teams from all over the United States and Canada, as it will obliterate the expenses that would be incurred in paying for the travellin' of a team entered to any certain city which might have been chosen for the holding of a meeting of this kind.

One of the provisions in the rules makes it emphatic that bowlers entered must be employes of the concerns which they are to represent not less than two months prior to receipt of entry. This rule will prevent the sudden strengthening of teams which might occur in some cases for the purpose of winning a meet of this kind.

Over eight hundred concerns interested in athletics and recreations of all kinds for their employes have been invited to enter a team. Those who have not as yet been notified can secure full particulars regarding the rules, etc. governing the tournament suggested, by communicating with W. V. Thompson 623 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago.

GOES 25 MILES FOR MORE TANLAC

FARMER SAYS IT RESTORED WIFE'S HEALTH AFTER HE HAD SPENT HUNDREDS IN VAIN.

"Well, sir, it is twenty-five miles from here to where I live, and I came all that distance to get home Tanlac," said W. M. Nance, a well known and prosperous farmer who lives at Irricana, Alberta Canada, while in the Liggett-Findlay Drug Store in Calgary, the other day.

"You just ought to seethe way this Tanlac has brought my wife out continued Mr. Nance, "and here of late I have been feeling mighty bad myself, so I thought about the best thing I could do was to get started on Tanlac as quickly as possible. Now my wife's trouble was of five years standing, and during that time I spent hundreds of dollars trying to get something that would help her, but it was just that much money thrown away. She had a bad case of stomach trouble, and everything she ate would cause gas to form so bad that she would hardly get a good breath. Then she was so nervous and restless that she couldn't sleep at night. She also suffered from headaches, and sometimes she would get so dizzy that she couldn't stand on her feet. She just kept getting worse all the time until she was just past going altogether.

Well, I noticed that Tanlac was highly recommended for that kind of trouble, so I bought a bottle of it and she commenced taking it. In all my life I never saw anything to equal the way my wife improved after she commenced taking Tanlac. Why, she has gained at least fifteen pounds in weight and is as well and hearty as she ever was in her life. She has a fine appetite, and eats just anything she wants and she never suffers a particle afterwards. She does all her housework now, and it doesn't seem to tire her a particle. Now, that is what Tanlac did for my wife, and when I commenced to go down hill a short time ago, Tanlac was the first thing I thought about, and after seeing what it did for my wife, I am sure that it will soon put me on my feet. Yes, sir, Tanlac is a real medicine and you may count on me to say a good word for it every chance I have."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co. Ltd. In Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd.; In Fowlers' Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood, by G. Pringle & Son.

EQUALS EXHIBITS AT TORONTO FAIR

DUFFUS GARAGE DISPLAYING AT EXHIBITION FULL LINE OF CARS. FARM TRACTORS MILKING MACHINES.

The Duffus Garage, with its competent sales staff in charge, is displaying a full line of Ford models, including Touring, Sedan, Coupelet, and Ford one-ton truck; also a 1920 Dodge Brothers' Touring Car, and Gray-Dort "Special," with all the latest improvements, including gasolene tank on rear, emergency brake lever, new style top, etc.

In addition to the above they are exhibiting the marvellous Fordson Farm Tractor and Oliver Plow, and other power farming machinery.

They are also showing the McCartney Milking Machine, which is recognized as the most up-to-date milking machine on the market.

The Duffus Garage holds the record of being the first to exhibit automobiles at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition some seven or eight years ago, and from year to year their exhibit has grown until it is now equal to anything at the Toronto Exhibition, and their many customers and prospects find it a great pleasure to visit the exhibit and familiarize themselves with the new models and up-to-date changes from time to time.

HEINHZMAN PIANO CO.

Exhibit of Pianos, Player Pianos and Phonographs.

The Heintzman Piano Co have an exhibit of pianos and phonographs which are worthy examples of the instruments handled by this well-known firm. This exhibit comprises Heintzman pianos, Princess pianos, Cecilian Player Pianos, Victrola and Brunswick phonographs. Of the latter the one done in mahogany is an especially attractive exhibit. It is equipped with the new sound horn and in the lower compartment is space for keeping records. The attendants are very obliging and will play almost any record one would ask to hear as well as demonstrating the playing qualities of any of the pianos.

THAT VOTERS' LIST

Sixty Citizens Notified of Omission of Names From List.

To the sixty or more citizens of the Centre Ward, Peterborough — bounded on the west by Bethune St., on the east by Water St., on the north by Hunter St., and on the south by Sherbrooke St. at whose whose homes I called in company with Rev. Mr. Greatrix, re the referendum voters' list:

I appeared on Saturday morning last in court held by His Honor Judge Huycke on your behalf, and my testimony was not taken and your names were not put on the voters' list. Announcement was made that court would be held on Thursday this week, Sept. 18. You will have an opportunity to appear before the Judge on that date or of having some one whose evidence the Judge will accept appear on your behalf. If you cannot go yourself, I would suggest that you be very particular to secure the proper person to represent you. The facts in two cases which I heard on Saturday morning may help you.

The first is that of Miss Blank. Miss Blank appeared at the desk and was sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Four questions were asked. You swear that you are twenty-one years of age; that you have lived in the country at least twelve months that you have been a citizen of Peterborough for three months, and that you are a British subject. That was satisfactory. Her name was put on the list. She gave similar evidence regarding her sister, and her name was put on the list. When questioned regarding a third party, whom she wished to represent she was sure the woman was a British subject, but her evidence was not accepted, and the woman's name was not put on the list. She will have to appear herself if she is to have a vote.

Mr. Blank appeared at the desk. He was sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. He came to represent two men who board at his house, who come out from Toronto on Monday and return on Saturday. He testified that he had known them for five years, that they had lived in the country for twelve months, that they had been citizens of Peterborough for three months, that they were 21 years of age and were British subjects. When asked now he knew they were British subjects he answered that he had asked them and they said they were. Their names were put on the list.

Do not neglect this last opportunity. My list bearing your names has been handed in but you must go and certify to it or have some one do it whose evidence the Judge will accept or you will not have a vote on October 20th.

HAVE THREE EXHIBITS

The Turnbull Co. Show Variety of Home Furnishings.

The Turnbull Co. has three exhibits in the main building and all are well worth looking at. A complete living room is shown furnished with a handsome cane chesterfield and two easy chairs upholstered with beautiful tapestry, a massive mahogany library table, Wilton rugs, curtains and cushions. A model hall is shown containing an umbrella stand, a table and a mirror. A beautiful Axminster runner is also a part of the hall furnishing. In the Economy Basement exhibit is seen a complete line of kitchen cabinets, equipped with all the numerous articles one could wish for, ranges, and all manner of kitchen utensils.

Turnbull's Economy Basement is well known and all who attend the Fair should see this exhibit.

NOTICE BY THE VOTERS' REGISTRATION BOARD

Persons entitled to be put on the lists are warned that the Revising Officers will sit tomorrow at the Court House for the purpose of disposing of all appeals as yet not disposed of under the Notices of Appeal regularly given, and on Thursday for the purpose of disposing of all appeals which have come in since the commencement of the Sittings up till Tuesday last. Take notice also that for the South Ward Mr. Hatton will on Thursday next sit from 10 a.m. to 12 noon in the morning at the County Council chamber, and from 2 o'clock to 5 o'clock in the evening at W. G. Freeburn's store, 168 Lock street, for the purpose of disposing of all appeals from the South end. The Board has ordered that the lists must be finally settled by Thursday. Should, however, this not be possible, the last and final sitting will be on Friday next. Have your name on by Thursday next if you wish to be safe.

Chairman.

TWO SPLENDID SERMONS AT MARK ST. CHURCH.

Large congregations were present at Mark Street Methodist Church on Sunday to hear two splendid discourses delivered by Rev. G. E. Ross.

The pastor chose as his morning subject, "God Touched Man." God was the first ruler, but the people got tired of God, just as they have grown tired of the local preacher, and the class meeting, one of the greatest forces in the church today. So God chose Saul as king, and He retired into the shadow. However, God touched the heart of Saul and his band of men. It is a great thing for the preacher and his band of people when God touches their hearts and they have the spirit of God. God-touched men are practical men. God-touched men are moral reformers and will do what is right even if they suffer. God-touched men are brave. God-touched men are united in purpose, aim and ambition.

The evening text was found in Revelations iv 3: "There was a rainbow round about the throne." All along the ages God's men and women have met death with a smile on their faces. We like to think of of heaven as quietness, rest and peace. The throne stands for unquestioned law, justice, majesty and truth. Rainbow stands for love, mercy and grace of God. Both God and man were encircled by the rainbow. We can never go outside His rainbow. His love and care. There is a rainbow over against the cloud of trouble. You are included in the bow. No man is outside the mercy of God if he is on this side of death and is inside the rainbow.

A duet "Rock of Ages," rendered by Mr and Mrs. Ross, was greatly appreciated by the evening congregation.

LETVIA WILL MAKE PEACE

London, Sept. 15. The Government of Letvia has accepted the offer of the Russian Soviet Government to begin peace negotiations, according to a Russian wireless despatch received from Moscow.

FREED AFTER SERVING 10 YEARS PUNISHMENT

MAN CONVICTED OF NEGLECT IS EMANCIPATED AFTER NEW TRIAL.

A case which deserves much thoughtful consideration is that of Wm. H. Barron, 103 Morgan Street, Bennington. For ten years Mr. Barron suffered the agonies caused by Rheumatism. At times he was bound down to foot by the grip of Rheumatic pains. On the advice of a friend he stood for a new trial and used T.R.C.'s.

Read what he has to say:—

"I have been a sufferer from Rheumatism for ten years. Have been so bad at times I could not move hand or foot for months. A friend advised me to try Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules, and I have been thankful ever since. They worked wonders for me, and I have never felt any return of the disease."

It is practically impossible to obtain evidence stronger than this testimonial, and a word to the wise is sufficient. If you suffer, have a trial of T.R.C.'s.

Ask your druggist or write us for our new booklet telling all about it and costs you nothing (Templeton's, 142 King West, Toronto). We send T.R.C.'s anywhere on receipt of $1.00.

WAR TACTICS FROM THE AIR.

Aeroplanes will give an exhibition of the above under the direction of Capt. R. H. Pearson, M.C., during the Peterborough Fair. These fliers gave an exhibition every evening at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto under the direction of Col. Barker, V.C., M.C., and people marvelled at the daring loops and battle formation shown. The machines used are all German Foockers captured during the war.

PERLEY GOES BACK

Ottawa, Sept. 15. — Sir George Perley, who has been in Ottawa for some months, will return to London England, early in October to resume his duties as High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain.

Sir Edward Kemp, Overseas Minister of Militia, will return to Canada in the near future.

OPEN LETTER TO PROHIBITIONISTS

Fellow Prohibitionists, allow me to offer you my sympathy. You are called upon to take a dose of medicine that is but little to your taste, and in addition you are expected to be cheerful while you take it; in fact, you are expected to admit that the medicine offered in the form of the Ontario Temperance Act is all that is required to make you happy. Will you allow me, as an out-and-out total Prohibitionist of over forty years' standing—for I stood for total prohibition before I was ten years of age, and got licked for my pains—to ask you in all seriousness to take your medicine with as few wry faces as possible. We want the total suppression of the traffic in strong drink, being fully persuaded that there will be trouble in some measure so long as the popular drug is procurable; but we must admit that we are not everybody and, as the general public shows signs of being willing to go with us as far as the O. T. A., it will be our best policy to act on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread.

It will be difficult for us to vote for a measure which allows the importation of any reasonable quantity fo any kind of alcoholic drink for private use, but it will be something worth while to have the temptation of the open bar removed, together with its attendant vicious treating system. With the bar removed there will be a great lessening of the number of recruits for the ranks of the alcoholic drug habit, and so we may reasonably hope that as the time goes by there will be less and less importation and less and less drunkenness with more and more disapproval of it by the community.

It is difficult for us to vote for a measure with which the public will likely be content for a long time to come, and which falls so far short of what we want, but we must remember that all legislation partakes more or less of the nature of a compromise, and that while we do not get what we want, the other party is not getting what it wants. I know that we shall be told that we ought to be content with the O. T. A., that it is a Prohibitionist law, and that we are unreasonable if we ask for more, but, given time, I am convinced that we shall yet have total Prohibition by the will of the people of Canada. Thoughtful students seem to be agreed that it can come only in one of two ways—either by a gradual approach or by a big battle. I am not by any means sure that the people of Ontario are ready to give us the victory now, or in the near future, but even if they did there would certainly be a strong beaten minority, and there might be a great many who would feel that they were performing a public duty in preventing the law from being effective. I judge that we would get Prohibition sooner if we simply stood out for nothing less, but I fear that it would not be so secure or so satisfactory. Would there not be a better chance for a successful clean-up if the benefits of even a measure of sobriety were exhibited to the public over a period of years? Some of us would die before our aims were accomplished, but so would many of those with the drink crave and so there would be less cry about the hardship of not being able to procure the drug.

I have been asked how, as a Prohibitionist, I can vote for the O. T. A., and certainly that is a reasonable question, and one like a good many more reasonable questions, in that it is much easier to ask it than it is to answer it. I hardly know yet how I am to bring myself to vote for the sale of beer with an alcoholic content of 2½ per cent. by bulk and strong enough to intoxicate, about twice as strong as what is permitted in the United States. However, I have made up my mind to do it, and I now appeal to those who are on the Prohibition wagon with me to climb down, even if the other team laughs at us, and show that we are minded to play the game of give and take. We know that the other fellow is not having a good time, either. It may pay us in the long run to have earned the right to be regarded as having supported what to us is a distasteful measure in order that the public good might be promoted. The O. T. A. is not to us an ideal measure by any means, but it is the best thing in sight for us, and for the country, and half a loaf is better than no bread; so let us fall in line with the great mass of citizens who are wedded to no one idea in connection with the drink problem but who, because they consider that to vote "No" to all four questions of the referendum will be good for the country without inflicting very great hardship on any one, are going to vote to leave the Act just where it is.

I am your hopeful fellow-sufferer,
JOHN GALT

AN OPENING FOR SETTLERS IN CANADA

RUSH OF IMMIGRANTS DECLARED ASSET IN CANADA'S PROGRESS.

London, Eng. M. D. B. Hanna, President of the Canadian National Railways, said he was a firm believer in the future of his country, and he sounded a clarion call to his fellow countrymen to work and produce so that the greatest advantage may be got out of the new fields which spread over the land waiting the touch that will make them give forth their great wealth.

The great rush of settlers was also commented on as an assert in Canadian progress. "The high-water mark in the flowing tide of British settlers to our country," said Mr. Hanna, "was reached in 1913, when over 150,000 immigrants arrived from the United Kingdom simultaneously with these welcome relatives of ours came British capital, and I know it found in Canada many opportunities of profitable investment. Naturally, the war has deprived us of the opportunity of welcoming settlers while sterner matters were in hand. Now that is over, and to those who contemplate a new home in Canada, we say with all the warmth at our command, 'Come. We will welcome you; you will like us.' Canada is a land of promise. We have to realize that promise for our mutual advantage."

Mr. Hanna spoke of the great natural resources which await development. In this the transport system of the country will have a part to play, and Mr. Hanna readily gave his view on this point. "The railways," he said, "are absolutely necessary for the contemplated increase of production, and it is a fortunate circumstance that they are capable of carrying much greater traffic than they are now called on to handle. That is an important point."

"In a word," said Mr. Hanna, "we want Canada to become one of the great nations of the earth. She is qualified for the position; we mean to occupy it. We look to the other parts of the Empire to lend a hand. We don't ask it as beggars; we are out to do a deal which will be of natural advantage to both parties. The missionaries have found outlets for an trade; our goods have spoken for themselves; and we mean to expand in the markets where we have gained a footing. Our success in this direction will not be a selfish achievement. It will be in the interests of the great Empire of which we are proud to form a part."

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat, Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy, the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad. Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

QUEBEC SCHOOL FIGURES

ELSIE FERGUSON AS A FRENCH NEWSPAPER WOMAN IN HER LATEST ARTCRAFT PHOTOPLAY "HIS PARISIAN WIFE" AT THE ALLEN THEATRE.

Heroine Weds BostonLawyer, the Marriage is Unhappy and After the Wife Wids Fame as an Amthor, the Couple are Happily Re-United.

Exerting a powerful appeal to all married folk and especially to young brides just entering upon their marital careers, Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft Photoplay, "His Parisian Wife" will be the attraction at the Allen Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday. The story is one of exceptional dramatic interest and the various situations are most thrilling.

The story deals with Fauvette, a girl reporter on a Paris newspaper, who weds a Boston lawyer after a brief courtship. When Martin Wesley her husband, takes his bride to the home of his parents, they resent her coming on the theory that since they had not been consulted about their son's marriage, his bride necessarily must be a devil incarnate- a designing creature with a shady past.

This repellant attitude toward the young bride is prolific of numerous harrowing scenes and every effort of Fauvette to win the confidence and love of her father and mother-in-law is frustrated. Her husband finally accepts his parent's views and treats his bride with refined cruelty. A separation enaues during which Fauvette wins fame as a novelist and she and her husband are later reunited and live happily ever after.

Miss Ferguson is well supported, her leading man being David Powell. Others in the cast are Courtney Foote, Frank Losee, Cora Williams, Capt. Charles and Louis Grizel. Eve Unsell whote the scenario and Emile Chautard directed the production. The story has intensely dramatic moments and in Fauvette, Miss Ferguson is said to have one of the finest roles of her career.

In addiion the Allen Theatre is showing the third episode of the thrilling serial "The Great Gamble." The fight scene between Charles Hutchison and a half a dozen huskies, especially procured for the occasion is well worth seeing. The "Great Gamble" is a Pathe serial, electric in its dynamic force and high voltage climaxes, and is without doubt the greatest "stunt" serial produced to-date.

ADOLPH ZUKOR presents

ELSIE FERGUSON in "His Parisian Wife" An Artcraft Picture

Here is one of Elsie Ferguson's most dramatic pictures. In the latest French news, she startles a puritan New England town. And through all the big, tense scenes, flashes brilliantly like the great star she is!—Excitement enough for anyone.

Matinee at 2.15
Evenings at 6.30.

PROBATION WIFE AT THE GRAND

There is an undefinable something about "The Probation Wife," screened at the Grand last night, at once pleasing and arresting. It is permeated with a subtle appeal which for want of a better word we call "atmosphere." The theme of the story is simple and very human—a true and convincing portrayal of the vicissitudes of life. The drama is built on an idea which in itself would redeem the most prosaic scenic effects. It is founded on an impulse as old as the hills, certainly primitive, yet always new- the impulse of jealousy.

While this motive lends the play an intense interest, it saddens one just a little to think that no matter what a lofty position in the scale of civilization some persons attain to, they can never rise above that instinct. Aside from its underlying interest that decides the staying qualities of the picture, there is all the artistic gloss that goes to make it a success. The harmonious flow of the drama—the realism of the scenic effects, and the perfect adaptability of the artists (not just the stars), reach the point of excellence.

One's well wishes are with "Jo" all the way through. She's very beautiful, and she's irresistible, too, and she's something else that makes you like her better with every scene. If she does not measure up to the standard of your ideal woman at times, you won't blame her. You will blame the irony of fate that she was never taught better. She trusts solely to her natural instincts for guidance. At once it strikes one that she is out of her own sphere. She is living in a world for which she was never designed. Instinctively she shrinks from some—clings to others; and this impulse never leads her far astray of the truth.

Hers is a personality well linked up with the spiritual and at the same time vigorously and splendidly alive—a personality that with the aid of some steadying force would be ideal. Norma Talmadge, in the portrayal of this character, displays fine calibre as an artist and deep understanding of human nature.

The picture is not without a certain glint of humor. For instance, where the elderly gentleman, in his good-heartedness, undertakes to straighten things out for "Jo." This is decidedly funny, and the effectiveness of their little deception is more amusing still.

A beautiful feature of this picture is the exquisitely designed gowns and wealth of jewels worn by the leading lady, and the unconscious grace with which she wears them. Altogether it is a screen play that, despite its outstanding realism, breathes a certain spirit of refinement, and when interpreted as it should be cannot help but have an influence for good.

One feature of the evening which contributed largely toward the success of the picture was the music. The perfect accompaniment, the shaded tone at intervals, and intensity of expression at others, certainly bespeaks persistent effort on the part of the musicians. Effort which has resulted in an orchestra of which they can be justly proud.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

The Upper Asquewan gaild the clock on the old town hall struck 9. Mr. Magee, on guard in Baldpate's dreary office, counted the strokes. She must be halfway down the mountain now. Tonight there would be no need of a troubadour to implore "Weep No More, My Lady." William Hallowell Magee had removed the cause for tears.

It was a long vigil he had begun, but there was no boredom in it for Billy Magee. He was too great a lover of contrast for that. As he looked around on the ill assorted group he guarded he compared them with the happier people of the inn's summer nights, about whom the girl had told him. Instead of these surly or sad folk sitting glumly under the pistol of romantic youth he saw maids garbed in the magic of muslin flit through the shadows. Lights glowed softly. A waltz came up from the casino on the breath of the summer breeze. Under the red and white awnings youth and joy and love had their day—or their night. The hermit was on hand with his postal carded romance. The trees gossiped in whispers on the mountain.

And, too, the rocking chair feet gossiped in whispers on the veranda, pausing only when the admiral sailed by in his glory. Eagerly it ran down its game. This girl—this Myra Thornhill—he remembered, had herself been a victim. After Kendrick disappeared she had come there no more, for there were ugly rumors of the man who had died. Mr. Magee saw the girl and her long absent lover whispering together in the firelight. He wondered if they, too, imagined themselves at Baldpate in the summer; if they heard the waltz in the casino and the laughter of men in the grill room.

Ten o'clock, said the town hall pompously. She was at the station now. In the room of her tears she was waiting—perhaps her only companion the jacky of the "See the World" poster, whose garb was but a shade bluer than her eyes. Who was she? What was the bribe money of the Suburban railway to her? Mr. Magee did not know, but he trusted her, and he was glad she had won through him. He saw Professor Bolton walk through the flickering half light to join Myra Thornhill and Kendrick.

It must be half past by now. Yes—from far below in the valley came the whistle of a train. Now—she was boarding it—she and the money! Boarding it—for where? For what purpose? Again the train whistled.

"The siege," remarked Mr. Magee, "is more than half over, ladies and gentlemen."

"I want to talk with you, Mr. Magee," he said.

"I have discussed matters with Miss Thornhill," said the professor in a low voice. "She has convinced me that in this affair you have acted from a wholly disinterested point of view. A mistaken idea of chivalry, perhaps. The infatuation of the moment for a pretty face—a thing to which all men with red blood in their veins are susceptible—a pleasant thing that I would be the last to want banished from the world."

"Miss Thornhill," replied Billy Magee, "has sized up the situation perfectly—except for one rather important detail. It is not the infatuation of the moment, professor. Say, rather, that of a lifetime."

"Ah, yes," the old man returned. "Youth—how sure it always is of that. I do not deprecate the feeling. Once, long ago, I, too, had youth and faith. We will not dwell on that, however. Miss Thornhill assures me that Henry Bentley, the son of my friend John Bentley, esteems you highly. She asserts that you are in every respect, as far as her knowledge goes, an admirable young man. I feel sure that after calm contemplation you will see that what you have done is very unfortunate. The package of money, which in a moment of misguided amusement you have given into a young lady's keeping, is much desired by the authorities as evidence against a very corrupt political ring. I am certain that when you know all the details you will be glad to return with me to Reuton and do all in your power to help us regain possession of that package."

And now the town hall informed Mr Magee that the hour was 11. He pictured a train flying like a black shadow through the white night. Was she on it—safe?

"Professor Bolton," he said, "there couldn't possibly be any one anywhere more eager than I to learn all the details of this affair—to hear your real reason for coming to Baldpate inn and to have the peroxide blond incident properly classified and given its niche in history. But let me tell you again my action of tonight was no mere madness of the moment. I shall stick to it through thick and thin. Now, about the blonde."

"The blonde!" repeated the professor dreamily. "Ah, yes, I must make a small confession of guilt there! I did not come here to escape the results of that indiscreet remark, but I really made it—about a year ago. Shan I ever forget? Harriet. The newspapers and my wife won't let me. I can never again win a new honor, however dignified, without being referred to in print as the peroxide blond advocate. On the night when Mr. Kendrick and I climbed Baldpate mountain I remarked as much to him. And so it occurred to me that if I found any need of explaining my presence here the blond incident would do very well. It was only—a white lie."

"A blond one," corrected Mr. Magee. "I forgive you, professor."

"To begin with," continued the professor, "I am a member of the faculty of the University of Reuton, situated, as you no doubt know, in the city of the same name. For a long time I have taken a quiet interest in our municipal politics. I have been up in arms—linguistic arms—against this odd character Cargan, who came from the slums to rule us with a rod of iron. Every one knows he is corrupt; that he is wealthy through the sale of privilege; that there is actually a fixed schedule of prices for favors in the way of city ordinances. I have often denounced him to my friends. Since I have met him—well, it is remarkable, is it not, the effect of personality on one's opinions? I expected to face a devil, with the usual appurtenances. Instead I have found a human, rather likable man."

"What you have done is very unfortunate."

Mr. Magee smiled over to where the great bulk of Cargan slouched in a chair.

"He's a bully old scout," he remarked.

"Even so," replied the professor, "his high handed career of graft in Reuton must come to a speedy close. He is of a type fast vanishing through the awakening public conscience. And his career will end, I assure you, despite the fact that you, Mr. Magee, have seen fit to send our evidence scurrying through the night at the behest of a chit of a girl. I beg your pardon—I shall continue. Young Drayton, the new county prosecutor, was several years back a favorite pupil of mine. After he left law school he fell under the spell of the picturesque mayor of Reuton. Cargan liked him and he rose rapidly. Drayton had no thought of ever turning against his benefactor when he accepted the first favors, but later the open selling of men's souls began to disgust him. When Cargan offered him the place of prosecutor a few months ago Drayton assured him that he would keep his oath of office.

"It was in me, remember," he went on, "that Drayton confided his resolve to serve the public. I was delighted at the news. A few weeks ago he informed me his first opportunity was at hand. Through one of the men in his office he had learned that Hayden of the Suburban Electric was seeking to consolidate that road, which had fallen into partial disrepute und his management during the absence of Thornhill, the president, with the Civic. The consolidation would raise the value of the Suburban nearly two million dollars—at the public's expense. Hayden had seen Cargan. Cargan had drafted ordinance No. 45 and informed Hayden that the price for passing it through the council would be the sum you have juggled in your possession on Baldpate mountain—$200,000."

"A mere trifle," remarked Magee sarcastically.

"So Cargan made Hayden see. Through long experience in these matters the mayor has become careless. He is the thing above the law, if not the law itself. He would have had no fear in accepting this money on Main street at midday. He had no fear when he came here and found he was being spied on.

"But Hayden—there was the difficulty that began the drama of Baldpate inn. Hayden had few scruples; but, as events tonight have well proved, Mr. Magee, he was a coward at heart. I do not know just why he lies on your bed upstairs at this moment a suicide. That is a matter between Kendrick and him and one which Kendrick himself has not yet fathomed. As I say, Hayden was afraid of being caught. Andy Rutter, manager of Baldpate inn for the last few summers, is in some way mixed up in the Suburban. It was he who suggested to Hayden that an absolutely secluded spot for passing this large sum of money would be the inn. The idea appealed to Hayden. Cargan tried to laugh him out of it. The mayor did not relish the thought of a visit to Baldpate mountain in the dead of winter, particularly as he considered such precautions unnecessary. But Hayden was firm. This spot, he pointed out, was ideal, and the mayor at last laughingly gave in. The sum involved was well worth taking a little trouble to gain."

"So the matter was arranged," he continued. "Mr. Bland, a clerk in Hayden's employ, was sent up here with the money, which he placed in the safe on the very night of our arrival. The safe had been left open by Rutter. Bland did not have the combination. He put the package inside, swung shut the door and awaited the arrival of the mayor."

STEWART ALLEGES

should be specifically made so as to allow the defendants an opportunity of putting themselves in a position to defend themselves.

Then Mr. Stewart took his stand in the witness box.

Serious Charges Against Chief.

On examination Mr. Stewart stated that in 1915 some confiscated liquor had been held at the police station. He came a day or two after to enquire about the liquor. Sergt. Kidd informed him that the liquor had been taken to the Chief's home. He asked the chief about it and the chief replied that he had taken it home as his wife was not feeling well.

Another Serious Charge.

In 1916 he again seized some liquor and placed it under lock and key at the police station. The only persons who had the key to the door were Chief Thompson and Sergt. Brown. When he, (Stewart) went to get the liquor he found that the liquor and bottles had been taken out of one case and the empty bottles only remaining in the other.

The following day Sergt. Brown told him that the Chief knew all about it because he had seen the Fontaine Bros. come and take some sacks away and heard the bottles rattle in them.

Jurymen Alleged to Be Responsible

The Chief blamed some Jurymen for breaking in and stealing the whiskey and requested the inspector to say nothing of the matter according to Stewart.

Later the inspector had shipped both cases to Toronto filled with empty bottles.

In connection with another liquor case he had interviewed the Chief of Police in the Chief's office, where the Chief had threatened to smash Mr. Stewart's face and acted toward him in an antagonistic manner. Mr. Newhall had entered the office and shut the door behind him. Mr. Stewart feeling rather unsafe in that position, opened the door to prepare a safe line of retreat. The Chief ordered him never to come back to his office again and he never did.

Street Ridicule.

Mr. Stewart then swore that on frequent occasions, Sergt. Blade, Constable Boyd and Detective Newhall had cast scandalous remarks toward him in the hearing of the public which was inclined to hamper him in the course of is duty.

Within the last month Sergt. Blade had called him Gizard Stewart, etc. Newhall and Boyd had frequently sneered at him and avoided meeting him on the street.

On cross-examination by Mr. Hall, Mr. Stewart admitted having shown it Mr. C. S. McClellan in the presence of R. J. Soden. Mr. Hall asked him if he had shown the statement to a long list of citizens of the city. Some he had, some he had not and some he did not remember.

Mr. Stewart Protects Himself.

Mr. Stewart showed this statement to different citizens in defense of himself, because there were current reports that he was carrying out his duties only politically. These charges had been made by the Chief of Police.

Mr. Stewart swore he made no effort to attempt to verify the statement by approaching any of the parties concerned in the statement. Mr. Hall asked Mr. Stewart if he believed the truth of the statement and he answered that after what he had seen and heard he was inclined to believe them.

Declined to Listen.

Mr. Stewart insisted on the point that he had declined to listen to Hamilton making ridiculous statements about the police on the railway train, but a strict cross-examination by Mr. Hall, it was brought out that he had heard most of the story that afterward appeared in the statement before he declined to listen to more and left the seat.

Mr. Stewart was the last witness examined this morning.

"ALWAYS GOOD" AT THE ALLEN THEATRE

The new Allen Theatre by catering to moving picture patrons with high class and up-to-the-minute popular screen productions, is attracting capacity audiences night after night, irrespective of counter attractions. "Always Good" at the Allen Theatre obtains in this city as in all the numerous cities and towns in which the Allen's have an amusement house." T heiroff'trings are always acceptable and include favorite stars with first class support, thus assuring a pick of screen stories to please a public's varied taste.

An Error.

"String Beans" shown on Saturday was an admixture of humor, sentiment and thrilling climaxes, which appealed to all. Unfortunately this paper, by an inadverted error, advertised this production for the Grand, which mistake none regretted more so than the paper's management.

Don't Miss This.

"Sporting Life" last evening proved a deservedly drawing number. It is the first photoplay by Maurice Tourneur, the famous director, nder his own management. It is a superb picturization of the famous Drury Lane melodrama which has held the stage in this country and in England for more than twenty years. The photoplay was admirably produced and it scored an instantaneous and decisive hit.

This protoplay is filled with stirring action from start to finish, and there are numerous splendidly photographed scenes. It teems with suspensive interest, the villains being constantly foiled at the eleventh hour. Excellent views are shown of the Earl of Woodstock's country estate, the Gypsy camp, racing stables, pallyhos, the National Sporting Club of London and last, a genuine picture of the famous English Derby at Epsom.

A real motion picture luxry is presented in this story again tonight, of which opportunity no doubt a large audience will take advantage.

BUT ONE BLACKSTONE IN THE WORLD TO-DAY

The Great Blackstone, one of the foremost magicians in the world, will be seen here Friday and Saturday Sept. 19 and 20. Every man, woman and child in the city, it would seem, has read or heard of this master of magic. This attraction is conceded by both press and public to be the greatest magical production ever sent out of New York, and is a congress of magical sensations. The Great Blackstone carries a carload of scenery and magical paraphernalia, with a company of fifteen assistants, mostly girls, who contribute to the mystical spectacle.

A Real Feat.

Said the facetious feller: "One of the greatest mysteries of my childhood is how Little Jack Horner succeeded with that plum pulling out affair with only one thumb."

Where Life Lasts Longest.

The average length of life is greater in Norway than in any other country. This is attributed to the fact that the temperature is cool and uniform throughout the year.

Japanese Activity in Siberia.

Canadian papers are commenting on the activity of the Japanese throughout the maritime province of Siberia. Agents of Japanese syndicates are reported to be negotiating for the purchase of a large number of mines, flour mills, brickworks, sawmills and other industrial undertakings, while commercially they are making every effort to extend their influence. The Japanese firms, which for the most part have only recently been established at Vladivostok, are enlarging their operations and endeavoring to obtain as large a share as possible of the trade of the territory. The scouts of these firms are reported to be scouring the country for scrap iron, hides wool, bristles, beans and other Siberian and Manchurian products required in Japan.

BRILLIANT HOME DECORATIVE IDEAS

In the Living-room Shown by Richard Hall & Son, Ltd.

In the Main Building at the Exhibition this year a model living-room is shown by Richard Hall & Son that is worthy of more than passing mention. The furniture in this room consists of a Chesterfield and two big easy chairs, and are designed and made throughout in the firm's own workrooms. They not only look comfortable, but they are just as luxurious as they look. So much of the furniture one sees nowadays is very badly proportioned but the lines of these three pieces are perfect in every detail. Two of the pieces are covered in a very serviceable black ground tapestry with a beautiful all-over floral design in soft tones of old blue, old gold and Persian rose, giving a soft radio effect.

The odd chair in this room is covered in two-toned radio striped furniture velvet, trimmed with a black fringe, which will give endless wear and not show the marks of usage. A special feature of living-room furniture today is to have chairs of different kinds, not only different coverings, but different shapes. For instance, the man of the house may be tall and the lady of the house short so the home decorator of today must provide a suitable chair for the heads of the house at least.

The floor lamps in this exhibit, two in number, are not too many for a fair sized living-room. In fact, in rooms of this size three are used sometimes as long as they are properly placed and the colors properly blended.

The cushions are very artistic and show that Peterborough can boast of some very clever home designers.

The bay window consists of four windows, two wide windows on each side and two smaller ones in the centre. The dainty beize net curtains are set in between the frames to show the woodwork in the centre so as not to have a big show of net curtain. There is a valliance in one piece around the top of the four windows and a side hanging at either side made of radio velvet trimmed with Egyptian edging in gold to harmonize with the blended wall. This makes without doubt one of the finest window draperies ever shown in Peterborough.

The floor is done in an imitation Flemish oak and the wall is a blended effect of gold and soft golden brown. The ceiling is in soft ivory.

The pictures were kindly loaned and specially framed for the exhibit by R. J. Soden. They show Mr. Soden a connoisseur of good subjects as well as having taste and skill in the art of framing.

RUSS. TROOPS WIN AT ARCHANGEL

Paris Sept 16.—Russian troops on the Archangel front are carrying out a successful offensive against the bolsheviki in the railway sector, says an Archangel message received here.

Russian volunteer troops have occupied the town of Onega, which was taken by the bolsheviki in one of their recent pushes to the north ward.

UNIQUE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

M. Greene Co. Have Splendid Exhibit at Fair This Year.

The exhibit of the J. M. Green Music Co. contains some very unique musical instruments. An electric player piano which winds and rewinds its own rolls and can be used as an ordinary piano is one of the most interesting features of this exhibit. Besides this is shown a handsome New Scale Williams piano, several Edison graphophones, both for cylinder and disc records, as well as the Greene and Columbia phonographs. These are in a variety of finishes such as oak, mahogany, walnut, etc. The courteous attendants will be pleased to demonstrate any of these instruments for anyone interested.

ELECTRICAL EXHIBIT

Miller, Powell & Watson Show Large Number of Conveniences.

An electric kitchen is included in the exhibit of Miller Powell & Watson and will no doubt attract considerable attention of the ladies who visit the main building. An electric range, a National tank heater and a "1900" washer go to make up this interesting display. Included in the main building exhibit of this firm is a Frantz premier vacuum cleaner, a Moffatt fireplace grate and some very beautiful electric fixtures. With electricity such a cheap commodity in Peterborough, these articles are well worth investigating. Mr. Miller and Mr. Watson, in charge of the exhibit, are ready to explain anything to anyone interested.

This firm has another exhibit in a tent east of the main building which will be of particular interest to farmers. It comprises lighting equipment for rural homes. The Alpha farm lighting equipment, manufactured by the DeLaval Co., in Peterborough, is a very complete system which is driven by a separate gasoline engine. The Delco system which is also complete gets its power from a series of batteries. Both are being demonstrated every day, and Mr. Powell, who is in charge, will answer all questions regarding them.

CRESSMAN CO. EXHIBIT

Complete Dining and Living Rooms Furnished From New Departments.

The Cressman Co. shows a complete dining room in their space in the main building as well as a complete living room. Both these rooms are furnished in excellent taste and all the articles are from the stock of furniture carried by this firm. The furniture in the dining room is of Italian oak inlaid and includes a buffet, table, chairs and china cabinet. The table is fully laid and the silver and cut glass water service are from the new departments recently opened by this firm. On the buffet are an electric tea-pot and a coffee percolater. In the living room is seen a handsome Chesterfield, easy chairs and a beautiful library table with massive turned legs. Beautiful curtains and rugs go to make this one of the finest exhibits at the fair this year.

SPLENDID EXHIBIT OF FIREARMS

Kingan Hardware Co. Show Some New Rifles and Shot Guns.

The exhibit of the Kingan Hardware Co. in the main building will attract the attention of all those who enjoy hunting and shooting. It includes Stevens Rifles of all calibres, Stevens double and single barrel shot guns and Stevens pump guns. Several examples of each are on exhibit. These firearms are already well known to the hunters of Peterboro county and have made an enviable reputation for themselves. A full range of cartridges of all kinds is also shown. In addition is shown a collection of Stanley tools for carpenters which no doubt will attract a large number of these mechanics to the Kingan exhibit. Brandram-Henderson paints and International varnishes occupy a prominent place in the exhibit as also does Dixon's graphite greases. Samples of Everlastic roofing are also being shown and anyone contemplating building will do well to enquire about this dependable roofing.

WELL DISPLAYED BICYCLES

White Bros. Exhibit at Fair Well Worth Looking At.

One of the best displayed exhibits at the fair this year is that of White Bros., bicycle dealers. Their showing contains several of the newest ideas in Massey bicycles, including one alone in the new color, battlefield grey. They show a full range of accessories such as pedals, chains, wrenches, belts, etc. An interesting article in this exhibit is one of the new Hercules brakes such as are used on all Massey wheels, shown in cross-section. This gives one a good idea of the working parts of this clever brake. It is worthy of note that within an hour after placing their exhibit in their section of the main building this firm had sold one of their highest priced machines. Anyone interested in bicycles would do well to look this exhibit over.

THREATS OF STRIKES DEPLORED A NEW WARNING TO EMPLOYERS

National Industrial Conference Opened This Morning in a Fighting Mood—J. S. McKinnon Declares Labor Had Gone too Far—More of the Spirit of British Fair Play Needed

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 17.—Threats of strikes were deplored and a new warning from Labor to employers issued before the National Industrial Conference had proceeded very far with this morning's session.

Labor Went Too Far.

The Conference opened in a sort of fighting mood. J. S. McKinnon of Toronto said Labor had been going too far in using the term conscription of wealth and threatening a strike to enforce the eight-hour day in all industries. There should have been more of the spirit of British fair play. The Conference was not called for that sort of thing.

J. A. Gillis, delegate from the Sydney steel workers, disclaimed any attempt to force class legislation. No industry had yet been ruined by reducing the hours of labor, but labor should not be speeded up to earn profits on air and water. "We must be fair with you," he said, "but you must also give us a little more of what you have been pleased in the past to term profits."

SGT. KIDD DENIES HAVING EVER TAKEN LIQUOR TO CHIEF THOMPSON'S HOUSE

Contradictory Evidence is Presented at Police Investigation Which Re-Opened This Morning—Inspector Stewart Sticks Fast to His Story in Spite of all—Stewart Rebuked for Interviewing Magistrate Dumble Between Hearing and Judgment

The police investigation re-opened about 10:25 this morning after an adjournment from yesterday noon. Mr. Stewart was still undergoing a cross-examination by Mr Hall. Mr. Stewart admitted that he believed the statement when it was made and had not even considered the possibility of men concerning such a scheme, at that time.

Mr. Stewart admitted that it was beyond his detective power to catch Mr. Hamilton as he carried on his business in a very clever style. He also admitted that he would not put much faith in the word of a man who performed such doubtful practices as Hamilton but yet he still believed that the statements made by Mr Hamilton were true.

Mr. Stewart denied that he had ever asked Mr. Wearing to produce the statement in prosecution of the liquor case against Sullivan. He also denied having shown the statement to Mr Wearing before the trial. He denied having said that he would not mind losing the case if he could show Newhall up.

He swore that he had considered that he was acting justly, when he showed this statement to Magistrate Dumble between the hearing of the evidence and conviction in the Sullivan case even though the defence were not given an opportunity of defending themselves. His Honor Judge Huycke expressed that he considered that he had acted very unfairly in that matter.

Mr Stewart stated that he would be willing to give $5 to a member of the police force for information that would lead to a conviction. He denied that he ever offered any member of the force $5 to give information to him rather than to the chief. He denied making this offer to Sergts Blade, Daynard or Detective Newhall.

In the Levasseur case in 1915 two cases of lager beer had been taken from the Conservative Club rooms to the police station. At the trial Levasseur did not appear and the Magistrate imposed a fine of $300 which had never been collected. After the trial, with the Chief's permission, he left the whiskey in the police station for a day or two until he should return to destroy the liquor. When he returned to get the liquor he was informed by the Chief himself that it had been taken to the Chief's house. Sergt. Kidd also told him that he had taken the liquor to Chief Thompson's house.

At twelve o'clock, Mr O'Connell commenced re-examination of Mr. Stewart and the inspector emphatically denied the statement of Hamilton that he had promised him his license back if he would make the statement against Newhall.

Chief Kidd of Parry Sound and former Police Sergeant of the Peterborough Police Force was the next witness called. He remembered sending the two cases of liquor connected with the Levasseur case to either the House of Providence or St Joseph's Hospital. He denied telling Stewart of taking any liquor to Chief Thompson's house or to ever having taken it.

He knew nothing about the Bridgenorth liquor which was supposed to have disappeared. He did not remember the case at all but it might have been when he was of duly with a broken leg. He swore he knew nothing of Chief Thompson ever taking liquor from the police station to a hunting party.

LEAGUE WOULD NOT BIND STATES TO PUT DOWN REBELLION ABROAD

Neither Would Power of America to Recognize Independence of All Who Seek Freedom be Limited, Declares President Wilson in Reply to Labor Organizations

(Canadian Press Despatch)

On Board President Wilson's Special Train, Sept. 17—Setting forth publicly for the first time his interpretation of the League of Nations covenant as it affects Ireland, President Wilson said in a statement today that the League would constitute a forum before which could be brought all claims for self-determination that are likely to affect the peace of the world.

States Not Bound.

"The covenant would not bind the United States to assist in putting down rebellion in foreign country," he asserted; "nor would it limit the power of this country to recognize the independence of any people who seek to secure freedom," said the President. "Ireland's case was not heard at Versailles because it did not come within the jurisdiction of the Peace Conference."

Replies To Labor.

The President's statement was in reply to a series of questions sent to him by the San Francisco Labor Council. It is understood that within a few days he will reply similarly to questions put by other labor bodies regarding Shantung and representation of the British Dominions in the League assembly.

RECORD CROWD ON SECOND DAY OF PETERBOROUGH'S EXHIBITION

Twenty Thousand Attended the Fair Yesterday--Day a Huge Success Afternoon and Evening

Yesterday was the biggest day in the history of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition, the day's attendance reaching the high water mark of twenty thousand, as compared with seventeen thousand for the three days of last year.

A vast crowd occupied the grand stand and lined the fence to see the races and the acrobatic stunts in the afternoon, while the Midway was a mass of swaying, interested humanity. Even the evening meal hour only partially reduced the crowd, a great many remaining on the grounds and buying their meal rather than run the danger of missing any of the sport.

The Races.

The horse races were, if anything, better than on the previous day. Every race was closely contested, and the huge audience cheered and shouted continually as the racers were completing the circuit.

The Race Results.

Named Race.

1—Birdie Wilks.
2—Jack Brooks.
3—Doris Patel.
4—Maximillian.
5—Sadie B.
6—St. Lawrence Boy.

2:18 Class.

2—Birdie D.
3—Adria Pontin.
4—George Laconda.
5—Truiso.

Running 2nd Heat.

1—Mona G.
2—Waska.
3—John Thompson.

Attractions Galore.

The afternoon surpassed all previous records both in attendance and arresting interest, but the success of the evening was far beyond all expectation and hope. Never before had such a crowd filled the Midway as was on hand last night. The booths, games and side shows were unable to supply the long line of customers that were always pressing closer to see all that was going on. The merry-go-round was kept busy all evening as also were the ferris-wheel and various side shows, such as the "Resisting Girl," a most mysterious young lady indeed. A large crowd gathered in the wrestling tent to see Gene Hertubise and the out-of-town wrestler engage in a spirited contest, and when the city hero succeeded in throwing his opponent, as usual, the crowd nearly went wild in appreciation of their yet unconquered wrestler.

Voiced Appreciation.

The untiring and energetic enthusiasm of the Exhibiton committee was amply repaid by results, and visitors were unstinted in their voiced appreciation. If today lives up to the record of yesterday and it probably will—the committee will be a group of tired but gratified men, because they can feel that they have made the Peterborough Exhibition this year bigger and better than ever.

BULLITT'S BREACH OF CONFIDENCE

SEEKING AFTER THE TRUTH OF THAT MISSION TO RUSSIA—EXPLOSIVE BULLITT.

London, Sept. 17. An "authorized" denial of statements made by William C. Bullitt, formerly attached to the American peace delegation, before the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, which is printed in London newspapers this morning, is attracting more notice here than Mr. Bullitt's evidence before the committee. The opinion is general that explanations are imperatively needed.

London morning papers express in their editorials views which are colored by their political predilections some criticizing what they regard as Mr. Bullitt's "breach of confidence." The Chronicle, a strong champion of Premier Lloyd George, says that Mr. Bullitt's evidence was directed against President Wilson, Secretary Lansing and Co. E. M. House "He does not possess the least sense of honor or responsibility," the newspaper says, "and the British can not be expected to prefer the word of such an accuser to that of the Premier."

"The Explosive Bullitt"

The Post, in a satirical editorial bearing the caption "The Explosive Bullitt," scores both Premier Lloyd George and Mr. Bullitt. Regarding the latter, it says: "President Wilson seems to have picked the wrong person when he took this explosive journalist into the employ of the American peace mission. A journalist who is treated in this way has no business to explode. It is against the first laws of the game. The Post also expresses the opinion that if Secretary Lansing endorses Mr. Bullitt's statements, regarding the secretary's views, "it will be all over with the treaty, as far as the United States is concerned."

Herald Says Denial is Untrue.

The Daily News maintains the official denial does not dispose of Mr Bullitt's assertions and urges a suspension of judgment until the implications contained in it are put beyond a reasonable doubt.

Declaring the denial itself "untrue" and worthless, the Herald, the Labor organ, claims to be able to confirm Mr. Bullitt's statements.

Some newspapers raise the question as to who authorized the denial, as neither Premier Lloyd George nor his secretary, Philip Kerr, attaches his name to it, and, according to Paris reports, both refuse to be interviewed on the subject.

INQUIRY INTO HOG PRODUCTS' PRICES RESUMED IN TORONTO THIS MORNING

Declared Davies Co. Had No Interest in Toronto Union Stockyards.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Sept. 17. W. F. O'Connor, vice chairman of the Board of Commerce resumed inquiry this morning, devoting attention to the prices of hog products. The firms represented are Davies Co., Gunns Swift Canadian Co., Matthews Blackwell, Harris Abbatoir and Puddy Bros.

For Davies Co.

E. C. Fox, representing the Davies Co., stated they had forty retail stores in Toronto and others in Belleville, Brockville, Galt, Woodstock and other Ontario towns. Mr Fox said the company's buyers were given a commission of twenty-five cents per hundred pounds on purchases. He declared and reaffirmed that.

STRIKE OF STEEL WORKERS SEPT. 22

ONLY LAST MINUTE TELEGRAM FROM EMPLOYERS WILL AVERT TROUBLE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburgh, Sept. 17. John Fitzpatrick, chairman of the National Committee for Organizing Iron and Steel Workers, who arrived here today from Cleveland, told newspaper men that unless a last minute telegram was received from Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the Board of United States Steel Corporation a strike of iron and steel workers would go into effect September 22nd.

BRITISH TROOPS EVACUATE SYRIA

WILL BE REPLACED BY FRENCH FORCES, AGREEMENT REACHED TO THIS EFFECT.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 17. — An agreement, reached by Premier Clemenceau, and Field Marshal Allenby, of the British army, concerning the occupation of Syria, provides for the evacuation of all the area north of the frontier between Palestine and Syria on or before November 1 by British troops, according to the morning newspapers.

French Relieve British.

The British will be relieved by French forces, with the exception of the districts of Damascus, Homs, Hamah and Aleppo, which will be left out of the area of occupation, but will pass under French influence.

REVISED PRAYER BOOK ADOPTED

MEETS WITH THE APPROVAL OF BOTH HOUSES OF ONTARIO SYNOD.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 17.—The approval and adoption of the new revised prayer book of the Church of England was moved today by Dr. Matthew Wilson of Chatham and Bishop Williamson, London, and unanimously adopted by both houses of the Synod of the Province of Ontario, although Judge Ermatinger, of St. Thomas, explained that he voted for the motion with personal reservations regarding the Athanasian creed.

It was pointed out by the Archbishop that this action by the Synod did not mean a general adoption of the new book, but it put it in the power of bishops to advise its tentative experimental use.

BULGARIAN TREATY READY

Will Be Delivered to Plenipotentiaries Friday Morning Next.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 17. The supreme Council has definitely adopted a Bulgarian treaty which will be delivered to the Bulgarian plenipotentiaries on Friday morning. The presentation of the document will be without ceremony.

OPEN TRIAL OF MILK PRODUCERS

CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY TO FIX PRICE AND ELIMINATE COMPETITION.

Chicago, Sept. 17. —After numerous delays and attempts to take the hearing of the case out of Cook county, the trial of eight directors of the Milk Producers Association, charged with conspiracy arbitrarily to fix the price of milk and eliminate competition, is expected to begin tomorrow morning before Judge Fitch in the Criminal Court.

Assistant State's Attorneys Barnhart, Walker and Michels, who will prosecute the case, were busy today putting the final touches on their arrangements for the hearing. They will ask the extreme punishment, which is a fine of $2,000 and five years in the penitentiary. The milk producers will be defended by former Governor Charles S. Dineen, who has announced that he will proceed with the trial and not take advantage of further delays which might follow were he to ask for further change of venue.

The defendants in the case are Charles H. Porter, chairman of the milk board; Willis J. Kittle, Frank H. Reese, Robert M. Omann, Roy Lewis, Clinton J. Cooper, William A. Goodwin and Arnold Huber. The case was once definitely set for hearing on April 3, 1918, and was continued because of the war at the request of Food Commissioner Herbert C. Hoover and Attorney-General Gregory. The state will contend that the producers arbitrarily jumped the price of milk from $2.12 to $3.42 a 100pounds at a meeting held Sept. 21, 1917.

NEWSPRINT INQUIRY.

Canadian Newspapers Are Promised Whatever Paper Needed.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 17. — Commissioner Pringle held a session of the newsprint inquiry today and adjourned it until the second week in October. The commissioner said the Canadian newspapers were in a bad way for paper, but as long as he was a paper controller he was going to see that they got paper, whatever foreign contracts Canadian paper mills might have with secondary matter.

Maple Leaf Milling Company proposes to issue $1,000,000 additional preferred stock in connection with the purchase of the Campbell Flour Mills Company.

OPPOSITION FOR MACKENZIE KING

EX-PREMIER ARSENAULT WILL CONTEST RIDING OF PRINCE IN P. E. I.

Charlottetown, P. E. I., Sept. 17.—the persistent hostile criticism by the Government press on the Island of Mackenzie King strengthens the belief that he is to be opposed in Prince County at the coming bye-elections. Ex-Premier Arsenault is likely to be his opponent as it is expected he would capture the French vote.

ASKS JAPS TO FIX DATE.

Honolulu, Sept. 17.—The United States has asked the Japanese Government o fix a definite date for the return of Kiao Chau to China, according to cable advices received here by a Japanese daily newspaper. The cable added that the Japanese Government had not answered the communication.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—While in a despondent state, Fred McBurney, 36, of Berkeley street, attempted suicide in his room yesterday afternoon by cutting his throat with a razor. He was removed to St. Michael's Hospital, where his wound was dressed and adjudged superficial.

PREM. LLOYD GEORGE WILL ELABORATE APPEAL FOR NATIONAL COOPERATION

Establishment of New World Order Will be Urged on International Brother-Hood Congress.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 17. — Premier Lloyd George's return to England last night from his vacation at Deauville, France, and a brief visit in Paris, will be followed tonight by an address, which will be delivered at the London City Temple and which in view of the extreme political and economic unrest prevailing in the country is awaited with the keenest curiosity and interest.

Other Addresses Promised.

In view of the fact that his speech will be addressed to the International Brotherhood Congress, Mr. Lloyd George will probably confine himself mainly to elaborating his recent appeal to the nation for co-operation in the establishment of a new world order, leaving other matters for the addresses he has promised to deliver elsewhere.

D'ANNUNZIO'S RAID ON FIUME IS CHARACTERIZED AS ADVENTURE

Paris Optimistic That No Serious Consequences Will Follow---New Censorship

Paris, Sept. 17.—Gabriele d'Annunzio's spectacular entrance into Fiume at the head of his legion of Irredentists in the romantic adventure of the century, and thrills Europe at a time when the continent is gravely in danger of becoming a wreck. The Italian poet-soldier's exploit electrified Europe by its audacity, but failed to produce any serious misgivings as to its consequences.

As for possible political consequences of the descent on Fiume, not even the most pessimistic of observers believe anything more serious will result than a reprimand for the hot-headed poet and "his two thousand lyricists," as a French writer puts it. There is no doubt that d'Annunzio's feat has touched a sympathetic note in the heart of every Parisian. "There's something typically Parisian about d'Annunzio's passionate adventure," says another French writer.

The proverbial French ardor for the romantic and daring appears to be appreciably neutralized by the reflection that the incident may retard the solution of the Adriatic problem. It is felt that the Italian Government has been momentarily placed in an extremely embarrassing position with her allies at a particularly unfortunate period.

The Italian Government has prohibited publication of any news concerning the military events at Fiume. A special official has been appointed to supervise the censorship. He is armed with authority to sequestrate all editions of newspapers contravening the Government oredr.

Italian Government measures have resulted in the isolation of Fiume, acording to oficial advices from Italy received here. It is declared that the plot for the occupation of Fiume by the irregular forces under Gabriele d'Annunzio was found to have been originated in Venice. The prefect of Venice it is added, has been removed from office, and Italian artillery forces there which were about to join the insurgents in Fiume have returned to their barracks.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1919

OUR EXHIBITION.

PETERBOROUGH Central Exhibition grounds, with modern turnstile entrances, new and comfortable horse barns, well maintained driving track, electrically wired avenues, handy official headquarters and enquiry offices, cement grand stand and accommodating open-air special attractions stage, now present an atmosphere of care and appreciation creditable to the directors. These grounds today reflect a spirit of progress in keeping with the growth and importance of Peterborough city, and it is to be hoped that the improvements both in accommodation and exhibits of the past few years will continue from Fair to Fair until the objective of a full week's exhibition is reached.

The grand stand today, however, is too small, and should be enlarged by next year, while something must be done to give would-be exhibitors more main building space. It seems to us that these are two pressing needs now, both of which the directors would do well to give their attention to before next Fall, if possible.

Then, we noticed that, although every effort was made by the directors this year to cater to a first day attendance at least from noon of Monday, a large section of the community still retained the old-time notion that much would be lacking on Monday that could be seen on Tuesday, which view was not warranted by preparations to assure each of the three days' events running on parallel lines, the one with the other, so far as attractions and exhibits were concerned. And this goes to show that the public will not accept any day on which entries are received for placement as one worth while from an attendance point of view. Perhaps next year the directors will see their way clear to add still another day to the Peterborough Exhibition, for there is no reason why, all things being equal, three full record days' attendance should not be forthcoming, together with a first day for entries and such moderate receipts as will obtain only on the day on which exhibits are being placed.

THE RUSSIAN SITUATION.

THE SITUATION IN RUSSIA seems far from clear, and reports are conflicting. One day, for instance, Gen. Kolchack the all-Russian commander, loses forty-five thousand prisoners to the Bolsheviki, and the next report is that in a counter offensive he administers a decisive defeat to his enemies. We are afraid that a decisive defeat for the Bolsheviki is yet far distant, and that the British expedition in Russia is dangerously entangled. The idea that were the Allies to open the hall of opposition to the forces of Lenin and Trotzky, millions of Russians would flock to the anti-Bolshevik standard, has been exploded, and we see that intervention in Russia by forces inadequate to the job of supporting the Reds only rallies to the blood-stained standard of Bolshevism large reinforcements.

From the first, but two possible policies in Russia were open to the Allies. One, to throw in sufficient weight to exterminate once and for all time Bolshevism; the other to leave Russia alone and trust to food and a return of sanity and common sense to combat the Bolshevism. So far the Allies have done neither, although nominally accepting the latter course, and we need not be surprised any day of hearing of disaster to the British and all-Russianforces which will materially affect the Allies' prestige and encourage the Bolshevik element in Germany and Austria in the hope of seizing the reins of power and repudiating peace treaties with the Allies so recently signed.

One thing is certain, and that is, no League of Nations can guarantee the peace of Europe with Russia dominated by Bolshevism, and that league must adopt a more clearly defined policy toward Russia than the Allies have, and pursue that policy vigorously and unswervingly, until Russia is awakened to a sense of its responsibilities to the might of the rest of the world.

CANADA'S POTENTIALITIES, MUSICALLY, ARE UNIQUE.

WITH ALL DUE RESPECT to our neighbors, there have been occasions lately when Canadians have been tempted to put their fingers in their ears, from the fact that the screaming of the American eagle has seemed too loud. Too often the attempt has been made to impose the idea upon us that nothing musical exists above the forty-ninth parallel. However, we must insist on the fact that Canada is no more to be ignored musically than she was in the recent war.

It may be admitted that twenty years ago there was some occasion to speak of music being "good enough for Canada," for then the Dominion had not reached full stature and could not be mentioned in the same breath with other musical nations. The score of years that have elapsed have most assuredly changed all that, and have shown a remarkable development of music and art, along with the growth of industrial conditions, so that Canada may now take her place amongst nations that claim to be musical.

If we stop to consider the matter for one moment, we may even realize that there are deep potentialities in our broad land, for she is as much the melting-pot of nations as ever was the United States. She is, just as much, the welder of nations who have been grasped by the scruff of the neck, by circumstance, and thrown into the ferment of western life to develop, expand and grow; and out of all this ferment comes the possibility of a music which may be peculiar to Canada alone. The potentialities are unique, for out of the influences which prevail may come a music which is tinged with the atmosphere of the primitive Indian tribes which remain; the French Habitant, the mixed mass of Europeans, the British, and even the Oriental, with his love for weird and wailing sounds.

In Canada, of course, British musical influence has prevailed these many years, but with a greater growth and development of the country it cannot always predominate.

A unique national music is bound to spring up, and that, too, of a highly individual kind, though, perforce, it may be leavened by the "spread-eagleism" of our neighbors to the south, even though this "leaven" may take the form of the "jazz and ragtime," which is not always acceptable to sensitive ears. In Eastern Canada the Anglo-Saxon influence on musical development is very noticeable; and it is spreading west and causing us to emulate eastern example.

Excellent choral societies with first-class local conductors and orchestras abound from coast to coast, the choruses and choirs being modelled on the famous Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto. Musicians of high standing such as the veteran Dr. A. S. Vogt, Mr. H. A. Fricker, Dr. Humphrey Anger and Dr. Fisher are still in the eastern vanguard, while the influence of the late Dr. F. H. Torrington must not be forgotten. Nor is musical influence confined to the East, for in the West we have a widespread interest displayed in musical education. The great English academies send out their examiners every year to the various centres, eastern colleges are doing likewise and providing a strong stimulus to study and to the competitive spirit, the remarkably large number of entries showing a promising state of affairs for the growth of national music. And with all this, "music in the schools" is not a mere phrase in the West, recent concerts and musical festivals showing most gratifying results. Further, if we quote a recent visiting examiner we are justified in believing that every dollar that has been spent in promoting the growth of a musical sense among our people "has been very much worth while."

THE COMMUNITY CENTRE.

THE COMMUNITY centre movement is developing in Ontario slowly, says the London Advertiser. A beginning has been made at two points in Middlesex County, Belmont and Clandeboye. At the former, considerable funds have been promised for a suitable building, and at the latter a hall is already serving as a meeting place for farmers' clubs and other gatherings. At Clachan, in Elgin County, a community hal has been made possible through the generosity of a number of public-spirited men. At Delhi, Norfolk County, the question is under discussion.

Public men and educationists see in the community hall movement an immense factor in overcoming the lack of social intercourse in rural centres and in keeping the boys and girls on the farm. With this and the community school, Hon. Dr. Cody sees a marked rejuvenation of country life. The idea is taking hold, but the common use of automobiles on the farms today has brought the farm so close to the city that lectures, sports and theatres are enjoyed by the farmer and his family almost as frequently as by his city cousin, and only to a lesser extent because of the long hours he is required to give to his farm work.

To assist in giving effect to the Act passed at the last session of the Legislature, providing for the building of community halls, the Department of Agriculture has had four sets of designs prepared, from which blue prints will be supplied when desired. The Act requires that each hall include an auditorium with movable seats, a platform suitable for entertainments and debates, besides which there must be a reading-room, library and kitchenette. At least three acres of land must be provided for sports, picnics and outdoor gatherings. The Government will grant a sum equal to twenty-five per cent. of the cost of the building, but not in excess of $2000.

This is the plan outlined by the Government to assist the farmers, but the farmers seem disposed to wait until after the election before bringing it into general operation.

SELF-DETERMINATION.

THE WESTMINSTER Gazette contends that one of the least defensible articles of the peace treaty is that which endeavors to keep Germany and Austria apart permanently, or at any rate until the assent of the other powers to their union is forthcoming. The article is foolish because the placing on record of the Allies' objection to such a union is ad efinit encouragement of all the national sentiment which might cause it to be demanded by both States. It is objectionable because it contravenes the principles of self-determination which the Allies have professed and which they have applied where their operation was hostile to Germany. Finally, it is useless because, union or no union, nothing can prevent a cordial understanding between Germany and Austria, which would be just as effective as a more formal bond. The supreme council has, we suppose, no choice but to enforce the treaty, as it stands, but this is one of the first points which the League of Nations will be wise to reconsider.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

READY WHEN THE STORM CAME.

(Toronto Tmes.)

While the pacifists, the extreme optimists and the sklinging "smart Alecks" were attacking the Canadian militia and making stupid jeers about parlor soldiers, Currie and many other good men were acquiring by deep study and assiduous practice, at their own expense, the groundwork of military science. When trouble came, suddenly and in a great flood, these officers were ready. The camp at Valcartier revealed the value of such men. When the infantry were grouped into three brigades, the acting briagdiers named were perhaps the three best soldiers in Canada—Col. Mercer of Toronto, Col. Currie of Victoria and Col. Turner, V.C., D.S.O., of Quebec.

CARDINAL MERCIER.

(New York Tribune.)

Cardinal Mercier is one of the imperishable figures of the great war. Of all the ecclesiastics brought into immediate contact with the war, perhaps the heaviest cross was laid upon his shoulders. He was Archbishop of Malines, one of the first Belgian cities to feel the rage of the German invader. He had to endure four years of corrupting and brutal German rule over himself and his people. But his trials strengthened and elevated him. As a prelate and a patriot he successfully braved the cunning tyranny which sought to terrorize and despoil his flock and break down its moral resistance. Neither von Bissing nor von Falkenhausen could silence him or destroy his spiritual authority. In imprisoned Belgium he remained free in spirit—encouraging a sorely tried people to await the day of liberation.

INCREASED GRATUITY.

Editor Review: Lately there has been much agitation in the papers concerning an increased gratuity for the soldiers who represented Canada in the war. The system or method, which has been and is now in operation, has been to pay the soldiers from four to six months gratuity based on their rank on discharge (if they did not revert to go to France) and the length of service they had in the army.

The main reason for this gratuity was to aid the boys to re-establish themselves in civil life at least, that is the reason given by the Government who granted this war bonus.

The present demand of the G. W. V. A. is for a demand of a $2000 war bonus, which, I understand has been turned down by the present Government on account of the country not being able to afford the same, and if that were a fact I am quite ready to believe it. However, in view of the many different cases that have been presented to me in the last few months, I can hardly believe the Borden Government are sincere in all their statements. Many a man has come to me with the statement that he would like all his gratuity in one lump sum in order to start in business for himself, but when I applied to the Government for the same I was met with the reply that there was no authority for such a thing, notwithstanding the fact that it was only an order in Council that was needed to remedy the defect. In many cases this was remedied by myself lending the money to the applicant. Another error on the part of the Government was to pay the officers more than the private soldier when it was only reasonable to know that in nine cases out of ten the officer could more easily adapt himself to the new circumstances than could the private. The private offered his life as well as the officer, and consequently should get the same consideration.

LET ALL VOTE

Editor Review; I thank you for the valuable space given me in yesterday's issue of your paper. Allow me to add that prohibitionists do not want a onesided victory. We wish to hear the voice of all the people. Whether citizens are for or against prohibitionists we wish to see their names on the Voters List and to see them record their votes. Some of us have tramped the streets of this city, foot-sore and weary, calling from house to house that none might be overlooked. When the Court of Revision opens on Thursday it will be a sad disappointment to us, and will it not be a reproach to them, if any who are entitled to vote and whose names we have handed in are too indifferent to appear and have their names recorded.

LOANS TO SOLDIERS

Over $23,000,000 have been loaned by the Soldier Settlement Board to returned soldiers up to July 30. There were 7,939 individual loans approved by the Board and 1,632 were refused. More than 1,000 loans are pending. The Agricultural Qualification Committee reports that 21,400 applications for the benefits of the Soldier Settlement Act had been approved by the Board up to August 9. The total applications received by the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mothers' Advice

The responsibility for a daughter's future largely rests with the mother. The right influence and the information which is of vital interest to the daughter imparted at the proper time has not only saved the life but insured the success of many a beautiful girl. When a girl's thoughts become sluggish with headaches, dizziness, or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs and a desire for solitude, her mother should come to her aid and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, will at this time prepare the system for the coming change and start this trying period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities. Thousands of women residing in every part of the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtues of this medicine, and what it has done for their daughters.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough for what it has done for my daughter. She was 15 years of age, very sickly and pale and she had to stay home from school most of the time. She suffered agonies from backache and dizziness and was without appetite. For 3 months she was under the doctor's care and got no better, always complaining about her back and side aching so I did not know what to do. I read in the papers about your wonderful medicine so I made up my mind to try it. She has taken five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and doesn't complain any more with her back and side aching. She has gained in weight and feels much better. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all mothers and daughters."—Mrs. M. FINCAN, 516 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

OPEN LETTER TO MEMBERS OF LIBERTY LEAGUE AND OTHERS OF THE SAME ILK

Fellow sufferers from the Ontario Temperance Act, please to allow an out-and-out total Prohibitionist to have a real friendly talk with you in all sincerity. Prhibitionist as I am, I have no difficulty in regarding you as perfectly honest, and as I have been giving good even if unwelcome counsel to Prohibitionists, allow me to offer some of the same brand to you also. Many of my best friends are in your camp, and some of my nearest relatives have been right in the trade. In connection with my work, I have been in as many barrooms in a week as most Liberty Leaguers have been in a year or may be in a lifetime, and in all my travels I have never known a man in the business who was not much too good for the job.

I am a Prohibitionist down to the ground, and have been ever since I knew enough to answer back, and so I ought to know the Prohibition mind pretty well, but the anti-prohibition mind is known to me much better for the reason that I have had to deal with it a great deal more and have taken more pains to understand it. You will not fly off the handle, I know; you will only be hugely amused, when I ask you in all seriousness to vote for the Ontario Temperance Act, for the reason that it is the best thing in sight for your side. I know that it is reasonable so suppose that you would prefer to vote for something more favorable to your views, which is quite reasonable, but then so do the Prohibitionists, and as neither of you can, under present conditions, get all you want, it is simply a matter of common sense to vote for the best thing in sight and, so far as you are concerned, that is the O. T. A. as I hope to show you right now.

In your skilfully drafted advertisements you plead for sane legislation but wisely do not say just what sane legislation is. Well, I take it that from your point of view sane legislation would be legislation of the kind that would enable the people of Ontario to do what they wish to do in regard to the common sale of alcoholic drinks, and providing for you the liberty to get same, just as it provides those who do not want it to be free from any obligation to provide you with facilities. You claim the right to have an alcoholic stimulant without having to be a law breaker in having it. Well and good, so do the Total Abstinence people claim the right to exercise their liberty in getting out of a business of which they do not approve. You know, of course, that every preacher and Sunday school teacher and all the rest of the people who are playfully spoken of as being addicted to turning up the whites of their eyes, are shareholders in the liquor business so long as it is a source of revenue in the country of which they are citizens, and that they think it reasonable that they should not be compelled to continue in the business, just as you think it reasonable that you should be compelled not to get what you want for your own use. The O. T. A. provides for you, in that you may import what you want for your private use and allows the sale within the province of beers, etc., not quite as strong as you might desire but a great deal stronger than the Prohibitionists think should be sold. You want it just twice as strong, and the Pros want it just half as strong, or none at all, so the O. T. A. is actually the half-way house at which both parties may manage to meet with a moderate measure of advantage to both. In fighting this Act you are allowing the Prohibitionists to appear in the eyes of the public as the reasonable people who are willing to give way in their demands for the public good, while you appear to be out for all that you want, so your present attitude seems to me to be wonderfully poor policy.

If you win in this contest, there is one thing certain, and that is that you are in for such a fight with the Prohibition people as you have never seen. They will put forward their full demand, which is the total suppression of the traffic in alcoholic drinks, as it has been put: "Root, trunk, branch, blossom and fruit," and if the greater liberty that you win should be abused to any very great extent, they will be able to put up a very fine case.

The Local Option contests that have taken place all over the country show that the people as a whole are strongly Prohibitionist in their views, especially in the rural communities, and you cannot be ignorant of the fact that the new rural community movement and others of a like tendency show that the country people are not going to be "like dumb driven cattle" much longer. Just as soon as there is a general election we are going to see a large increase in the number of rural men in Parliament, and these men will be hard to manage when it comes to a subject like this. If you defeat the O. T. A. at the referendum you will find that every candidate will have to declare himself on total prohibition in the future, and that the women will make that their politics.

Speaking just as an individual, but as one who has been taking notice of public events for forty years and who has studied history with a view to knowing how and why things come about in human affairs, let me say that I judge that the O. T. A. is the best thing in sight for those who hold with the writers of the Liberty League, for we Prohibitionists are, as a whole, going in for it so strongly that if it is sustained we practically lose our chance of getting anything stronger for years to come, unless, of course, it falls out that the personal liberty provided by it to you, to get something stronger than water, is grossly abused. Public opinion will crystallize over this referendum, and, after all, it is public opinion that rules in a country like this. The most radical legislators cannot legislate much ahead of public opinion and make the law effective, while the most reactionary cannot legislate without being put out of office.

I submit that if you defeat the Act at the referendum you will lose more by it than we Prohibitionists, for you will really be playing our game, and in a very few years we shall have Canada as dry as a whistle. We can and we will put up such a fight as we have never put up yet, and we think that we know how to win.

Personally I like any law that permits the sale of any kind of intoxicating drink about as much as a kitten likes mustard. If you feel as I do, that the O. T. A. is far from satisfactory, well then, do as I am going to do, vote for it because it is the best thing in sight for you.

Submitted most respectfully, without any wish to do your thinking for you, but in the hope that you will think over my thinking of your case.

PRICES IN BERLIN

Arrivals From Germany Report a Very Thin Time.

London, Eng.—A correspondent writes: Two ladies who left Berlin only three or four weeks ago are said to have had a trying time in the German capital. Their friends now report that they are better, but that they eat as if they had been famished for a long season. They supply the following as the range of prices now obtaining in Berlin:

Meat—12 to 15 marks per lb.
Butter—20 to32 marks per lb.
Flour—5.50 marks per lb.
Coffee—60 to 70 marks per lb.
Tea—80 marks per lb.
Cocoa—17 marks pr lb.
Common kitchen soap—30 marks per small bar.
Boots—225 marks per pair.
Stockings—22 marks.
Velvet—180 marks per yard.
Sports Coat—450 marks.
Milk—5 marks per quart.

The figures for some of these articles are a little indefinite; the ladies were in a position to pay for good clothing. But as for meat, butter, flour, coffee, tea and milk, etc., it is quite evident that the prices are soaring sky-high. Not only so, but the ladies speak of an allowance of only half a pound of meat a week, and that sometimes three weeks were spent when none came their way. Little wonder is it that they looked thin after a sojourn in such conditions; and that they eat in this country well vigorously.

At the same time, it so happens that a gentleman newly arrived from Spain expresses his surprise at the moderate(!)prices charged in London.

After the ceremony a very dainty luncheon was served. The happy couple left on the evening train for Muskoka Lakes and eastern points.

FARM CONDITIONS

Fall wheat generally is still well advanced, although plowing has slackened somewhat, especially on clay fields, as the land has been getting dry again.

Some fall wheat is yet to be sown, but the bulk of the crop has been put in, and much of it is already drowing up nicely.

Early potatoes are being dug but the yield is rather light. Late potatoes are still growing, and promise to do better.

Roots are now doing fairly well, except turnips, which in several counties are suffering from the attacks of aphis.

Corn cutting is proceeding actively, and generally speaking the crop will be a fair one. Silo filling has begun, and the indications are that nearly all the corn will be well matured and make good silage.

Pastures generally are only fair, and many farmers are doing some feeding. Norfolk, however, claims that alfalfa is giving good pasture.

Market offerings of cattle are about normal, but good heavy animals are comparatively few. Co-operative shipments, however, show a steady increase. Grade dairy cows are selling at from $110 to $175.

According to the Wentworth representative, hogs have been rushed on the Hamilton market on account of the fall in values. Prices over the province vary from $18 to $19.75 a cwt.

There is a good supply of hay on hand, but there will be less grain for feeding than last year, and straw will be relatively scarce. Haldimand states that co-opeiative clubs will engage in the sale of their hay, and are already looking to increasing their supply of concentrated stock foods.

CORN ROAST

Under the auspices of the Girls' Council, a corn roast will be held Friday night at Crawford's Grove, to which all teen-aged girls and their Sunday school teachers, are cordially invited. The girls from each Sunday school are expected to take sufficient corn, bread and butter and dishes for their own group. Supper will be at six o'clock, but it is hoped the girls will come earlier for games and a general good time.

Warning Had Effect.

Helen is sensitive when teased about her hair. After patiently listening to her playmates' taunts for several minutes, she became angry and stamped her small foot and loudly informed them: "I know I've got red hair and I've got a bad temper to match wif it, too. You better 'member that." Helen isn't teased any more.

Judging Others.

We cannot judge our fellow men without in some measure judging ourselves. We are always inwardly laying down laws for others, and by that very act are forming a code for ourselves. The wrong we see in another may be the sin of his ignorance, but there can be no like excuse for us who have recognized and labeled it.

Afghan Music.

The Afghans have a penchant for musical instruments, and the wealthier classes import some costly makes, though occasionally their manner of using them is somewhat startling. An Afghan nobleman sent for a grand piano, and had all the lower part cut off, as he found it most convenient to play it squatting on the floor.

BRED GREAT MEN

Italian City of Florence May Claim High Honor.

Birthplace of Many of Those Who Rank, in Intellectual Ability and Achievement, Far Above the Rest of Mankind.

At first thought one would be apt to claim for London, the great metropolis, the honor of having given birth to the greatest number of the world's geniuses.

Among other great Londoners the following might be cited: Francis Bacon, philosopher and essayist; Spenser, Jonson, Milton and Keats, world-known and honored poets; Hogarth, Turner, Watts, Millais and Holman Hunt, artists whose achievements are acclaimed by all the world of taste; Fox, Pitt and Beaconsfield, statesmen who have influenced the building of empire; Daniel Defoe, the novelist; Faraday and Huxley, the scientists, and many others. All these would stand in the very front ranks of greatness, some of them, like Milton and Bacon, towering above their fellow men like mountain peaks among molehills.

The Frenchman would undoubtedly stand up for the claims of Paris, quoting a long list of poets and painters and novelists and statesmen to justify his boast.

The Italian would probably put the question: "How far back may we go in this quest? For if ancient Rome is to be added to the record of the more modern city, where will you find her equal?"

Then Athens would lift up her classic voice in protest, and quote a long list of her sons who have formed the model of all subsequent time in art and poetry and philosophy and architecture.

But there is another competitor which can beat them all in this combat. Compared with London or Paris, or even Rome, it is a small place.

The city is Firenze—Florence—the native city of Savonarola, of Fra Angelico, of Donatello, of Botticelli, of Leonardo da Vinci, of the mighty Michael Angelo, the glory of his age and of all succeeding ages; Florence, the city of Boccaccio, the father of novelists; of Machiavelli, whose very name is a proverb, and of the famous Medici; yes, and lastly, Florence the city of Dante, the first both in time and position of this glorious galaxy of stars of the first magnitude.

How such a small place ever gave birth to so many mighty sons of genius is one of the standing puzzles of heredity and environment and education. Why does not Glasgow breed geniuses? Nobody knows. During a period of two hundred years Florence was a forcing bed for supreme achievement. During that time the little city broke all records, ancient and modern, and it is hard to see where her competitor is to spring from who shall take away her crown of laurels.

Some War Economies.

There is probably nothing that seems so useless in the eyes of the average person as an Irish potato which has begun to rot, but the department of agriculture in its war-time experiments has discovered that starch can be made from a decayed potato just as well, if not better, than from a good one, and so the surplus stock of the farmer or dealer need no longer be thrown away or wasted.

In like fashion chemists seeking methods to avoid world-wide food shortages have found that sugar cannot only be made from beets, but from sweet potatoes as well. The farmer himself can make good sirup from his sweet potatoes by boiling them until they can be mashed in the water to thick, mushy liquid. To this ground malt is added and the result, after properly cooking for about an hour, is a thick sirup, which is strained through a cloth and used for any sort of sweetening.

Modest Hero.

"My heroic action was this: We were lying close up to their defenses, and for four days had not been able to climb out; we lay like reptiles. There was not a dry spot; one could not get accustomed to it. And H—, the ensign, had been caught on the wire when we had started to attack. At first he asked for help, called on the men by name; but one could not show one's nose without being shot. Then he only groaned and breathed heavily. That went on for four days, and he still lived. It is a sin to grumble at God, but here one says: "Why be careful of one's soul?" I couldn't endure it and took him off the wire; but I got wounded. Then there was an attack, and our men captured the post.—London Times.

Honey in Africa.

Quantities of honey are found in the African forests by the natives in hollow trees. The honey is generally at the summit of the tree, and the men knock down the tree and smoke the bees out of their lodging with burning grass. The honey is then quickly collected and taken to camp.

First Aid

By GENEVIEVE ULMAR

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

For two days Nelson Wade had been a guest at the one hotel at Leesville. He was so reserved and unobtrusive and so persistent in not going out except after dark that the boniface at the hostelry was divided between the surmises as to his being a detective or a bank burglar. Not that poor Wade resembled either of the ilk indicated, for a more forlorn individual it would have been hard to find.

Nelson had come from Dover, 50 miles distant, and his forlornness harked back directly to that quiet little town. There he had lived from boyhood, there he had met and loved pretty, vivacious Nettie Mercer and had become engaged to her. Now that delightful partnership was rudely sundered, and Nelson deemed himself the most wretched of mankind.

A silly quarrel had led to the desolation that now filled his aching heart. Fiery jealous and resentful, Nettie had called her recreant lover to time because he had gone with a girl visiting his sister in search of early violets on Honeysuckle hill.

"You made sure not to bring me any of the spring beauties!" she told him, and before Nelson could explain to Nettie that the girl was to be married in a month and that he only showed her the most ordinary courtesy as a guest of his sister and that their errand had been bootless, not one violet having been garnered, Nettie drew the engagement ring from her finger, threw it at his feet and flounced from the room.

Nelson did not pick up the circlet, nor did he stay to plead forgiveness, for he had done no wrong. Nor did he lower his dignity by glossing over what he considered very reprehensible action on the part of Nettie. He went to the city for a week, leaving her to think over her irrational jealousy and temper. When he came back his confidence in her "cooling down" was considerably abashed.

"Nettie has gone to spend two months with our relatives, the Doanes, at Leesville," her sister explained to him. "There is a gentleman at Leesville, too, she thinks a great deal of."

The gentleman in question was a married cousin of Nettie, but her maneuvering sister, older and wiser, minded not invention and a trifling deceit to place the lovers on the road to making up and behaving themselves.

"Yes," he soliloquized, "I'll go to Leesville. I'll manage to come across Nettie. I'll give her the violets and tell her that, like them, my heart is withering and—and I'll do it on my knees, if necessary, for I cannot live without her!"

And thus it was that Nelson had gone to Leesville, but to find his nightly rambles of no avail. He had located the home of the Doanes, and had hung around it two whole evenings without catching a glimpse of Nettie. The third evening he learned from an overheard conversation of two of the Doane girls in the garden that Nettie was sick in bed with a bad cold and had been confined to her room ever since her arrival.

Just at dusk two evenings later, trailing past the high rear fence of the Doane grounds, the heart of the longing lover thrilled mightily as he noted near a little rustic bower a shawled figure passing to and fro. It was the first outdoor exercise the invalid Nettie had taken. She was alone. What was a mere fence, high mountains, castles, any obstacle, to the impetuous penitent!

Nelson scaled the high palings, got over the top. There was a creak, a crack, a crash, and he landed on the other side in the garden, prone and senseless. A servant coming from the house uttered a sharp scream as she noted the catastrophe.

"Oh, Miss Mercer!" she cried out; "someone is hurt. Quick! quick!" and Nettie came hurrying to the spot. It was just light enough to make out the features of the prostrate invader. Then Nettie echoed the distraction of the maid.

"Oh, he may be killed!" wailed the frantic Nettie. "Hasten to Mrs. Doane and telephone for a doctor," and then as the servant fled toward the house Nettie threw herself upon the ground beside her unconscious lover, lifted his head into her lap and swayed and crooned dismally:

"If he should die—and all my fault!" she wailed. "Oh, Nelson! my poor, wronged darling!"

Nelson Wade opened his eyes. The first thing he noted was the gleam of the engagement ring on Nettie's finger. She had leaned over to kiss him on the cheek. He smiled. He drew from his pocket the faded violets.

"I came for forgiveness," he began.

"It was all my fault!" she whimpered.

"Now, then, a cold bandage and the camphor," sounded the voice of Mrs. Doane, her hands filled with bandages and bottles. "First aid until the doctor comes."

But "first aid" had been already administered effectively, and Nelson arose with a great contented grin on his face, which Nettie emphasized with a smile ravishingly radiant and full of contentment.

Beer or the Boy?

The Referendum Places the Alternative Squarely Before Every Parent in Ontario

HALF a million boys of Ontario have never tasted liquor. The province has been under prohibition for three years and they have had little or no opportunity to acquire the taste or to yield to the temptation. How much better would it be for the safety of the future of these boys upon whom the future of this province depends, if they never acquired the taste for liquor—if the temptation to acquire the dangerous habit of "booze" were never thrust upon them?

Owing to the wording of the Referendum ballot, many parents may not realize that the Beer proposed is intoxicating, more than twice as strong as the beer allowed at the present time under the Ontario Temperance Act, and over five times as strong as the limit allowed for beer defined as non-intoxicating in Great Britain and the United States.

2.51% Alcohol by Weight Means 5.46% Proof Spirits

The Beer of the Ballot is 5.46% Beer. The Ballot says "2.51% alcohol by weight." But that means 5.46% proof spirits, and the Ontario Temperance Act allows only 2.50% proof spirits. The Beer of the Ballot is 118% stronger.

Three glasses of 5.46% beer equals in alcoholic content one ordinary glass of whiskey. Men and boys get drunk on beer. The young fellow when he takes his first drink takes beer. Beer creates the taste for alcohol. It develops drunkards.

A beer drunkard is a lower piece of human degradation than a whiskey drunkard. He is dull, coarse, brutal, bloated, sodden, and very susceptible to disease.

Most beers contain other poisons beside alcohol—lupulin, for example, which destroys the kidneys and shakes the nervous system and is the secret of those crimes of brutal stupidity often laid at the doors of beer drunkards.

The Beer of the Ballot is too strong for your boy or anybody's boy.

What would you not sacrifice for the welfare of your son—time—money—comfort—sleep! Is it too much to ask you to sacrifice 5.46% beer—in the home, in the bar—anywhere within this province of Ontario?

To every question on the Referendum Ballot we ask you to vote—

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

No Repeal—No 5.46% Beer in Government Shops—No 5.46% in Open Bars—No Government Whiskey Shops for Beverage Purposes

Every mother and father in Ontario should vote to retain the Ontario Temperance Act in sacred trust for Ontario's growing boys. Be sure you mark an X after each question and place it under the heading "NO."

OBITUARY

LATE MRS. JAMIESON.

The death on Tuesday, Sept. 9, of Eliza Jane Best, relict of the late George Jamieson, Mount Pleasant, at the age of 94 years, removes one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of Cavan township. Deceased lady was a daughter of the late Samuel Best, who built the first oat mill in Cavan township. Her mother's maiden name was Barbara Webster. Both parents were born in County Armagh, Ireland. She was united in marriage to her late husband seventy-five years ago. To their happy union four children were born, three of whom survive, viz., John, George A., and T. W., all of Mount Pleasant. Their only daughter died fifteen years ago. Three brothers and one sister also survive her: Samuel Best, aged 92, of Magnetawan; Thomas, Mount Pleasant, John, of Peterborough, and Mrs. C. Argue, of Peterborough. The late Mrs. James McLean of Mount Pleasant was also a sister.

The late Mrs. Jamieson was a member of the Presbyterian church, a splendid Christian lady and an excellent neighbor.

The funeral took place on Thursday, Sept. 11, Rev. R. S. Scott officiating, assisted by Rev. W. H. Clarke. The pallbearers were: Messrs. W. G. Andrew and S. T. Jamieson, Grant Richardson, C. Argue and H. G. Best. Among those from a distance who attended the funeral obsequies were: Mr. Cyrus Throop, Mrs. H. Argue, Mr. and Mrs. Moon and Mrs. Walker, of Port Hope; Mr. and Mrs. John Best, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Richardson and Miss Helen Shaw, Peterborough; Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Jamieson, Bethany, Mr. and Mrs. R. Boyd, and Mr. W. F. Best, Omemee; Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Argue and Mrs. C. Argue, Millbrook; Mr. and Mrs. A. Jamieson and Mr. Richard Jamieson, of Hope; Mr. W. G. Jamieson, Hamilton.

The sincere sympathy of the whole community is extended to those bereaved by the passing of this estimable lady.

After Eating Play Safe

It is a Wise Precaution to Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Eating to Avoid Gas, Sour Risings, Heartburn, and the Lazy, Logy Feeling So Apt to Follow.

The range of food is so great, its preparation varies so widely, that few stomachs are strong enough to grapple with all conditions of restaurants, hotels, clubs, depots and banquets. The safe plan is to be provided with Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, that you may eat rich and palatable food served or selected and not be troubled with gas, sour risings, or such forms of indigestion. These tablets digest food, they assist the stomach secretions and for this reason people who travel away from home and must eat as it is served may play safe by taking one or two Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal.

"Now Its Back to Work and No Chance for Indigestion With These Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets"

You can get these tablets in any drug store anywhere in the United States or Canada, which shows in what general favor they are among those who have learned how to enjoy their meals.

BELIEVES IN UNIONS

"I am a workman," said his Grace Archbishop Worrell of Nova Scotia, speaking at Kingston of the world's great unrest, "and if I were engaged in manual labor I should belong to a union. But never would I be dictated to by reckless agitators who try to overthrow all that has been established." The Gospel in action his Grace declared to be the only panacea for suffering humanity.

NORTH LANARK NAMES FARMER

HIRAM MCREARY NOMINATED TO RUN AS U. F. O. CANDIDATE.

Almonte, Sept. 16.—Hiram McCreary of Ramsay township, one of the best-known and best-liked farmers in this district, was unanimously chosen as candidate for the forthcoming Provincial election by the U. F. O. of North Lanark in convention here today. No other candidate was named, and the meeting although very enthusiastic, was without any special feature. It had been fully expected that Mr. McCreary would be the nominee. W. H. Robertson, President of the Almonte U. F. O. Club, presided, and with him on the platform were Mr. Duncan Stewart of Ramsay and Mr. Powers, sent from U. F. O. headquarters at Toronto.

Mr. Powers gave a lengthy address condemnatory of both political parties. There were two women present; indeed the only meeting in the county so far at which there have been women present was this Liberal convention at North Lanark.

Mr. McCreary, in accepting the nomination, spoke very briefly. He said he had been credited with being a staunch Liberal, but the fact was that he had voted Conservative sometimes. He expressed resentment at the description of the U.F.O. by Sir William Hearst that they were camouflaged Grits, and by Mr. Dewart that they were agitators.

Peter S. McLaren Dies.

Kineardine, Sept. 16.—The death of Peter S. McLaren, at the age of 90, occurred at his home in Tiverton yesterday. He was one of the pioneers of Bruce township. He was born in Prescott County and came here in 1852. Since then he has been one of the leading men of the district. He was a contractor and lumberman. D. A. McLaren and Mrs. J. Bowie of Tiverton, and Dr. Stewart McLaren, who enlisted and is still overseas, are the family.

MARSEILLES STRIKE SETTLED

Marseilles, Sept. 16.—The strike of dock labourers and the general strike which resulted from it, have been settled according to an announcement here yesterday.

DOWNEYVILLE.

(Special Correspondence.)

Downeyville, Sept. 17.—Miss Ruby Perdue has gone to North Bay, to attend Normal school.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Goselin and family and Mrs. Alice Goselin and family motored to Victoria Road on Monday.

Miss Burkeholder of Ennismore was the guest of Miss Lila Lucas the past week.

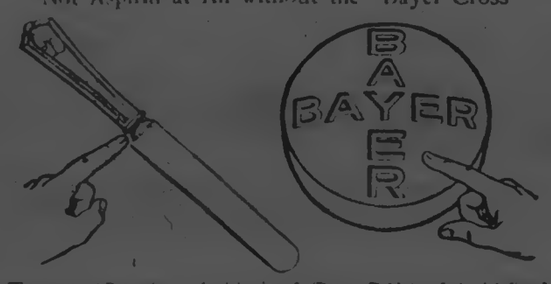
Mr. Patrick Herlihey is spending a few days in Peterborough.

Y. M. C. A. MINSTRELS

A meeting for organization of the Y. M. C. A. minstrels will be held tomorrow (Thursday) night at 8 o'clock. The performances of last season scored such a success that it has been decided to reorganize with the purpose of putting on an even better program during November. Mr. Huycke wil again be conductor and has ambitious plans that will make a fine attraction. The men who have returned since the last performance are especially invited to attend tomorrow night. A much larger chorus is planned for.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"



The name "Bayer" on Aspirin is of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which like Sterling on silver. It positively contains proper directions for Colds, identifies the only genuine Aspirin. Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains and Pain generally. the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

Always buy an unbroken package

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

BACK TO CIVIES BILL IN THE HOUSE

THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT DOMINION PROSECUTORS IS NOW SUGGESTED.

Ottawa, Sept 15 The bill to amend the Act respecting the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, which is to be referred to a special committee of the Commons, and will thus afford an opportunity for considering the adequacy of the measures taken to facilitate the re-absorption of war veterans into the civil population, was introduced by the House by Hon. N W Rowell just before adjournment tonight.

It has been before the Senate since the opening days of the session. The upper chamber, however, adjourned immediately after it had approved ofthe Peace Treaty. The Government, therefore, decided to transfer the measure to the Commons and to refer to a committee when it had been read a second time. In introducing it Mr. Rowell explained that it was intended to give the the Government and the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment power to deal with questions which have been dealt with by order-in-Council under the authority ofthe War Measures Act. Among those questions ist he definition of classes of men entitled to vocational training, and also the scale of allowance to be paid to such men

Col. J. A. Currie, of North Simcoe, has announced his intention to move the adjournment of the House to discuss the demand of the war veterans for appointment of a Royal Commission to consider their claims to additional assistanre in re-establishing themselves in civil life. The House, however, carried out the plan made on Friday and proceeded directly to Government orders and the resumption of the debate on the address in reply to the speech form the Throne.

Succeeding in the States.

W F. Maclean, of South York, dealing with this subject asserted that the United States was succeeding in reducing the prices of staple articles because the Federal Government was assuming full responsibility for the prosecution of persons taking undue profits and of tension of the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada, and the appointment of Dominion prosecutors throughout the country to enable the Minister of Justice to enforce the Combines and Fair Prices Act directly, instead of through the Provincial Attorney-General and the ordinary Criminal Court of the land.

Other speakers were Edmond Proulix, of Prescott; A. T. Leger, of Kent, N.B., H. E. Lavinger, of Quebec, who suggested that although the country was not in a position to grant the full amount of post-war gratuity, asked by the war veterans, the overnment should have appointed the desired Royal Commission Jas. McIsaac, of Kings P.E.I.; and H. A. Fortier, of Labelle

STOWAWAY MIKE GOING BACK

Belgian Boy's Fourth Attempt to be an American Frustrated.

New York, Sept. 16 Mike Gilbrooley is on his way back to Belgium on the transport Henderson. Thus ends the fourth attempt of the war's champion stowaway to be an American Mike, who is 14 years old, has numerous friends among the doughboys of the A. E. F. but his influence does not extend to the immigration authorities.

His inheritance of blarney helped him to get adopted by a rich New York woman on his third trip as a stowaway on an army transport, but a propensity for shooting craps soon caused him to be returned to the immigration officials.

Mike's father died before the war and his Belgian mother, he says, was killed by a German shell, which also destroyed his home.

Start Tomorrow and Keep It Up Every Morning

We're not here long, so let's make our stay agreeable. Let us live well eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, and look well. What a glorious condtion to attain, and yet, nay very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of theinternal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestiblewaste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast, while you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for thorough flushing of all the digestive organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on thesubject of inside-bathing before breakfast.

G.W.V.A. EXECUTIVE DEFENDS TURLEY

SUBMITS RESIGNATION, BUT IT IS REJECTED—RESOLUTIONS PASSED YESTERDAY.

Toronto, Sept. 17. The Provincial Executive of the Great War Veterans' Association in session today, vindicatedtheir secretary, Comrade W. E. Turley, and refused to accept his resignation which was before them for consideration. Comrade Turley felt that, owing to the misrepresentations, continually made with regard to him at meetings of returned men, he was no longer inclined to serve in his present capacity. He tendered his resignation with the statement that itwas final. But he is still to go on as the Ontario G. W. V. A. secretary, the executive with much enthusiasm refusing to accept his course of action.

The Ontario G. W. V. A. executive likewise up in arms concerning statements that have been made with reward to their association, and officials at recent mass meetings. Their meeting today brought to light the fact that their attitude might not much longer be the peaceful and more or less indifferent one maintained up tothe present.

Following are the resolutions unanimously passed today:

"That the Executive Committee Ontario Provincial Command G.W.V.A., cannot any longer permit the maligning of the association, or its said officers, by any person, and hereby authorizes the president to engage counsel and enter legal action to vindicate the honor of the association and its employees.

"That after serous consideration the resignation of Comrade W. E. Turley as a secretary-treasurer, Ontario Provincial Command G.W.V.A. be not accepted."

"Whereas the policy of the Ontario Provincial G.W.V.A. Command is always to obtain the maximum of benefits for the returned men, irrespective of whether it be war bonus pensions to widows, orphans or disabled men, re-establishment or retraining of any kind

"Be it resolved we, the members of the G. W. V. A. Executive Committee of the Ontario Provincial Command, heartily endorse the action of the Dominion Executive in pressing upon the Government the advisability of immediate action in the matter of the investigation of the whole question of civil re-establishment by means of a Parliamentary Commission.

"We further view with disfavor any speech of action on the part of the members of this association which shall tend to embarass or interfere withthe attitude of our supreme command in respect of the Vancouver resolution regarding re-establishment bonus, while the question is under discussion between the Government and the Dominion Executive.

CROWD TO SEE BEER BURNED

Chicago, Sept. 16 Fire and fire water were to meet by order of the court this afternoon at the dump yard in Woodstock. Townspeople and farmers from miles around gathered to watch the destruction of 15,000 bottles of beer confiscated under the search and seizure act. The beer is believed to be the first actually destroyed under the new act. Judge Barnes' order directs that it shall be taken to the dump, piled together the cases saturated with kerosene and set fire. There was hot discussion in Woodstock throughout the morning as to whether the beer would burn or put out the fire.

The liquor constitutes the cargo of five trucks that were seized as they were smuggling their load from Wisconsin to Chicago. All the defendants arrested in the case have pleaded guilty and been fined. Other cases of the sort are still pending before Judge Barnes, one of them involving a truck which had 9,000 bottles aboard.

CITIZENS' LIBERTY LEAGUE

Is Absolutely Opposed to a Return of the Old License System

The Citizens' Liberty League, consisting of prominent men and women in Ontario, place themselves on record as being unqualifiedly opposed to any measures that tend to bring back the bar and the unrestricted sale of spirituous liquors.

On the other hand, the Citizens' Liberty League sincerely believes that the present situation demands a repeal of the unsatisfactory Ontario Temperance Act, and the inauguration of sane, moderate temperance legislation.

These leading men and women, with no selfish ends to serve, and having in mind only the best interests of all the people in Ontario, are convinced that the true solution to the temperance problem is to allow the general sale of more appetizing, non-intoxicating beer and light wines, with the sale of spirituous liquors placed under proper Government regulations and restrictions.

Unite with the Citizens' Liberty League in its earnest, sincere endeavor to obtain temperance legislation which meets the needs of all but curtails the liberties of none.

Wedding Anniversary.

A very pleasant surprise was given Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Leigh on the evening of Sept. 2nd when about thirty of the members of the Baillieboro appointment went to the parsonage and celebrated the wedding anniversary of their pastor and his wife. An appreciation address was read by Mrs. Welford Dawson and Mrs. W. Thompson and a miscellaneous shower of household articles, groceries and fruit gave evidence of kindly remembrance. Games and music were followed by refreshments and a pleasant evening spent. Several of those present had been present at the wedding, twenty-three years ago.

IVESON VS. ACKERMAN.

Plaintiff's Appeal Was Dismissed With Costs.

In April last Mr. Iveson's action against Major Ackerman for wages claimed to be due in connection with the Model Trench Exhibit that toured the United States in the latter part of 1917, was tried before His Honor Judge Huycke, who, after carefully going into the matter dismissed Mr. Iveson's claim. From this judgment Mr. Iveson appealed to the Supreme Court at Toronto The Judge of that court heard the argument yesterday at Osgoode Hall and dismissed Iveson's appeal with costs. It was pointed out that these men had all been most fairly treated by Major Ackerman and that he had more than carried out his obligations to them.

Mr. Widdifield presented the appeal to the court. Mr. Medd opposed the appeal.

New Branch G.W.V.A. Now Organized

COMRADE WEBB PRESIDENT OF ASSOCIATION FOR NORWOOD AND HASTINGS AREA.

The returned men of the Norwood and Hastings area last night organized a branch of the Great War Veterans' Association. Comrade Webb was chosen as President and Comrade William Puffer as Secretary

The meeting was held in King's Hotel and the entire district was represented, from Hastings to Stoney Lake. Comrade T. J. Johnston and Comrade S. N. Dancey, the latter just returned from France, conducted the organization work. They explained the purposes of the G. W. V. A. and urged the great need of organization for the men who fought in the great war. There was a splendid response.

The protection and care of disabled men and dependants of those who made the supreme sacrifice was emphasized as the first duty encumbent upon the people of Canada. The promotion of the weal and welfare of the veterans of the war would have to come from the men themselves.

There were twenty-nine charter members, while many others joined later in the evening. The splendid calibre of the officers, the plentitude of returned men in the district and the magnificent spirit that marked the inaugural meeting augur well for the future of the new branch. The officers anticipate a membership of well upwards of one hundred, in that the command embraces Norwood, Hastings, Westwood, Stoney Lake and other points in the district.

A club and home for the members is one of the plans launched and the county council and town council will be approached in an effort to secure financial assistance. A public demonstration will be held in the near future for the purpose of acquainting the general public with the aims and objects of the G. W. V. A. and the general attitude of the returned man. Col. Johnston and Capt. Dancey both emphasized the need of having public opinion behind the veterans of the great war. "We have the public with us now," they pointed out, "and we can hold them and what is more, we will hold them It is essential to the future of the G. W. V. A."

FOCH SEEKS SON'S GRAVE.

Marshal Asks Belgium to Search for Hero's Body.

Paris, France, Sept. 15—Marshal Foch recently asked the Belgian Government to have a search made for the body of his son, who was killed in August 1914, in the Belgian Ardennes. Marshal Foch has religiously refrained from mentioning his lost son and few know that the younger Foch was killed early in the war.

Baldness Caused by Wax.

Baldness due to hardening of earwax has been reported in two cases by Dr. J. Deroide, a French physician. In both patients, men of 32 and 52 years respectively, bald patches had appeared on the back and both sides of the head, and careful examination of mouth, teeth, throat, nose and chest revealed no exciting cause. Both ears of each man were closed by wax. In the second week after removal of these plugs, new hair began to grow, and it soon became firm and abundant.

Most Costly Map.

The most costly map in the world is a map of France which was presented to the republic by the czar of Russia when the Franco-Russian alliance was consummated. The groundwork of the map is polished jasper and the chief towns are represented by precious stones and their names inscribed in gold. The rivers are strips of polished platinum, and the 87 departments are set out on a wonderful scheme of blazing gems.

Facial Expression.

The frequent repetition of any facial expression causes permanent alterations in the expression, and these correspond with, and suggest to the beholder, the emotional state that has predominated; so that the man who is always laughing comes to look "a jolly man," the thinker a thoughtful man, and the woman who worries begins to wear a worried look that persists.—Darwin.

Recipe for Happiness.

This gospel of happiness is one which every one should lay to heart. Set out with the invincible determination that you will bear burdens and not impose them. Whether the sun shines or the rain falls, show a glad face to your neighbor. If you must fall in life's battle, you can at least fall with a smile on your face.—Well spring.

Moroccan Charm.

Moroccan wives have a recipe for winning back affection. The suspicious wife draws a line in honey from forehead to chin and collects the drippings. Then she rubs the tip of her tongue with a fig leaf till it bleeds and soaks seven grains of salt in the blood. This she mixes with the honey and puts the dose in the spring husband's food.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"Yes? All these plans, as I have said, were known to Drayton. A few nights ago he came to me. He wanted to send an emissary to Baldpate—a man whom Cargan had never met—one who could perhaps keep up the pretense of being here for some other reason than a connection with the bribe. He asked me to undertake the mission, to see all I could and if possible to secure the package of money. This last seemed hardly likely. At any rate, I was to gather all the evidence I could. I hesitated.

"I had loudly proclaimed my championship of civic virtue, however, and here was a chance to serve Reuton. I acquiesced. The day I was to start up here poor Kendrick came back. He, too, had been a student of mine, a friend of both Drayton and Hayden. Seven years ago he and Hayden were running the Suburban together under Thornhill's direction. The two young men became mixed up in a rather shady business deal, which was more of Hayden's weaving than Kendrick's. Hayden came to Kendrick with the story that they were about to be found out and suggested that one assume the blame and go away. I am telling you all this in confidence as a friend of my friends, the Bentleys, and a young man whom I like and trust despite your momentary madness in the matter of yellow locks. We are all susceptible.

"Kendrick went. For seven years he stayed away in an impossible tropic town, believing himself sought by the law, for so Hayden wrote him. Not long ago he discovered that the matter in which he and Hayden had offended had never been disclosed after all. He hurried back to the states. You can imagine his bitterness. He had been engaged to Myra Thornhill, and the fact that Hayden was also in love with her may have had something to do with his treachery to his friend."

CHAPTER XXI.

In the Name of the Law.

MAGEE'S eyes strayed to where the two victims of the dead man's falsehood whispered together in the shadows, and he wondered at the calmness with which Kendrick had greeted Hayden in the room above.

"When Kendrick arrived," Professor Bolton went on, "first of all he consulted his old friend Drayton. Drayton informed him that he had nothing to fear should his misstep be made public, for in reality there was at this late day no crime committed in the eyes of the law. He also told Kendrick how matters stood, and of the net he was spreading for Hayden. He had some fears, he said, about sending a man of my years alone to Baldpate inn. Kendrick begged for the chance to come too. So, without making his return known in Reuton, three nights ago he accompanied me here. Three nights—it seems years. I had secured keys for us both from John Bentley. As we climbed the mountain I noticed your light, and we agreed it would be best if only one of us revealed ourselves to the intruders in the inn. So Kendrick let himself in by a side door while I engaged you and Bland in the office. He spent the night on the third floor. In the morning I told the whole affair to Quimby, knowing his interest in both Hayden and Kendrick, and secured for Kendrick the key to the annex. Almost as soon as I arrived"—

"You state it vividly and with truth," Professor Bolton replied. "Night before last the ordinance numbered 45 was due to pass the council. It was arranged that when it did, Hayden, through his man Rutter, or personally, would telephone the combination of the safe to the mayor of Reuton. Cargan and Bland sat in the office watching for the flash of light at the telephone switchboard, while you and I were Max's prisoners above. Something went wrong. Hayden heard that the courts would issue an injunction making ordinance No. 45 worthless. So, although the council obeyed Cargan's instructions and passed the bill, Hayden refused to give the mayor the combination."

"Then melodrama began in dead earnest," he continued. "I have always been a man of peace, and the wild scuffle that claimed me for one of its leading actors from that moment will remain in my memory as long as I live. Cargan dynamited the safe. Kendrick held him up. You held up Kendrick. I peeked through your window and saw you place the package of money under a brick in your fireplace"—

"You—the curtains were down," interrupted Magee.

"I found a half inch of open space," explained the old man. "Yes, I actually lay on my stomach in the snow and watched you. In the morning for the first time in my life I committed robbery. My punishment was swift and sure. Bland swooped down upon me. Again this afternoon I came upon the precious package, after a long search, in the hands of the hermit of Baldpate. I thought we were safe at last when I handed the package to Kendrick in my room tonight, but I had not counted on the wild things a youth like you will do for love of a designing

"No," said Mr. Magee, answering aloud his own question. "You are wrong, sir. I do not know just what the motives of Miss Norton were in desiring this money, but I will stake my reputation as an honest holdup man that they were perfectly all right."

"Perhaps," replied the other, quite unconvinced. "But what honest motive could she have? I am able to assign her no role in this little drama"—

"Pardon me," broke in Magee, "but would you mind telling me why Miss Thornhill came up to Baldpate to join in the chase for the package?"

"Her motive," replied the professor, "does her great credit. For several years her father, Henry Thornhill, has been forced through illness to leave the management of the railway's affairs to his vice president, Hayden. Late yesterday the old man heard of this proposed bribe—on his sick bed. He was very nearly insane at the thought of the disgrace it would bring upon him. He tried to rise himself and prevent the passing of the package. His daughter, a brave, loyal girl, herself undertook the task."

"Then," said Mr. Magee, "Miss Thornhill is not distressed at the loss of the most important evidence in the case."

"I have explained the matter to her," returned Professor Bolton. "There is no chance whatever that her father's name will be implicated."

"Did Miss Thornhill and Kendrick meet for the first time after his exile upstairs—in No. 7?" Mr. Magee wanted to know.

"Yes," answered Professor Bolton. "In one of his letters long ago Hayden told Kendrick he was engaged to the girl. It was the last letter Kendrick received from him."

There was a pause.

"The important point now," the old man went on "is the identity of this girl to whom you have made your princely gift out of the goodness of your young heart. I propose to speak to the woman she has introduced as her mother and elicit what information I can."

He crossed the floor, followed by Mr. Magee, and stood by the woman's chair. She looked up, her eyes heavy with sleep, her appearance more tawdry than ever in that faint light.

"Madam," remarked the professor, with the air of a judge trying a case, "your daughter has tonight made her escape from this place with a large sum of money earnestly desired by the prosecuting attorney of Reuton county. In the name of the law I command you to tell me her destination and what she proposes to do with that package of greenbacks."

The woman blinked stupidly in the dusk.

"She ain't my daughter," she replied, and Mr. Magee's heart leaped up. "I can tell you that much. I keep a boarding house in Reuton, and Miss—the girl you speak about—has been my boarder for three years. She brought me up here as a sort of chaperon, though I don't see as I'm old enough for that yet. You don't get nothing else out of me, except that she is a perfectly lovely young woman, and your money couldn't be safer with the president of the United States."

Mr. Magee could have embraced this faded woman for her news. He looked at his watch. It was 12:20.

"The siege is over!" he cried. "I shall not attempt to direct your actions any longer. Mr. Peters, will you please go down to the village and bring back Mr. Quimby and—the coroner?"

"The coroner!" The mayor of Reuton jumped to his feet. "I don't want to be in on any inquest scene. Come on, Max, let's get out of here."

Bland stood up. His face was white and worried. His gay plumage no longer set the tone for his mood.

"I think I'll go, too," he announced, looking hopefully at Magee.

"I'm no longer your jailer," Magee said. "Professor, these gentlemen are your witnesses. Do you wish to detain them?"

"See here," cried the mayor angrily, "there ain't no question but that you can find me in Reuton any time you want me at the little room on Main street. Anybody can tell you my hours. The door's always open to any reformer that has the nerve to climb the stairs. Look me up there. I'll make it interesting for you."

"I certainly shall," the professor replied, "and very soon. Until then you may go when and where you please."

"Thanks!" sneered the mayor. "I'll expect you. I'll be ready. I've had to get ready to answer your kind before. You think you got me, eh? Well, you're a fool to think that. As for Drayton, the pup, the yellow streaked pup, I'll talk to Mr. Drayton when I get back to Reuton."

"Before you go, Bland," remarked Magee, smiling, "I want to ask about Arabella. Where did you get her?"

"Some of it happened to a friend of mine," the ex-haberdasher answered, "a friend that keeps a clothing store. I got this suit there. I changed the story here and there."

Mr. Magee laughed, but over the long lean face of Bland not the ghost of a smile flitted. He was frightened through and through.

"You're a fine bunch," sneered Mr. Max. "Reformers, eh? Well, you'll get what the rest of 'em always got. We'll let you open knobs and leave you on the doorstep of some orphan asylum before we're through with you."

"Come on, Lou," said Cargan "Drayton's a smart guy, Doc. Where's his proof? Eloped with the bundle of dry goods this young man's taken a fancy to. And even if he had the money—I've been up against this many a time. You're wasting your talents, Doc. Good night! Come on, boys."

Mr Magee turned back from the window to the dim interior of the hotel office. He who had come to Baldpate inn to court loneliness had never felt so lonely in his life, for he had lost sight of her—in the great Reuton station of his imagination she had slipped from his dreams to go where he could not follow, even in thought.

Selecting a log of the hermit's cutting from the stock beside the hearth Mr. Magee tossed it on the fire. There followed a shower of sparks and a flood of red light in the room. Through this light Kendrick advanced to Magee's side, and the first of the Baldpate hermits saw that the man's face was lined by care, that his eyes were tired even under the new light in them, that his mouth was twisted bitterly.

"Poor devil," thought Magee.

Kendrick drew up chairs for himself and Magee and they sat down. Behind them the bulky Mrs. Norton dozed, dreaming perhaps of her Reuton boarding house, while Miss Thornhill and the professor talked intermittently in low tones. The ranks at Baldpate were thinning rapidly; before long the place must settle back with a sigh in the cold to wait for its first summer girl.

"Mr. Magee," said Kendrick nervously, "you have become involved in an unkind, a tragic story. I do not mean the affair of the bribe—I refer to the matter between Hayden and myself."

"If you had rather not"— began Magee.

"No," replied Kendrick, "I prefer that you should know. It was you who took the pistol from—his hand. I do not believe that even I can tell you all that was in Hayden's mind when he went into that other room and closed the door. It seems to me preposterous that a man of his sort should take his life under the circumstances. I feel somehow that there is a part of the story even I do not know. But let that be."

He bowed his head in his hands.

"Ever since I came into this room," he went on, "the eyes of a pompous little man have been following me about. They have constantly recalled to me the nightmare of my life. You have noticed, no doubt, the pictures of the admiral that decorate these walls?"

"I have," replied Magee. He gazed curiously at the nearest of the portraits. How persistently this almost mythical starched man wove in and out of the melodrama at Baldpate inn.

"Well," continued Kendrick, "the admiral's eyes haunt me. Perhaps you know that he plays a game—a game of solitaire. I have good reason to remember that game. It is a silly incon sequential game You would scarcely believe that it once sent a man to hell."

He shuddered.

RUGBY NEWS

The O.R.F.U. executive will meet at the Central Y.M.C.A., Toronto, on Friday evening, Sept. 19, to group the clubs in the various series. At the meeting also the question of the changes in the playing rules will be discussed.

Members of the executive who are unable to attend have been asked to send their opinion by mail.

Clubs entering in the various series should have their application in before next Friday in order to get suitable groupings.

Fees for intermediate and junior clubs are five dollars, for interscholastic clubs, two dollars.

Certificates will be given out immediately upon receipt of fees.

When certificates are signed by the player they should be returned for signature by the O.R.F.U. secretary. Club will be notified by the O.R.F.U.

There is no age limit in the intermediate or senior series. Players in the junior series must be under 21 years by Sept. 1 of the playing year. Players in the interscholastic series must be bona fide students. Night students are not permitted. One master who has never played senior football is entitled to play with the team.

Rule books will be sent to all clubs on payment of fees.

The secretary of the O.R.F.U. is R. Hewitson, Evening Telegram, Toronto (Adelaide 2600). His home address is 195 Glenholme avenue (Junction 2572).

GRATUITY LEAGUE OPPOSED

Certain Sections of Returned Men Not in Sympathy With League.

Toronto, Sept. 17. Signs are not wanting that the demand for an increased war gratuity is going to meet with resistance from certain sections of the returned men themselves before the whole issue is thrashed out by the forthcoming Parliamentary Committee. When the 3rd Battalion Veterans' Association meets on Thursday night next at 77 Queen st. west, a resolution is to be introduced condemning without qualification the stand taken by the Gratuity League and other champions of the bigger gratuity. It is quite probable that Sec. J. J. Shanahan will introduce this resolution, which already is reported to have the backing of a section of the association. The association was not to have met till the ensuing Thursday, but the progress of the gratuity issue has precipitated affairs, and a lively debate on the subject is anticipated. If the majority of members support the projected resolution, it is possible that the association may send its own delegation to the Parliamentary Committee to set forth its views in opposition to the $2,000 scheme and on the general question of what the returned man most needs at the present time.

GOOD WORK BY SCOUTS

Rescue Two Children at Exhibition In Exhausted Condition.

The services of the Boy Scouts were much appreciated yesterday afternoon at the exhibition, where they found two little folk of tender years—a boy and a girl—who had strayed from home. The boys carried the children into an emergency tent kindly donated by the Metropolitan Co., where they were tenderly cared for by Nurse Ellis Simons, and medically served by Drs. King and Morgan. The lad belongs to East City and the little girl comes from out of town. Both were in an exhausted condition when rescued by the Scouts.

EXHIBIT OF FALL CLOTHING

Oak Hall Has Fine Showing of Men's Suits and Overcoats at Fair.

The exhibit of Oak Hall at the Fair this year is well worth seeing. It comprises all the new designs and materials in men's and boys' fall and winter suits and overcoats. The exhibit is contained in the firm's own collapsible booth near the entrance to the main building and will have to be seen to be appreciated. There are suits for the business man, suits for the young men and suits for the small boy as well as a good showing of overcoats for all. It is the intention of the management of Oak Hall to show this exhibit at the smaller fairs throughout the county where it will no doubt attract as much attention as it has done at Peterboro Fair.

CONCERT TO-NIGHT AT EXHIBITION

A concert of vocal and instrumental numbers will be rendered this evening by Conservatory of Music talent, in the big flower booth on the exhibition grounds, commencing at 7.30 and continuing until 10 or after.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

CORNELL—FEE

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Fee, Cannington, Toronto, when their only daughter, Willena, M., was married to Roy K. Cornell, of Peterboro, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Cornell of Omemee. The Rev. Mr. Wight, of Cannington, officiating.

The bride, who was unattended, moved on the arm of her father and wore a gown of white satin and georgette with crystal trimming and was well fought with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of white bridal roses.

REID—WOOD

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Wood, of Otonabee, at 11 o'clock on Friday, Sept. 12th, when their eldest daughter, Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Henry R. Reid of the same township. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. E. Honey in the presence of near relatives only. The bride was given away by her father, while Miss Leata Wood played the wedding march, and her little sister, Jean acted as flower girl. After the honeymoon the happy couple will reside in Otonabee.

GREY—WILLIAMS.

At 12 o'clock this morning Trinity parsonage was the scene of a very pretty wedding when Alys Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Williams, was united in marriage to Harold Wilmer Gray, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Gray, 916 6th Avenue, Calgary, Alta. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. E. Majott.

The bride, who wore her traveling suit of taupe gabardine with hat of Pekin blue trimmed with ostrich tips and corsage bouquet of sweetheart roses, was attended by her sister, Mrs. P. L. Brown, in black satin suit and hat trimmed with sequins and white spray and corsage bouquet of sweetheart and ophelia roses. The bride's niece, little Eleanor Brown, dressed in white and carrying a basket of pale pink asters, made a pretty little flower girl. The bride's only ornament was a diamond necklace, the gift of the groom.

The groom was supported by Mr. J. Menzies, brother-in-law of the bride.

The young couple left on the noon C. P. R. train for Ottawa and points east on a short honeymoon, after which they will leave for Calgary where they will reside.

Many beautiful gifts were received showing the high esteem in which the young couple are held.

McCULLOUGH—WILLS.

On Wednesday afternoon at George street Methodist parsonage Miss Zella Gracetina Wiles was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. McCullough of Smith's Falls. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. J. Thomas. The young couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dummitt.

Mr. and Mrs. McCullough left on the C. P. R. train for Toronto on a short honeymoon, and upon their return will reside in Smith's Falls.

O'LEARY—ADAMS.

A quiet wedding was solemnized Tuesday evening at George street Methodist parsonage when Miss Phoebe Adams became the bride of Mr. John Joseph O'Leary, both of Toronto.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. J. Thomas. The young couple will reside in Toronto.

REV. AND MRS. NEVILLE ENTERTAINS TEACHERS

Rev. and Mrs. Neville, 351 Charlotte street, entertained the teachers and officers of Trinity Sunday School at their home Friday evening in honor of Miss Alys Williams, whose marriage took place today.

During the evening Miss Williams was presented with several pieces of silver, a bouquet of roses, and the following address:

Dear Miss Williams:

Your friends in the Sunday school of Trinity Church have learned with very mingled feelings of your coming departure from Peterborough. While we would assume the privilege, along with your many other friends of offering you our congratulations and best wishes on the eve of your marriage, we are also conscious that the place which you have occupied in our Sunday school life has been so efficiently and unassumingly filled that you will be greatly missed from that place when you cease it. You have spent your whole life, so far as Sunday school surroundings are concerned, in Trinity Sunday school, first as scholar in the various grades and departments, and then in the primary department as teacher, and more recently as teacher of a class of junior girls. It is not to be wondered at if the ties that bind you to us and us to you are very close and that we should keenly regret the necessity which takes you from us, when viewing matters from our own angle of profit and loss. But we are so desirous that your cup of happiness should be filled to the brim that we willingly surrender our claims upon you not only to your husband-to-be, who will be the chief sharer and source of your happiness; but also we hope to some other Sunday school in which you may still make use of all those God-given talents with which you have enriched our school through the past years. Will you accept this little token of our good will and friendship, and with the present also take the promise of our prayers and best wishes for you as you go out to make new friends and establish new ties of church and Sunday school life.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess, after which the gathering dispersed.

MARRIED

SAWERS—RUSH—At St. John's Church, Peterborough, on Wednesday, Sept. 17, 1919 by Rev. Canon J. C. Davidson, Marion, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rush and Rev. Frederick John Sawers, rector of St. Peter's Church, Cobourg.

IN MEMORIAM.

DIXON—In loving memory of Bombardier Herbert Chesterfield Dixon, 60th Battery, formerly of The Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry, C. E. F., son of Albert E. and Blanche M. Dixon, 784 George street, Peterborough, who was killed in action in France on September 17, 1918.

Miss Wilson of Ottawa spent the week-end in Peterborough the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Staunton.

Miss Babe Martin, Lock street, has returned home after spending the past two months holidaying at Huntsville and Lake of Bays, Muskoka.

Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Gould, of Camp Bedford, who have been touring in the west, for several months, are guests of Mrs. George Turner, 157 Gilmour Street.

Mrs. Gordon Grier, of Gilmour St. and children, are visiting her mother at Port Dalhousie, Ontario.

Mr. John F. Davidson has returned to Toronto after spending a few weeks at his home, Peterborough, before resuming his studies at Trinity College, Toronto. For the past three months "Jack" has been hard at work as a member of the Frontier College in a huge camp of the Hydro Electric Co. at Niagara Falls, where university students live and work side by side with foreign laborers and teach them the elements of Canadian citizenship for two hours in the evening. This work is a very strenuous one but of great national usefulness.

Mr. Hamilton Hall of Toronto is in the city attending the Exhibition.

HEROES HONORED AT WESTWOOD

A very pleasant reception was given at Westwood last Friday in honor of Russel Knox and Corp. Kirk, two returned heros of great distinction. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. for West Peterborough, and Mr. J. Thompson, M.P.P. for East Peterborough made suitable speeches filled with glowing praise for the two men who have returned so recently from serving their country on the battle field. Corp. Kirk was especially congratulated because he was a son panted by an English bride.

Mr. Humphries delighted the audience by a few selections on the mouth organ.

The chairman, Col. R. E. Bucke, presented each man with a handsome gold watch and after they had replied in modest soldierly fashion, the meeting broke up with the singing of the National Anthem.

OCEAN LIMITED TRAIN ROBBED OF $75,000 BY MASKED BANDITS

Smashed in Door of Express Car This Morning Gagged and Tied up Mail Clerks--Booty Secured at Harlaka--Organized Posses Scouring Country Near St. Thomas

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, Sept. 18. — Five masked men bound and gagged the mail clerks on the "Ocean Limited" (Canadian National Railway) near Harlaka, early this morning and robbed the mail car of seventy-five thousand dollars in silver which had been shipped from Montreal for Halifax.

Five Masked Men.

The "Ocean Limited" does not stop after she leaves Levis until Harlaka is reached. At Harlaka the train had barely pulled out, according to Mail Clerk Foreman, than the back door of the mail car was crushed in and five masked men, pointing automatics in the faces of the mail clerks, shouted, "Hands up!"

The bandits quickly bound and gagged the clerks and then made a dash to the bags containing the money.

At St. Thomas the bandits escaped as the train slowed up. It is believed they had an automobile hidden in the bushes, and it is thought they made for the United States border and were expected to attempt to enter Maine.

Clerks Tied Together.

No one noticed anything the matter on the train at St. Thomas, and it was only at Cap St. Ignace, the next stop, that the conductor, passing along the platform of the station, grew suspicious about the quiet that prevailed in the mail car. On making investigation he found the back door of the car split open and five clerks securely tied together. One of these, E. Rene, was found to be suffering from nervous shock from his experience.

Scouring the Country.

Posses have been organized and are scouring the country in the neighborhood of St. Thomas and Cap St. Ignace.

The distance between Levis and Harlak is about 25 miles, most of it up hill, so that the train generally takes about three-quarters of an hour to make this trip. The bandits boarded the "Ocean Limited" at Montreal.

The train reached Levis about midnight, and the bandits were able to effect their robbery and escape entirely in the dark.

Statement is Given Out.

The following statement was given out this morning at the postmaster's office here:

Thought Him a Tramp.

Passing in front of Dohen's hotel at Levis one of the clerks noticed a man, who jumped on the railing of the side door and sat there. The clerk did not interfere, believing the man to be a tramp stealing a ride, and not caring to kick him off for fear of killing him on the track. A little farther on the mail clerk saw other men jump on the train. He signalled them to hop off, but they paid no heed and stood between the coupling of the mail car and baggage car behind. At Harlaka, where the train stopped to enable a pushing engine to uncouple and return to Levis, two of the bandits entered the car, held the crew at the point of revolvers, and rifled the mail. The robbers were well clad, wore automobile goggles and spoke English.

Took All Valuables.

The postmaster said it was lucky the robbery was not committed on a day when a comparatively large money shipment was being made. Some days the car carried two hundred thousand dollars. Two robbers entered the car while the other three guarded the door. Having bound and gagged the mail clerks they asked who was in charge, and upon Vailleau indicating that he was, they unbound and ungagged him and compelled him to show where the registered mail and money packets were. They then rifled these packets, bound and gagged Vailleau once more, and rifled the other mail, taking everything valuable, but not touching the personal property of the clerks.

STARTLING ACCUSATIONS MADE AND DENIED AT THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

Charges Against Chief Thompson Concerning Levasseur Liquor Practically Cleared up---Gerald Dunford Tells of Wild Schemes in Liquor Business and Jail Breaking---Evidence Denied by Witness Investigation Adjourned Till October the 8th

Startling statements covering wide accusations, and flat contradictions, were in evidence at yesterday afternoon's session of the police investigation. The investigation has been sitting for two and a half days now, and from the evidence the final result is about as certain at the present time as it was at the beginning. One thing, however the investigation is doing and that is it is revealing a great deal to the eyes of the general public that few ever realized was being done in this supposedly law-abiding district.

Liquor Taken To Hospital.

Edward Cooney a baggage transfer man was the first to occupy the witness box. He swore that he had taken a couple of boxes of ale from the police station to either St. Joseph's Hospital or the House of Refuge some three years ago last Christmas. He swore that he was certain he had delivered these to one of the places mentioned. He could not state definitely the time or year that he had made the transfer.

Patrol Sergt. Dainnard was sent into the witness box and swore that he had gone to St. Joseph's Hospital this (Wednesday) morning and had seen there two cases of liquor that were said to have been sent there from the police station. Of course, he could not personally identify these as those confiscated in the Levaneur case, but that was what he understood from the sisters at the hospital.

Dunford Next Witness.

Gerald Dunford, a baggage transfer man of this city, was the next witness called and occupied the witness stand for most of the afternoon. He admitted having been in the habit of carting liquor for several different parties, including Ray Sullivan, Reg. (Buck) Wynch, and Joe Rosenburg.

In answer to a question from Mr. O'Connell, he stated that he remembered the occasion when he was carting liquor here from Indian River and was stopped by Mr. Hamilton. His story was similar to that of Mr. Hamilton given during the first sitting of the investigation. He was carting liquor from Indian River station to Peterborough for Ray Sullivan. Out near Burnham's woods he met Mr Hamilton, who urged him to hide the whiskey in the bushes, as Mr. Meagher was waiting for him at the Locks Bridge. They did [illegible] the following day, he, with a party, went to look for the whiskey, but it could not be found. Beside Dunford there were in the party Ray Sullivan, James Ackey, Dunford's brother, Hamilton, and Ernest Taylor. He swore that he had never heard of the whiskey since.

Another Liquor Case.

He did remember one other night when he was employed by Ray Sullivan to cart liquor. The liquor was to be let off at a berry patch not far from the city. He went to that place, but the liquor did not arrive. Later in the evening he learned that Sullivan was waiting for him at Kendry Station. He went there, and brought twenty cases of liquor to the city, accompanied by Mr. Sullivan.

Caught with the Goods.

On April 30 last he had made a trip to Norwood for "Buck" Wynche and while bringing the liquor to the city, accompanied by Mr. Johnston, apparently a helper of Wynche's, he had been caught by Inspector Stewart and Constable Moore.

Newhall Alleged to be Implicated.

On the 2nd of May, witness swore, he was at Taylor's shop and Taylor 'phoned Mr. Newhall and informed him that "Razor" Sullivan wanted to see him (Newhall). He succeeded in making an appointment between Newhall and Sullivan for the following morning, according to Dunford.

Witness swore that both Taylor and Ackey had told him of a contemplated scheme to steal whiskey from Archie Moore's house and Joseph Stewart's office. He had told both Taylor and Newhall in Taylor's shop that he would attempt to find out where the whiskey was kept at Moore's by taking his cartage account to the house. Newhall had made the statement at that time that he did not believe there were men in the city with sufficient nerve to go and steal the whiskey.

Another Wild Scheme.

Witness swore that there had been a scehme on foot for Ackey, Sergt. Blade, Evans, and himself (Dunford) to go to Inspector Stewart's office and steal some confiscated liquor. He was barred from this expedition as Sergt. Blade had refused to mix up with a plan in which Dunford was a party.

Later the witness testified that Ackey had told him that Blade and he (Ackey) had broken into Stewart's office, but had failed to get the whiskey as it was locked up in the safe.

Dunford had very frequently seen Detective Newhall hanging around Taylor's shop, and on one occasion he had told the witness that he knew about all their dates for bringing in whiskey. He had often talked with Newhall at Taylor's.

Convicted for Breach of O. T. A.

Under cross-examination by Mr. Hall witness admitted that there had been a conviction against him for a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act. He had been fined to the extent of $200 for taking one drink of whiskey.

He admitted having talked over the substance of his evidence with Mr. Stewart within the past week.

"Squealed" on Employers.

Witness admitted that on at least two different occasions he had informed Inspector Stewart that he had been engaged to cart liquor into the city. He was to get 20 per cent. of the fines if those on whom he informed were convicted. Through his information Johnston had been fined $500 and he had received $100; he had been instrumental in the conviction of Ray Sullivan, and for this he had received $200 of the $1000 fine.

Jail-Breaking Scheme Next.

Witness admitted being party to a scheme for the escape of Johnston from jail during his period on remand. He had gone to Mr. Gordon for assistance in this matter, which was refused him. The scheme was to attack the officer who would be in charge of Johnston on the way from the jail to the police station, and put him in a car which was to be provided and by which he was to make his escape. Then this crime and Sullivan's was to be charged to him, which would, in his absence, free Sullivan of the charges against him. He swore that Newhall had promised not to catch Johnston in the event of his escape.

Applied for Remittance.

By strict cross-examination Mr. Hall got witness to admit that he had applied for a remittance of the fine imposed upon him for a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act, and already an order-in-Council had been passed ordering $175 of it to be paid back to him. Mr. Stewart had written one letter on his behalf in this matter.

After Mr. G. N. Gordon had explained his position in the hair-brained prison escape escapade as absolutely refusing to have anything to do with the case, E. G. Taylor was summoned to the witness box.

Not Connected with Liquor Dealings.

Mr. Taylor swore that he knew nothing of the matter in Hamilton's statement until he saw the statement in the press. He swore that he had never lent Sullivan any money for the purpose of buying whiskey, and the only way in which he was connected with the matter was that he had put up the bail for Sullivan at the time preceding his trial and this was done at the request of Mr. G. N. Gordon. Witness swore that he had never heard of any scheme for stealing whiskey from either constable Moore or Inspector Stewart. He had never heard Newhall speak of the matter at any time. Witness swore that the evidence of Dunford concerning him 'phoning Detective Newhall in connection with an appointment between him and Sullivan was altogether false.

The court adjourned before Mr. O'Connell's cross-examination, to be resumed at 10 o'clock on the morning of October 8 at the Court House.

GERMAN AMERICAN CATHOLICS TO FIGHT HATE AROUSED BY WAR

Duty of Those Who Started Race Hatred to Make Advances to Effect Reconciliation---Co-Operative Work Only to This End is Needed

Chicago, Sept. 18— German-American Catholics will exert every effort to remove the feeling of hatred engendered in the United States by the recent world war This, at least, was the sentiment expressed this morning by 300 delegates to the German-American Central Verein of the Roman Catholic church, in convention at St Martin's church, West 59th street and Princeton avenue.

They cheered enthusiastically Archbishop Sebastian G. Messmer of Milwaukee when in discussing the peace message from Pope Benedict he declared that it was the duty of German-American Catholics to "do everything possible to establish the principle of Americanism and to eliminate race hatred, not only between America and Germany, but also between racial factions in the United States.

Must Be Only Co-operative Work.

He stated, however, that their work should be only co-operative, and that he would consider it a fatal mistake for German-American Catholics to initiate any move toward reconciliation, as this, he said, would open the way for charges of pro-Germanism.

"There is a great work to be done by us in this country," Archbishop Messmer said. "We must aid in establishing for the world a real, true and lasting peace.

"There can be no lasting peace unless it be based on the Christian law of brotherly charity and love, between individuals as well as between nations.

"The work of reconciliation here in America, however, must come from the other part — the other branch of the Catholic church.

Not Duty to Make Advances."

"It was not the German-American Catholics who started the hatred which developed during the great war. It is not our duty to make advances in this direction, but we should place ourselves in a position to co-operate—to aid in every way possible."

This afternoon, it was expected, resolutions will be framed offering the cooperation of the German Catholics of the country in the furtherance of "true Americanism."

A resolution was adopted this morning creating a legislative bureau of five members, to meet annually to watch national legislation in its relation to Catholicism.

TOTAL ATTENDANCE AT FAIR BREAKS ALL PREVIOUS RECORDS

Exclusive of Complimentaries 21,712 Entered Grounds During Three Days—Best Exhibition In History of City

Peterborough Industrial Exhibition for nineteen-nineteen closed last night with a record-breaking attendance of 21,712 paid admissions for the three days, compared with 16,552 last year. On the first day this year the attendance was 1,405 compared with 929 last year; the second day this year was 15,625 as compared with 9,123 last year, and the last day this year was 4,682 compared with 6,500 on the last day of the 1918 Fair. Last year the grand stand seated during the three days 3,247 and this year 3,244 which would lead one to believe that it was filled to capacity most of the time during both exhibitions.

The special musical attraction by the Conservatory of Music with full orchestra and vocal and instrumental numbers was a valued last hour offering much appreciated by a large attendance in the flower booth.

As to the other special attractions the directors kept faith in that the closing hours of Peterborough's big Fair were replete with exhibits and entertainment of a nature which excelled all previous exhibition efforts in this city.

WALK OUT OF IRON AND STEEL WORKERS IS SLATED FOR MONDAY

Certain Element at Pittsburg Meeting Favor Postponement of Proposed Nation Wide Strike—Arrangements for Putting Labor Fight in Effect Being Perfected

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburg, Sept. 18 The American Federation or Labor National Committee for organizing the Iron and Steel Workers went into session here today behind closed doors. While certain elements favor postponement of a proposed nation wide strike, leaders of the committee declare a walkout will take place Monday.

To Perfect Arrangements

The meeting yesterday, according to Fitzpatrick was not for the purpose of taking a vote on whether or not to defer the strike, but to perfect arrangements for carrying the strike order into effect.

Mr. Fitzpatrick was bitter in his denunciation of the method alleged to have been used to prevent steel workers from organizing.

"In the last twelve days," he declared, "seven of our organizers have been murdered. Gary's thugs are responsible for this. There is no room in the United States for Gary and his thugs on the one hand and the unions on the other. One will have to go, and that will be Gary."

Awaiting the Call.

Despatches from Chicago state the steel workers there are awaiting the strike call. Their leader says everything is in readiness, and nothing can stop the walkout on September 22 of 150,000 men.

Will Not Negotiate.

The Carnegie Steel Company gave out a letter from E. H. Gary, Chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, addressed to the presidents of the subsidiary companies, setting forth the reasons of the corporation for declining to deal with labor unions, and explaining the attitude of the concern towards its employees.

The letter states that the corporation does not combat labor unions as such, and that it does not negotiate with unions because it would indicate the closing of the shops against non-union labor. "It is the settled determination of the United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries," the letter states "that the wages and working conditions of their employees shall compare favorably with the highest standards of propriety and justice."

The St. Catharines City League has been organized with four teams. Application will be made to the O. R. F. U. to have the winners made eligible to the junior semi-finals.

AMERICA MUST STAY IN LEAGUE

WAR AND BANKRUPTCY IF SHE SHOULD REVERT TO ISOLATION.

Paris, Sept. 18.—Henry Morgenthau, who has just returned to the French capital from an investigation of conditions in Poland, declared that "if America reverts to her former policy of isolation, Europe's certain fate consists of a continuation of warfare and rampant militarism." Bankruptcy and exhaustion would be the final result," he said.

SITUATION IN BALTIC

Supreme Council Takes Up Question of Withdrawal of Germans.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 18.—The situation in the Baltic region, which has been complicated by various factors recently, including the difficulty over the withdrawal of Gen. von der Goltz German troops, desired by the Allies, was taken up by the supreme council at its session today.

Winnipeg Victorias and the Selkirk, Man., hockey clubs have organized and are preparing for an Allen Cup campaign.

BULLITT STICKS TO HIS ACCOUNT

LETTER FROM LLOYD GEORGE'S SECRETARY MAKES DENIAL USELESS.

Washington, Sept. 18.—Wm. C. Bullitt yesterday answered Philip Kerr, secretary to Lloyd George, who denied Bullitt's account of alleged conversations between himself, Kerr and the British Premier.

"Kerr will not deny any of the statements I made to the Senate foreign relations committee when he reads an exact account of what I said," Bullitt declared. "If any further documentary support for my statements is needed, I have a letter from Kerr himself, which makes any denial by him out of the question."

CONSIDER TURKISH AFFAIRS

SUGGESTS PEACE WITH SOVIET GOVT.

WITHOUT ENTENTE AID, BALTIC FEDERATION IS PROBABLE.

Copenhagen, Sept. 18.—An important conference has been in session at Riga considering not only peace with the Soviet Government of Russia, but the formation of a Baltic federation, according to advices from Lettish sources. It is understood that there has been no actual acceptance of the Soviet Government's terms, but, on the other hand, it asserts the Baltic federation idea has materialized to the extent that an agreement has been reached for a common currency and a customs union of Letvia, Esthonia and Lithuania

HALF MILLION FINE

Asphaltic Roofing Factory Totally Destroyed by Blaze.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Scranton, Pa., Sept. 18.—Fire last night destroyed the asphaltic roofing factory of the Gall Mountain Co. and seriously damaged several other buildings. The loss is half a million dollars.

The conference has been removed to Reval, where it will be joined by Finns and also, according to report, by representatives of the Russian North-West Government. It is stated that the question of peace with the Soviet Government will be discussed in close touch with entente representatives. The Baltic States, it is said, favor peace with Russia in the absence of effective assistance from the entente.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

THURSDAY, SEPT. 18. 1919

INDUSTRIAL COUNCILS.

NO LESS THAN 41 joint industrial councils, representing 2,438,500 work people, have been formed in the United Kingdom. The industries which are now organised in this way are the following: Pottery, building, rubber manufacturing, gold and silver, etc., match manufacturing, silk, furniture, heavy chemicals, bread making, etc., paint, color and varnish, vehicle building, china clay, hosiery (English), metallic bedsteads, bobbin and shuttle, made-up leather goods, woolen and worsted (Scottish), hosiery (Scottish), saw-milling, wallpaper making, wool (and allied) textile, tin making, electrical contracting, packing-case making, elastic webbing, etc., Welsh plate and sheet, road transport, asbestos manufacturing, Coir mat and matting, water works undertakings, local authorities non-trading services (manual workers), gas undertakings, electricity supply, heating and domestic engineering, smelter, flour milling, boot and shoe manufacture, iron and steel manufacture, music trades, printing, needles, fish hooks, and fishing tackle.

OPPOSE DIRECT ACTION.

BRITISH LABOR LEADERS are opposing "direct action", and exposing the fallacy of under-production. Speaking before the Industrial League of Birmingham recently on "Labor in Its Relation to Industry," Mr. J. R. Clynes, M.P., urged the employment of constitutional methods in industrial disputes, and warned workers that they could make no more grave mistake than to encourage under-production. Scarcity of commodities, he said, was the opportunity of the profiteer. Scarcity might cause some little inconvenience to the rich, but it could cause real and continued privation to the masses of people whose purchasing power was limited. Some forms of profiteering could be punished by the law, but workmen who deliberately restricted output, or who failed to accept any form of industrial development which could make their labor more productive, were punishing themselves and their class without knowing it. If profiteering was conscious pilfering, "ca' canny" was an ignorant act which deprived many people of their real needs. It inflicted no loss upon the favored class, which, wherever it was practised, it might be designed to punish. It was a sentence passed upon the innocent by those who might not know they were guilty of a wrong. Lessened production meant the greater prospect of unemployment. It impeded recovery from the industrial dislocation which the war inevitably caused. It kept up prices, and lowered nothing but the workman's standard of existence. It was in the highest degree harmful to the general public interest, but in a special degree under-production was the enemy of the masses whose pressing needs required more abundant supply of all forms of material for house-building, for food production the manufacture of every kind of house requisite, clothing, and the common daily needs of existence.

The folly of "ca' canny" was also emphasized by the British Prime Minister in his recent declaration of Government policy. He declared that "there never was a more fatal error, a more fatal fallacy" than Labor's belief that "the less you work the more work there will be for others." "You have only got to look at the coal trade," he said. "The reduction in the output of coal is at the present moment depriving people of employment. If it goes on it will throw hundreds of thousands out of employment in the country. You have only got to work it out to its inevitable consequence and you will find that deliberately to reduce output means in the end all-around unemployment on a gigantic scale.

"It is important, therefore, that that fallacy should be exploded, especially by those who speak with authority to Labor. . . . . It is a very dangerous policy to pursue and encourage, and a disastrous one to Labor. The price of food and the cost of material will go up, and, what is still worse, we will not get food for this country, because you cannot live forever on borrowed food. You will not get raw material to the country. There will be no work for those who manipulate and transform and transfigure it into the beautiful things that British hands can transfigure any material into. It is a disastrous policy for all classes. That is why I appeal to employers and to workmen to get rid of this ruinous fallacy, which seems to possess the minds of hundreds of thousands at the present time."

Taking the average wage at three dollars per day, strikes have cost the workers of Canada over $44,800,000 in the last eighteen years and a half, or an average of approximately $2,425,000 a year. A revised summary of industrial disputes from January 1, 1901, to June 30, 1919, as issued by the Department of Labor at Ottawa, shows that there were 2,127 disputes during the period, involving 620,235 employes, and that there was a time loss of no less than 14,937,229 working days. Between January 1 and June 30, 1919, there were 189 disputes involving 105,026 employes and a loss of 2,118,379 working days. During this six months' period the average wage would not be less than $3.50 a day at a conservative estimate, so that the monetary loss to the employes directly involved was at least $7,500,000. Scores of millions of dollars would be required to meet the indirect cost of these strikes. In some cases, as in Winnipeg, there has been marked dislocation of general industrial life, loss of output to factories affected by the dispute, loss to general commercial interests through cessation of orders, and loss to the community through business stagnation.

REVISED FRENCH TARIFF.

ON MORE THAN 80 per cent. of the items affected by the recent revision of the French tariff, increases in protection range from 60 to 200 per cent. In 705 out of a total of 2,535 items representing manufactured commodities the increases are no less than 200 per cent. Increases ranging from 150 to 190 per cent. apply to 828 items.

Spain is to increase its tariff and will follow a plan similar to that adopted in France. The Spanish Government has denounced certain commercial treaties preparatory to a general tariff revision. Proposals for such revision are now being framed, and the Government is striving to present a report at an early date.

The Government of Poland has established a State commission of import and export, and a license system has already been put into operation. This system is designed to control the entry of luxuries and to restrict the importation of commodities which can be produced in Poland. The London Times, commenting on Poland's new fiscal policy, says that it will "protect young Polish industries and maintain improved conditions for the working classes in the factories and workshops."

PRACTISE YOUR RELIGION.

MOO FOO, a New York Chinaman, recently sent a letter to the papers, in which he criticized the "Christian" nations and peoples as follows: "If a Chinaman may be permitted to suggest, would it not be possible to found a better and more lasting peace upon the Ten Commandments than upon the Fourteen Points?. . . . . Why does not the West now, after 1900 years, try the experiment of founding a State upon the teachings of its Christ. We Chinamen believe the trade restrictions beget war. The West has been at war for and because of its markets ever since your civilization was created. When the guns of Germany worked destruction to the Cathedrals of France, we heard you weeping aloud in your market places because of the loss of the architectural beauties of Rheims and Louvain. Not one voice was raised in honest protest because of the desecration of the Inner Tabernacle. I attack not your Christian religion, nor would I compare it unfavorably with our Confucianism. You, however, do not practise your religion. With you a commercial relation comes first in all things the moral relation is forgotten. Lasting peace will come only when you accept honestly the teachings of the Christ whom you now only pretend to worship."

AWARDING OF MEDALS.

THE PRESENTATION of medals to Charles Begley and Don Fitzgerald at the Exhibition on Tuesday by His Honor Judge Huycke for the saving of life from drowning marked a fitting tribute to pluck and exemplary bravery. The same spirit of readiness for self-sacrifice, if needed, was exemplified in the acts of those two lads as demonstrated by thousands of their older Canadian brothers who so nobly responded to the call to arms in preservation of their country. And such is the quality in the characteristics of a people essential to the up-building of a great and glorified nation.

These gallant lads are both modest in demeanor and shy of publicity. In fact, at the presentation of medals to them from the Royal Humane Society they exhibited a consciousness of fear at posing as principals in the presence of so large and laudatory a crowd of spectators at the award of heroism. This element of fear, however, is lacking in them when human life is in danger. Had it not been so, Mr. and Mrs. Roberts would have today been mourning the loss of their little girl Evelyn. Both lads, when occasion arose, played the game generously and without self-consideration, and the best wishes of this community will no doubt go with them in their future career.

The awarding of medals for saving human life cannot be commended too highly for it typifies a grateful acknowledgment by society of that unselfish heroism of which a Christian people is always proud and prone to emulate.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

NO PROFITEERING.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

That war-time conditions have been hard on the newspaper business is very generally known. The cost of production has materially increased in many cases without the possibility of any corresponding increase in revenue. In some lines of business it has been found almost impossible under war conditions to escape at least the appearance of profiteering. Newspaper publishing is one line of business that has escaped even the suspicion of profiteering.

MILLIONS ARE NEEDED.

(Kingston Whig.)

Canada's expenditure this year will be more than $800,000,000, while her revenue will total only some $300,000,000 or less. The greatest problem before the country today is finding money to meet interest on the colossal war debt and to carry on the business of the country.

INTOLERABLE IDEA.

(New York Sun.)

The idea of a unionized police, subject to control as to its performance or non-performance of duty by a government not a part of our constituted system, by an authority other than that to which it has sworn obedience, is comparably only to that of a unionized army or a unionized navy. It is an idea intolerable to the American genius, and its manifestations and demonstrations ought to be renounced and resisted by every American who is worthy of the name.

TOO MUCH COMPROMISE.

(Mail and Empire.)

The election of Arthur Henderson in the Widnes bye-election may not signify such an accession of Labor strength, but merely that the non-Labor vote is so sick of the compromise, shilly-shally policy of the Lloyd George Government, on some domestic questions that it did not turn out to support the Coalition candidate.

WHERE QUEBEC LEADS.

(Ottawa Journal.)

The Quebec Government, it is stated, is going to spend another $20,000,000 on good roads. Quebec has experimented with good road expenditure and found it to pay. So will every other province in the Dominion. Quebec has earned a justly high reputation for its progress in the matter of highway improvement.

TO FIX PRICES.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

The Board of Commerce intends to set a fixed legal standard for profits on the necessities of life. This policy will be carried out in conjunction with the authorities in the United States. It is believed that prices will be brought down as a consequence, and, in any case, "they will be on the basis of cost plus a fair profit." The marvel is that such an expedient was not adopted long ago. It has, of course, been urged over and over again; but always came the old cry as to its impracticability and ineffectiveness. What has occurred to change the views of the authorities it is hard to say. That which is considered feasible now should have been equally so all along, and one cannot but deplore the gross malpractices which this tardiness has occasioned.

OPEN LETTER TO ORDINARY PEOPLE

When on an occasion I found myself in the august presence of the late King Edward, I confess that, although I considered myself a democrat of the democrats, I did really feel much concerned about my deportment. I felt somehow that an unusual degree of respectful behavior was called for, but I was not altogether sure that I was successful in delivering the goods. However, I believe that on that occasion there was no harm done, for Edward, of sacred memory, did not seem at all worried either about me or my behavior. When I make bold to address you, O Sovereign Ordinary People, I am deeply concerned, for you are the August Ruler of this country. We, the Prohibitionists and Anti-Prohibitionists, are out to get as much of our own way as possible, and it may be that we are at times tempted to think that we are the whole business, but manifestly our fate is in your hands, for when both parties have said their say, and voted their vote, and fought their fight, and gone their limit, they will have to stand to attention to see what you may be pleased to do with them on October the twentieth, nineteen-nineteen. Speaking for myself, I would be glad to walk a distance if at the end of it I could find out just what you think and just what you are going to do.

For the purposes of this article, the Ordinary People may be defined as all other than Prohibitionists and Anti-Prohibitionists. You are a great host, and your dignity and your silence impresses me just as, it may be, our noise amuses you. In your silence you will, between now and the 20th October make up your mind as to what you are going to do with us "wets" and "drys". We (for the purposes of this article we may be defined as the Wets and the Drys) can argue the case before you, but yours must be the decision, and for us there is no other court of appeal. If we are not satisfied we must simply come back to you and ask you to hear the case again. We agree about one thing, that being that our fate is in your hands.

May I suggest to you with the greatest possible respect that it will matter to you, O Sovereign Ordinary People, and matter a good deal, too, what you do with us. Neither of us can be quite satisfied if you confirm the O. T. A. at the coming Referendum, but both of us are likely to submit if you allow us to grumble a good deal, after the manner of your kind. If, on the other hand, you decide to repeal the Act, you will be in for the proverbial peck of troubles. Neither the Wets nor the Drys want the bar back again, if they are telling the truth, and they are honorable men, but repeal will bring it back automatically, and you will have no end of trouble to know what to do with it. The Liberty League may be imagined as crying "Take that bauble away," and the Ontario Referendum Committee will certainly rage like the heathen. The Wets and the Drys will begin the biggest agitation that you have ever suffered from, and you will be called upon to submit your grey matter to great friction, and it will be up to you to give another decision in due course.

There seems to be only one way in which you can secure for yourself a large measure of peace and quiet in this the premier province of our fair Dominion, and that is by giving a dignified and a definite refusal to alter the law as it now stands by putting four crosses on the "No" column of the ballot paper.

You know what to expect from us Prohibitionists if you decide to repeal the O. T. A.: a demand for absolute prohibition; if you are prepared to give it, I judge that Prohibitionists do not care very much what you do with the O. T. A.; but are you? You do not know what the Liberty League party will demand of you, nor can you guess, any more than I can, or they can, so what are you going to do about that?

May I respectfully suggest that it would help some if you took a good look at the parties to the contest. Note who they are, what they have to lose or gain by your decision. Then will you think that others beside may gain or lose?

First of all, there is yourself, O Sovereign Ordinary People; your own peace and comfort stand to be considered, not on merely selfish grounds, but as a matter of equity, for you are more numerous than all the schools and parties and factions. Things have changed a good deal since the O. T. A. afforded you some mitigation of the drink nuisance. For instance, many of you ride in motor cars now, and if the bar comes back, even without the hard stuff, the beer, which only a seasoned cask or one who does not know much about it could possibly call non-intoxicating, will make bumpers necessary in front and behind and on both sides of your travelling contraption, whatever it may be. Of course, if you live in the country, you can take to the fields and thus give the other fellow free exercise of his personal liberty on the roads without too much risk of having to go to a funeral with a coach all to yourself and no one wanting to ride with you. From this point of view, half drunk would be more danger to you than dead drunk, for in the case of the dead drunk some one else would likely look after the patient, while the half drunk would likely be his own caretaker, making it necessary for you to be yours also.

That the beer of the ballot is strong enough to make any car have the wibbly wobbles when the man driving it has had a few drinks is affirmed by Drys and denied by Wets, and, as they are (for the purposes of this article) all honorable men, it is for you, O Sovereign Ordinary People, to decide. Be pleased to figure it out yourself and you will find that in every eighteen pints of the beer suggested in the ballot there is one pint and one third of a pint of proof spirits: stronger than the straight whiskey usually sold. You will consider this, and decide whether or not it will be for your good to vote for this increase in strength.

If there is a decision that you can give that will not tend to rob the little child of the care of its parents, that will not rob the wife of the love and protection of her husband, the family of its unity and happiness, a woman of her purity, a man of his honor; that, Oh, Sovereign People, would be a wise decision to give. If, on the other hand, there is a decision that might tend to do any or all of these things I judge that you would not make it, but you must do the thinking and the deciding.

Next to God, I trust the Ordinary People. Your decision is awaited with confidence by your faithful if not always obedient servant.

JOHN GALT.

GENERAL BELIEF IN HONESTY

Something Very Like the Millennium Seems to Be Near in Great British Metropolis.

How is the sudden trust Londoners have come to exhibit for each other to be accounted for? There is an extreme shortage of copper coins for small change in London, and one man says of his experiences: "On several occasions lately news vendors who have been unable to change silver have said to me, 'Never mind, pay me the next time you are this way.' Only one of them knew me as a regular customer. Even more unexpected credit than this was offered me at a railway booking office where I tendered a shilling for a two-penny fare. 'I'm short of coppers,' said the girl booking clerk, 'pay me tomorrow.' 'But I shall not be here tomorrow,' I replied. 'Then pay me the next time you are here, whenever it is,' she said. 'But supposing I forget,' I expostulated. 'Oh, I know that you will come and pay me some day, she answered. 'I've never known people fail.'" Similar testimony is offered by others, who tell of copper credit thrust upon them by strangers, and often very poor and humble strangers.—London Mail.

Powerful Light.

The amount of light given by a single lightning flash is sufficient to illuminate an area two miles square with an average illumination of one candle. To produce such an illumination, an eminent electrician estimates the expenditure of 13,000 horse power for one second would be required.—Indianapolis News.

Not Playing Fair.

It was mother's birthday and the children were trying to find out her age. Mother was teasing them by several exaggerated evasions. Finally Billy said: "I think you might tell me, mother; I never yet tried to keep my age from you."

Less Crime, Fewer Carpets.

There does not at first glance seem to be much connection between crime and carpets, says the London Daily Mail, but it is a fact that the decrease in crime brought about in India, as elsewhere, by the war has led to a decrease in the supply of Indian carpets. The reason is that most of these carpets, especially the finer and more expensive kinds, are made by convicts, notably in the great jail at Peona.

They are made entirely by hand, so it is a case of few convicts few carpets.

Hard to Distinguish.

"In Shakespeare's day the liver was thought to be the seat of love."

"Maybe the Elizabethans were not so far wrong, after all. The symptoms of love and an acute bilious attack are very similar."

Clearing Up After War.

On the banks of the Thames, less than twenty miles from London, there is an American town of the mushroom kind such as you might find in a new California oil field. Its population consists of more than 200 white men and about 150 negroes. It covers twenty-five acres which nine months ago were fallow grass land. The business of the town is to receive, sort and store war material. There is a street of wooden huts, another of corrugated iron huts, huge iron store sheds a quarter of a mile long, office buildings, water supply and electric lights, the whole surrounded by a hedge, a few armed sentries and much mud. All day long the khaki-clad negroes push and haul railway trucks full of war material.

War material coming back from Russia is being stored at this camp, also the fittings of the dismantled hospitals which the American army established in England.

Warmth Increases Oil Flow.

An electrical method of carrying warmth to the bottom of oil wells has been found in many cases greatly to increase the flow of oil. The heating process, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, decreases the viscidity of the oil, usually occasioned by the admission of air to the well and the cooling of the rock bed. Minute crevices and capillary channels which afford easy passage to warm, thin oil become quite impassable if the oil gums. The electric heating method not only thins the oil but often generates gas whose pressure helps the oil to the surface. The system found military use in the abandoned oil fields of Roumania and Galicia.

What's in a Name?

Most readers are familiar with the story of the German bank in a United States city which, finding its name unpopular, changed it to the "Sherman bank." Here is another example on the same lines: A popular New York city German restaurant was called the Kloster Glocke (Cloister Bell), and its front was decorated with a large bell as a sign. The name has been changed to the "Liberty Bell," and the bell of the old monastery now does duty as a replica of the one which rang out independence to the colonies.

Doubts Mechanical Skill.

A "prominent business man" has offered $20,000 for the privilege of being carried as mechanic on the first transatlantic flight made in an airplane. If this offer is accepted, it is to be hoped that his mechanical ability equals his enthusiasm.—Springfield Republican.

Kangaroo Scored Knockout.

"Ned Kelly, the old buck kangaroo, has been having a fight with the boss stag of the axis deer herd," said Sergeant McGee of the San Francisco park police, "and it is the first time I ever heard of two herbivorous animals so widely different in species finding common ground for a quarrel.

"As a matter of fact, it was the axis deer that started the trouble. He was trying to show off before the does and started butting at poor old Ned Kelly who was peacefully lolloping about with no thought for trouble. The first butt of the deer set Ned thinking, the second set him mad, the third—well, Ned Kelly just turned about and gave the axis deer one wallop under the stomach with its tail. You could hear the smack five blocks away, and it simply knocked the deer flat. It dropped as if it had been shot, while Ned Kelly just hopped away as happy as a bird."

One Thing More.

A pretty girl fluttered over to a neighbor's house Sunday last to borrow some writing paper. She had an important letter to write and mail, and she was out of stationery. About half an hour later she returned for an envelope, and a little later still came back for a stamp. "Well, I hope that's all she wants to borrow today," said the disgruntled neighbor woman as she slammed the door after the pretty girl. "She needs a little spit to make the stamp adhere," said the neighbor woman's husband "and she'll be over after that in a minute."—Arkansas Thomas Cat (Hot Springs Ark.).

Insurance Against Tuberculosis.

Dr. P. J. Meynet outlines in the Presse Medicale a plan for universal compulsory insurance against tuberculosis, the funds from which would serve for the fight against the disease. His scheme is something like compulsory social insurance against sickness, but the tax or insurance dues imposed would include all classes of society, not merely the wage earners. He protests that the fight against tuberculosis should not be left to charity or private initiative.

Backache only a Symptom

"It Seems as Though my Back Would Break."

This is a common expression among women, yet they toil on day after day heedless of the significance of this distressing symptom.

Backache is often a warning of some inward trouble that requires attention, and which unless relieved will sooner or later declare itself in more serious ailments.

If it is caused by female derangement Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is what you need. It quickly asserts its curative powers in all those peculiar ailments of women.

For more than thirty years this good old fashioned root and herb medicine has been restoring women to health.

The Splendid Recovery of Mrs. Fleet

Brantford, Ont.—"I have been a user of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find there is nothing better for female troubles. I was taken sick with sharp pains in my right side and up over the hip to the back and the doctor said I would have to be operated on. I was in the hospital three weeks and did not get any better so I went home and took the Vegetable Compound. I stayed in bed three weeks more, then I was able to get up. Now I am all right and I have recommended your medicine to several friends and my daughter is taking it and all are pleased with the results from its use."

Detroit, Mich.—"I was in a general run-down condition, was very nervous and tired, had backache and other troubles. I suffered for several years, was not able to work at times and tried doctor's medicine with no results. I saw Lydia E. I am still taking it myself and giving it to my daughter, and am glad to recommend Vegetable Compound at anytime."—Mrs. M. E. Hunt, 171 Davison Ave.

HAVE SEEN MUCH BLOODSHED

Plains of Palestine Trampled by Many of the Mightiest Armies Known to History.

Definite historical records regarding events in Palestine may be said to begin with the first detailed account of the battle in the plains of Armageddon, when the army of Pharaoh Thothmes III, advancing up the plain of Sharon, crossed the Carmel range by the same route as that taken by General Allenby's cavalry in September, A. D. 1918, and defeated the Syrian federation under the king of Cadesh before the fortress of Megiddo in the year 1479 B. C. This historic plain has seen the march of the armies of the Hittites, the Egyptians, the Jews under Deborah and Barak, the Philistines on their way to the defeat of Saul on Mount Gilboa. Then came like a wolf Sennacherib the Assyrian, and after him Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon. The Persian Cambyses swept through Palestine in the sixth century B. C., en route for his work of destruction in Egypt. After the fall of Babylon Palestine saw the armies of Alexander the Great and Pompey. Vespasian, Titus and Hadrian all fought in Palestine. In A. D. 614 the Sassanian Emperor Chosroes, stretching forth from his capital at Ctesiphon, destroyed Jerusalem; once again the city was rebuilt, and within a generation was opened to the Arab and Moslem conqueror, Caliph Omar. In the twelfth century the crusaders took Palestine, which then became the scene of the romantic struggle between Richard Coeur de Lion and Saladin. Fifty years later the Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II, known in the middle ages as "the Wonder of the World," crowned himself king of Jerusalem in the church of the Holy Sepulcher. In 1516 the armies of the Ottoman Turks under Selim the Grim marched down from Aleppo and seized the country on their way to the conquest of Egypt. Nearly three hundred years later Napoleon marched from Egypt through the same pass of Megiddo to the fortress of Acre; and now the forces of General Allenby have added one more link to this great historical chain wherein have been engaged practically all the greatest names in human history.—From "The Holy Land of Many Nations" by Maj. Ormsby Gore in Asia Magazine.

Fear to Retouch Master's Work.

"After the war of 1870," writes a correspondent of the Manchester (England) Guardian, "Rodin was a competitor among the sculptors who desired to create the monument celebrating France's defense. Naturally, his proposed design was rejected. Today, however, the dead Rodin is recognized as the greatest master of the century, and the old design has been discovered. It is suggested that it might well be called 'Verdun.' The trouble is that his model is not three feet in height, and although by the Colas process one can faithfully enlarge a small piece of statuary, the idea of doing so without Rodin to direct the operation and to add the necessary retouches before the work is finally cast does not commend itself to the majority of artists. Who will make these necessary corrections? It is a grave responsibility to meddle with the unfinished creation of a man like Rodin. Some natural feeling has been aroused, and although it is a pity to neglect a design which so perfectly expresses the spirit of the heroic defense, there would seem to be grave artistic and sentimental objections to the course proposed."

Automatic Lightship.

The efficient lighting of the waterways so that they can be safely navigated at night is an all-important matter. It is effected by the ordinary stationary lighthouse on shore, and also by manned lightships and various kinds of automatic light buoys. The latest of these latter is an ingenious automatic lightship, requiring no attention whatever when once set in motion, built by a British firm.

It is a very ingeniously constructed vessel and the very latest of its kind, in its two steel tanks sufficient gas can be stored to supply the vessel for several months. Experiments have shown that the light may be depended upon to burn continuously for months at a time without any attention whatever. The approximate duration of the light can always be predetermined, and there is no danger whatever of the light being extinguished either by wind or spray. The light is visible at a distance of eight to twelve miles.

Paris Forts May Be Razed.

The question of the demolition of the ring of antiquated fortifications that surround Paris will be brought before the municipal council. This is not as a result of the armistice or because of the league of nations, which is expected to put an end to wars forever, or because of the fact that with modern artillery the fortifications would be useless. Louis Dausset, an alderman, sponsor for the project, argues that the benefits to be derived are a closer, easier contact with the Paris suburbs, elimination of the necessity of entering or leaving Paris through various gates and the freeing of valuable land for building purposes.

Fuel That Hungary Needs.

Through the utilization of natural gas in Hungary and Siebenburgen, discovered shortly before the war, it is hoped that certain Hungarian towns and industrial districts may be entirely independent of coal. The total natural gas found in Siebenburgen only is estimated at about 210,000,000,000 cubic meters (1 cubic meter equaling 35.3 cubic feet).

A Woodland Maid

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

Life at its dreariest had come to Alma Royce at eighteen. Her father had died just as she had reached the acme of girlhood loveliness and had settled into a life which she had reason to hope would have no break for a long time to come. The existence of herself and her father had been an ideal one since she was a mere child. There was not a country estate in the district that could equal Wildwood in extent and beauty, and there for over a decade the Royces had received all the advantages of luxury and ease.

The former owner of the place, John Wayne, died when his only son and heir, Gerald, was a mere lad. Previous to that Alma's father, originally a college professor, had broken down in health and John Wayne, an old college friend, had employed him to systematize and care for his great collection of antiques. When Mr. Wayne died there was a provision made in his will that the old scientist was to continue his work and have a home at Wildwood and its entire charge until his son attained his majority. Of that son after that the Royces only knew that he was receiving a full education abroad.

It was after her father's death that the family lawyer of the Waynes visited Wildwood.

"Miss Royce," he said, "we understand that Mr. Gerald Wayne is about to return to this country and settle up the estate. Doubtless Wildwood will pass into other hands. It may be some time before that may come about, and until it does, we would like to have you remain in charge here."

Alma felt that it was only a question of time when she would have to go out into the wide world cheerlessly alone. And she shrank from the strenuous life ahead of her, contrasting so harsh and unfriendly with her calm, even experience at Wildwood.

Alma was busy one day directing the transplanting of some shrubbery when she noticed a young man, an entire stranger, standing by the garden roadway. His eyes were fixed upon her studiously and interestedly. As her glance met his own he advanced, removing his hat with a courteous bow. Then a seeming afterthought as to introducing himself appeared to occur to him. He took several cards, selecting one indiscriminately and nearing Alma tendered it to her. She read upon its face "Wylie Blair," and under this the name of the law firm which attended to the business of the estate.

"You are Miss Royce, I am sure," spoke the visitor. He was rather grave of manner, young and handsome as he was, as though study or weariness of the world had brought seriousness and surfeit, but a sight of the fair young girl appeared to lighten his natural mood. "I have come to look over Wildwood, preparatory to a possible disposal of it to the best advantage."

A new brightness came into Bis face as Alma in her pretty intelligent way showed him over the grounds. But it was when she led him inside the sumptuous house that he became absorbed in contemplation of its contents. His being seemed to be in complete harmony with the unique and beautiful, and he reveled over a Carrara marble girl's head by Fiaschi, a favorite borne study of Rosa Bonheur, Khiva rugs, a Soumake of wide proportions, the antique mahogany highboys, the Japanese teak wood screen before the arabesque fireplace, pearl reading glasses, silver trophy cups won by speedy horses, and books, books, books, gathered from the most exclusive storehouses of the world.

For nearly a week each afternoon this apparent agent and authorised representative of Gerald Wayne appeared at Wildwood. He made a pretense of taking notes, but it was clear from his intent association with Alma that he most prized this innocent, gentle woodland creature. He commended her careful system of keeping the accounts of the estate. He was a rapt listener, as in her well-informed way she recited the value and history of this and that priceless piece of bric-a-brac. At times Alma was puzzled, for while he seemed pleased at the information she imparted, here and there some chance remark showed that he was no novice in art antique.

"I am going away tomorrow, Miss Royce," he said at the end of a week, and on the morrow, as they were seated together on a garden seat, he looked at her earnestly with the words: "You have made Wildwood a revelation to me, and I am satisfied its owner would be a vandal quite to scatter to the winds ruthlessly the labor of long years."

"I am glad," said Alma in her frank, ingenuous way, "and I hope you will tell Mr. Wayne that." Then she sighed and glanced sorrowfully all about her. "I shall miss all the beautiful life I have passed here. It has been a true home to me."

He leaned closer to her and his eyes were glowing strangely. "Why should you go, Miss Royce?" he questioned. "If I were its owner and should ask you to stay because I have learned to love you, what would you say?"

The fluttering blush upon her face told him that her soul was responsive to his own. His eyes grew glad. "I ask you to stay," he added, "for I am Gerald Wayne."

How Wind Travels.

When you are discussing the wind you must know that a gentle wind travels about five miles per hour, a high wind about 30 to 45 miles per hours, and a great hurricane 80 to 100 miles per hour. The velocity of the earth on its own axis exceeds, it is believed, 1,000 miles an hour. The velocity of the earth around the sun is calculated to be 68,000 miles per hour, and the velocity of the moon to be 2,273 miles per hour.

Testing Pleurisy With Coins.

A novel method of diagnosing pleurisy is described by P. Lereboullet in the Paris Medical. The examiner applies his ear to the patient's chest, closing his other ear, while coins are clinked at the patient's back. The sound of the coins coming through a healthy, normally-aerated lung seems distant and dull, while through an affected lung, through soiled or homogeneous tissue, a clear, silvery, metallic ring is heard.

Forests of the Caucasus.

The forests of the Caucasus in Russia are estimated at 12,000,000 acres, chiefly in the Black sea territory, which is at the rate of nearly twenty acres to each inhabitant. The forests of western Siberia have been scarcely explored, but they are stated to be 200,000,000 acres in extent, more than half being in an absolute state of nature.—Rocky Mountain Herald.

Pencilmaking in Madras.

The government of Madras has decided that the experiments which have been made by the department of industries for the last three years in the manufacture of pencils have reached a stage at which the industry should be made over to a private enterprise, says an exchange. Arrangements for the sale of the pencils produced by the factory were completed in August, 1917, and the profit and loss statement prepared by the auditors for the period from September 1, 1917, to March 3, 1918, shows that in these seven months the factory made a profit of $1,994, which represents a return of a little over 20 per cent on an assumed capital of $16,220. During the same period the factory produced 7,599 gross of pencils and sold 8,269 gross. The factory has deliberately been run on as small a scale as was consistent with the purpose in view—namely, the demonstration on commercial lines of the prospect of the industry. The factory produces black lead pencils lacquered in various colors, copying pencils, carpenters' pencils and diary pencils. Experiments with red and blue pencils are under way.

Iron That Can Be Whittled.

It is well known that rapid cooling of hot metals hardens them. That the opposite is true has recently been demonstrated in striking fashion by the General Electric company. One of their scientists annealed American ingot iron surrounded by hydrogen gas for three hours at a temperature above 1,600 degrees Fahrenheit. The product was very little harder than the softest copper, and can be whittled with a knife.—Scientific American.

Owned Fine Library.

Andrew D. White, the eminent American diplomat, who died recently, was the owner of one of the finest libraries in America. Mr. White began early in life to accumulate books, chiefly on the subjects of the world's history. At last he had 40,000 volumes, a respectable total, as Mr. Birrell would admit, who once said that a man should never talk of his library until he had 10,000 books. Mr. White left his library to Cornell university.

Russia Destitute of Scythes.

Before the war Russia's need of scythes was estimated at 6,000,000 annually, of which about half were required in Siberia. To fill these requirements about 4,000,000 scythes were imported annually and the remainder manufactured in Russia. According to latest information there are hardly any scythes to be found. Russian industry being at a standstill and the importation closed.

SHE BELIEVES IT SAVED HER LIFE

WINNIPEG WOMAN'S RECOVERY BY TAKING TANLAC SURPRISED ALL HER FRIENDS.

"My wonderful recovery has been a surprise to all who knew of my dreadful condition," said Mrs. Amelia Hooley, of 863 Fleet Avenue, Fort Rouge, Winnipeg, Canada, recently in one of the most interesting and remarkable statements yet published in connection with Tanlac.

"My system has been badly run down for several years," continued Mrs. Hooley, "and although everything was done for me that could be done for a person I got worse instead of better. I had begun to think Tanlac was going to fail me, too, as I could not see much improvement, if any, until I started on my third bottle. At one time I thought of giving it up, but if I had it would have been the mistake of my life for, really and truly, it has made a new person of me. My stomach was in the worst kind of fix and my appetite left me entirely. Nothing tasted good and even the most delicate and tempting foods did not appeal to me. What little I did eat soured on my stomach and the gas from it would bloat me up and make me miserable. Then I contracted rheumatism in my left leg, which finally affected my whole side, and it was as much as I could do to get around. In fact, I was right down in bed for six weeks, hardly able to move. This leg would pain me so, especially at night, that I couldn't lie still. There was also a terrible pain that started in my right shoulder and went up the back of my neck clean to the top of my head. This pain was so severe at times I thought I would go distracted, and I have used mustard and the strongest kind of liniments until I actually burned the skin off trying to get relief. I would lie awake night after night just suffering agony, never getting a wink of sleep. I would get up mornings feeling like a wreck, unable to sew or do my housework, and would get so weak I would almost faint and feel like I was dying. I would have dizzy spells when I could hardly stand up, and these left me so weak and faint that I feared my heart was going to stop beating.

"Last year all arrangements were made to put my children in a convent as I had been given up to die. My nerves were all in such a shattered condition that I couldn't stand the slightest noise. Even the children playing around would almost make me frantic. I had fallen off in weight until I was scarcely more than a frame of skin and bones. At the time I began taking Tanlac I only weighed ninety-three pounds and my condition was really alarming. My husband wanted me to stick to Tanlac until I had given it a fair trial and while I was taking my third bottle I commenced to get relief. I have used five bottles now and my improvement has been nothing less than wonderful. A few days ago I went to visit a friend and she had so much to say about how well I looked that I asked her if I had really been very sick and she said she never had any idea I would live. I have not only gotten relief from all my suffering, but I have actually gained twelve pounds in weight besides, and I am just so happy and grateful over my recovery that I want to tell everybody about Tanlac.

LEED CANDIDATE

ORIGIN OF FIRES IS QUESTIONED

Collingwood, Sept. 18.—An investigation has been held here by Provincial Fire Marshal G. F. Lewis in regard to two fires. At the conclusion of the inquiry M. I. Johnston was taken into custody by Chief of Police Johnston, and this morning appeared in the Police Court, where he faced six charges of fraud and perjury in regard to insurance. It appears from the evidence that he collected dual insurance on a building burned on October 25, 1918, in which he had no interest, and that he also was attempting to collect insurance from two companies on a property burned on May 29 last. The companies interested are the Acadia of Halifax and the Dominion of Canada Guarantee & Accident Insurance Company. He was remanded for a week, bail of $3,000 personal and two securities of $1,500 each being granted.

OTONABEE COUNCIL IN REGULAR SESSION

Otonabee Council met pursuant to adjournment, all the members being present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

On motion of Messrs. Sargent and O'Leary the reeve and deputy reeve were authorized to have the township solicitors pay Mr. W. Reid $200 for settlement of claim for damages from high water, Mr. Reild to waive all claims for damages from this date.—Carried.

The reeve introduced and read for the first time a bylaw to levy certain rates.

On motion of Messrs. Lawrie and O'Leary council went into committee of the whole on the second reading of the bylaw, with Mr. Eason in the chair.

Committee rose, council resumed and the chairman reported the bylaw read in committee without amendment.

Moved by Mr. Eason, seconded by Mr. O'Leary that the bylaw be read a third time and passed.

Accounts Passed.

Moved by Mr. Lawrie, seconded by Mr. Sargent, that the following accounts be passed:

Mann & Co., elm plank $9.60; J. J. Moore, replacing broken glass in town hall, $2.

Council adjourned to meet again on October 20.

John J. Moore, Clerk.

It Still Held Good.

George Ade was talking about the high cost of living at Palm Beach. He said:

"While a Palm Beach barber was shaving me one day, I asked him if he knew the significance of the red and white striped pole outside his shop.

"'I do, sir,' the barber answered. 'That pole dates from the days when barbers were also surgeons. It means that the barber bleeds his customers.'

"So saying, the man handed me a check for fifteen cents.

"'Well, well!' said I. 'Sixty-five cents for a shave, eh? Whatever you do, my friend, don't take down your pole.'"

Defining an Impression.

"Say, you're on the water front, aren't you?"

"Nothing so limited," replied the Bill Boulevard. "I'm not less than a reformation who never knew that soap was made. If I have any special one."

Fire-Retarding Paints.

From tests made at the federal bureau of standards it appears that while practically all paint coatings have some fire-retarding action, none of those so far tested afford very great protection. All the samples in question were materially damaged by application of flame for a few seconds. Boil sodium silicate and whitewash rank comparatively high. These have the advantage of cheapness and can both be used on the same surface. However, according to a recent bulletin of the bureau, no treatment of wood after erection can be expected to serve as an effective fire protection, and the use of such materials should not be made an excuse for omitting any of the usual precautions against fire.

MAY BE TRUTH IN LEGEND

Investigation of "Enchanted Table" in New Mexico Seems to Bear Out Story Long Believed.

An isolated butte rising out of a vast plain in the vast Southwest—a flat-topped hill 430 feet high and with sides so nearly vertical that for many centuries it was supposed to be hopelessly climb-proof, is one of the most interesting of the natural wonders of this part of the United States.

Many attempts to climb the "Enchanted Table" or "Mesa Encantada," as the first Spanish settlers called it, have been made, but Indian superstition has attributed their failure largely to a supernatural influence that balked the ascent. Hence the name "Enchanted."

According to the Indian legend, the mesa, which is three miles northeast of the well-known Acoma pueblo, in New Mexico, was very anciently the site of a prehistoric village. A frightful storm carried away part of the rock and with it the rocky staircase which offered the only path of access to the summit.

As a result, the people in the village were cut off from the plain below. They could not climb down; no help could reach them, and they starved to death. The only survivors were a few who by chance were absent from the mesa top at the time of the disaster. From them, it is explained, are sprung the present-day inhabitants of the pueblo of Acoma.

But science, while disposed to be incredulous of things unproved, is at the same time inclined to investigation. Hence an expedition which the government bureau of ethnology sent out to climb the Mesa Encantada. The party, after almost incredible efforts, arrived upon the top.

What they expected to find was—nothing. But, to their surprise, they discovered, on the summit of the mesa, plain and unmistakable evidences of ancient occupancy, such as ruined walls, and what they saw there afforded a measurable confirmation of the Indian legend.

Tasks for Disabled Fighters.

An outline of the efforts of the bureau of employment of the Pennsylvania department of labor and industry to find suitable industrial tasks in Pennsylvania for disabled soldiers and sailors is given in a bulletin just issued by the department. This bulletin, which may be obtained upon application to the department of labor and industry, at Harrisburg, analyzes by task and locality, the 50,000 employment opportunities offered by 900 employers in 60 counties, number of plants, kinds of firms and numbers of openings in each class of employment. One series of tables shows at what tasks several hundreds of disabled men are now employed by the Philadelphia and Reading Railway company. Another chapter on "Placement of Disabled Soldiers and Sailors in Employment" gives a general review of the placement subject, outlining conditions that may be expected and methods to be employed in locating each disabled soldier and sailor at a specified task in Pennsylvania plants.—Scientific American.

Turned From Friend.

The revolving floor in one of the dancing cabarets mystified two young lieutenants just back from France and evidently strangers in New York. They were ushered to a table on the revolving floor. Shortly afterward one of the soldiers went to the telephone booth; emerging about ten minutes later, he looked around in dazed fashion, and made several starts for the spot where he had apparently left his companion, but couldn't seem to find him. "Say, here," he huskily remarked to the head waiter. "Lend me one of your boy scouts to help me find my chum's table, will you?" "What's the trouble?" inquired the headwaiter solicitously. "I left m' friend at a table over yonder by the post," answered the bewildered soldier "and now he's disappeared." As there were a number of men in uniform present the head waiter suggested that the friend be paged. "That's the idea," eagerly responded the soldier. "His name's Kennedy." And in a short time the messmates were reunited. Then the existence of the revolving floor was briefly explained to them.—New York Sun.

Yep, It Takes Practice.

For the forty-fifth time in 12 months he stood at the bridal altar and repeated the solemn words that linked her and him forever with that of the handsome man by her side. As the minister held up his hand signaling for the slow traffic to come forward and kiss the bride, the handsome man leaned over to press the first kiss on her ruby rouged lips.

As he did so, his foot caught in her train and threw him off the track.

"Whatteil, ya big boob," came an encouraging voice from a megaphone on the side lines as the purring of the camera ceased. "Now we'll have to make that again. You've spoiled 500 feet of perfectly good film."

Individual Cups for Cows.

The Jersey herd of Ralph Ballou is now provided with individual drinking bowls. Each stall is connected with the water system and has an automatic bowl, about ten inches in diameter and six inches deep. When the cow sticks her nose in the bowl to drink she turns the water on, and as the bowl fills she raises her head and cuts the water off. This method avoids having to fill the trough or breaking ice for the cows when it is cold.—Monroe County Appeal.

Getting Even With the Censor.

"The censor cuts out all the interesting parts of his letters, but he's found a way to get even with him." "What's that?" "He says he's going to write writing."

MADE SCIENCE OF CHECKERS

New Englanders Put Pastime on Elevation That Made It Far Above Mere Game.

Those who mention the death of Lyman Stearns, long an agent for the Union, recall always his championship among New Hampshire checker players. It seems a minor matter now, but there was a time when checkers were important observes Manchester Union. In old times, when the snow was deep, the papers not what they are now, and the telephone not known, his game, so easy and yet so hard, had its votaries everywhere. A board was at every grocery and in every tavern shrewd, usually rather thoughtful men with a mathematical turn of mind, held the honors in each locality. Here and there notable authorities were developed. Men walked miles to play with each other. The merits of center and side attack, of conservation or sacrifice, were widely debated. Now, the dominating thought of the people has become better expressed in baseball. Only a few of the elect still make the game a passion.

There is yet to be written a philosophy of games. Why are English-speaking peoples almost the only people, except American Indians, to play baseball? How does it happen that before the war one might see a crowd in France waiting with breathless interest the important strokes in a game of croquet? Why do all the South American nations seem to have little interest in any out-of-door sports, except racing, rooster fighting or bull fighting? Why has India no out-of-door national sport except talking philosophy and religion? Why is Scotland devoted to golf instead of cricket? Why has Germany produced only one or two pugilists of reputation? Why have nations that have devoted most attention to ball playing and pugilism been the dominating ones in commerce and government?

Recreation is a product of character expressing itself freely. What does the game of checkers mean? Evidently a contemplative, mildly pugnacious, calculating spirit, delighting to plan campaigns, carry on defense and offense and at the end feel that one made a good contest. That was what the New Hampshire men of past generations delighted to do in life. Some are of that nature still. Some express it with other games. A faction will forever keep the checker board in view. Perhaps they are the kind of men who will remain the conservatives in social and political life.

Prince Carol and the Throne.

In 1866 the Roumanians offered their throne to Prince Carol of a side branch of the Hohenzollern family, who was also, however, connected through his mother with the dynasty of Napoleon. Austria and Russia were not enthusiastic over seeing a Hohenzollern reigning at Bukharest, but Bismarck saw a chance to put a friend of Prussia on the Balkans and urged the young prince to accept.

William Stearns Davis in "Roots of the War" (Century Magazine) in relating the incident quotes the great minister as saying: "Even if you fail on will always remember with pleasure an adventure which can never be a reproach to you." Mr. Davis goes on to relate that through fear the prince traveled down the Danube disguised as a second class passenger until at Turnu-Severin, on Roumanian soil, he left the boat and was greeted by his future prime minister. Austria fumed and might have taken action, but her great war with Prussia was about to break out and she soon had more grievous troubles. The other powers declined to intervene, and the sultan of Turkey, the prince's nominal suzerain, confirmed the new ruler. Thus Prince Carol kept his throne.

Hebraic Idea of God.

The Hebraic idea of God as an absolute, immutable transcendent Being, who yet reveals himself and works out his will in and through the life of Israel his people; who is at once tribal and universal, at once a metaphysical principle and a very present help in time of need, at once independent of all human agency and in some way unable to fulfill himself except through the striving of men for goodness—that idea is typical of an attitude to the world which can defy logic without sinking into mysticism, and can insist on the application of abstract principles in human life without making human life the slave of abstractions. In every manifestation of the Hebrew spirit the attitude can be discerned. It has still something to say to the world and in the Jewish Palestine of the future its new word will be spoken not merely, perhaps not primarily, through literature or art, but through its particular way of handling the practical problems of organized human society.—From "The Future of Palestine," by Leon Simon, in Asia Magazine.

Pat "Produced the Goods."

A zealous excise officer was sent to Ireland to try to locate several "moonshine" stills which were known to exist.

Meeting a native the excise officer approached Pat, saying:

"I'll give you five shillings, Pat, if you can take me to a private still."

"Troth, an' I will, sir," was Pat's reply, as he pocketed the money. "Come with me."

For many weary miles over mountain, bog, and moor they tramped, until they came into view of a barracks. Pointing to a soldier seated on a step inside the square, Pat said:

"There you are, sir, my brother Mike; he's been a soldier for ten years, an' he's a private still."

Why Called "Clove."

The word "clove" has come down from the French word "clou," which means a nail, because of the resemblance, partly real and partly fanciful, which the dried clove bears to a nail.

SURVIVORS OF FEUDAL TIMES

Prussian Junkers Rooted in Their Belief of Their Complete Superiority to Ordinary Man.

A junker is a member of a noble Prussian family, who belongs to the landed aristocracy, and, as a rule adopts the profession of armsd and enters the caste circle of the officer corps. Thanks to the survival of feudalism in the organization of German society, the term has acquired a broader significance. Hence as commonly used today it indicates a narrow minded arrogant, and, often, hellicose member of the aristocracy.

Since 1862, when, under the leadership of Bismarck, the aristocratic party came into political power, the term has been applied to those who hold reactionary views, because they desire to preserve intact the exclusive social, military and political privileges belonging traditionally to the "well born."

Junkerism and junkerdom indicate the policies and the customary round of ideas, judgments, and prejudices characteristic of the junker class.

They have been and still are of great influence, for they have affected Prussian domestic policies by their organized efforts to preserve and protect large landed estates; they have molded German social life by their assumption of complete superiority to the ordinary man, especially to the man who engages in trade or manufactures, while the Prussian officer corps has taken its distinctive tone from their haughty aloofness from the civilian population.

RELIGIOUS CULT MAY SPREAD

Babism Freed From Persecution Through the Downfall of the Turkish Power in Palestine.

With the breaking of the Turkish power in Palestine another religious cult has been liberated from persecution, that of Bahaism, or Bahism. The leader of this spiritual movement is Abdul Baha, or Abbas Effendi, as he is generally known. This religion was first founded by Baha'o'llah, the father of the present leader, and he chose his son to preach its doctrines before the world. Due to the antagonism of the movement to the Islam religion, Abdul Baha was imprisoned by the sultan of Turkey, who feared his teachings, and was kept a prisoner in the fortress of Akka, near Haifa for 40 years. Upon his release in 1908, when a mild constitutional form of government was established in Turkey, Baha traveled through France and England preaching his doctrines also coming to the United States, in 1912.

Abdul Baha strove to be called the "servant of humanity." While in the Orient he won many friends by caring for the sick and oppressed, and among the many titles given him by his neighbors was one especially applied to him namely "Father of the Poor." While in this country he established colonies of supporters of his teachings in Chicago and Kenosha, Wis. His teachings have a close relation with those of Christianity and Judaism.

Muskrat Stops Train.

The marshes around the Boston & Maine railroad yards in Boston are full of muskrats. Charley Brown, a yard brakeman, has been realizing over $100 a season since the war by shooting rats on his spare time and selling the fur, which now commands a high price.

Brown has been known to shoot a muskrat from the top of a moving freight car with a rifle.

A short time ago a muskrat tied up the interlocking switch system at signal tower C. The big rat crawled into the switchpoints to eat out the grease used to lubricate the switches just as the lever man in the tower tried to close the switch for a fast express passenger train.

The rat had wedged in so close the switch wouldn't close and the plant was tied up. The mechanic found the rat wedged into the points and crushed into a mass of fur and flesh.

American Opportunity.

Although the populated area of Siberia is only a belt along the Trans-Siberian railway, that belt is 6,000 miles long and contains nearly 20,000,000 people. Before the war Siberian foreign trade was largely in the hands of German houses, which undoubtedly will make desperate efforts to regain it when the return of normal conditions has brought back the demand for general merchandise, rolling stock and agricultural machinery. But in spite of the geographical proximity of Germany eastern Siberia, when its railway service has been reorganized, will be most easily reached by way of Vladivostok. The commercial opportunity is one that America cannot afford to neglect.—Youth's Companion.

The Confused Hun.

Dr. Thomas C. Ely of Philadelphia tells a story of his son, Lieut. William C. Ely, heard at Fort McPherson, Atlanta, which illustrates the heroism of the negro troops.

A German officer, taken captive complained that nothing could stop the Americans. They were not afraid of the shells, they defied the flame projectors, they advanced through fusillades of the machine guns of 250 to 400 bullets a minute.

"How about the gas?" some one said to the German.

"Gas?" replied the captive Hun. "It was no use to turn on the gas. It merely blackened their faces and frizzled their hair, and they came on just the same!"

Mince Pie That Brought Vision of Home Caused Wounded Soldier to Long for Life.

Pie is not among the articles treated of in works on materia medica, but a recent incident shows that it may have therapeutic value. In a hospital lay an American sailor, for whom everything had been done by surgeons, doctors and nurses, and yet something was lacking. He was homesick; his mind was ever away in a little Atlantic coast town. One day, in the midst of his bodily pain and soul-suffering, there flashed upon him the object of his quest, and he murmured excitedly: "Oh, if I could only have a piece of mince pie." It was not that he wanted to eat a piece of pie, for he was too ill for that. His hunger was for what the pie represented. An American nurse who heard the wish managed, with some difficulty, to find all the ingredients for a real New England pie. When she took it to him she put with it a bit of cheese, also hard to procure in these times, so that nothing would be lacking, and in the cheese she planted a miniature Stars and Stripes. The poor boy could eat neither the pie nor the cheese, but they contributed just the home touch needed to improve his condition. When the wife of the American consul general visited him later she remarked upon the improvement in his condition, and he said: "Two days ago I was in such misery that I could have welcomed death. Now I feel that America is not so far away as I thought and that I have got to hang on."

Burgundy at Its Best.

Burgundy wines of 1915 are reported by the most eminent connoisseurs of Paris to be the best since 1865. In fact their verdict is "perfect."

The summer of 1915 was hot, so was the autumn, with light rains now and again at exactly the right intervals. M. Mathieu, celebrated savant on the subject of wines, writes: "Since 1865 there has been no Burgundy like that of 1915 in delicacy or strength. The 1915 vintage is a remarkable synthesis of bouquet, aroma, body and flavor."

But of course all this is of merely academic interest to us.

LUXURY IN EARLY TRAVEL

"Safety Barges" Instituted for Those Who Feared Hazard of Voyage on Hudson River.

The frequency with which boilers blew up on the early Hudson river boats led to the use of what were known as "safety barges," and these, in their day, were considered the utmost luxury in travel, comparable to the private cars of the magnates of today. The barges were boats with main and upper decks and were almost as large as the steamers which towed them. The rabble rode on the steamers, inhaled the smells of the kitchen and the freight holds, endured the noise of the engines, and took the chances of explosions, while on the barges behind the elite traveled in luxurious state. Food was brought from the boat kitchen to the barge saloon over a swaying bridge between the vessels and was served with great aplomb under the direction of the barge captain, who was a noble figure in the setting.

The upper decks of the barges were canopied and decked with flowers, with promenades and easy chairs from which to view the scenery. At night the interiors were transformed into sleeping accommodations much the same as a modern Pullman, except that they were more commodious. Not the least attractive feature of these barges, according to a chronicler of their excellence, was "an elegant bar, most sumptuously supplied with all that can be desired by the most fastidious and thirsty."

Recent news dispatches which tell of plans to establish floating cafes on the ocean just outside the three-mile territorial limit when the nation goes dry, indicate that luxurious floating establishments somewhat similar to these "safety barges" may again come into use.

Hadn't Changed.

One day a little boy came to the postoffice window asking for mail. The clerk inquired the lad's name and gave him some mail. The following day he again appeared asking for mail, but was not recognized by the busy clerk, who inquired, "Whose little boy are you?" And, the boy, looking trustfully up into her face, replied, "Why, I'm the same little boy I was yesterday."

Victory Bonds Bought

Those who may desire to sell Victory Bonds should come to my office or communicate with me. I buy Victory or War Bonds of all maturities, in any amount, and I am prepared to pay the best price.

W. H. Taylor, 397½ George St. Peterboro, Ont.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:

After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance.
As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 216380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

COMPERS CALLS STEEL MEET.

Union Heads to Consider Postponing Strike Set for Sept. 22.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 17.—It was learned from an authoritative source here that a meeting of representatives of the twenty-four organizations affiliated in the proposed steel strike scheduled for Sept. 22 has been called by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in Pittsburg next Wednesday to consider Mr. Gompers' recommendations that the strike be postponed until after the industrial conference in Washington summoned for October 6 by President Wilson.

ANOTHER VESSEL SUNK.

London, Sept. 17.—The steamer Westerstad struck a mine off Terschelling Lighthouse on the Dutch coast, according to a telegram received by Lloyds. The crew has abandoned the vessel, which is slowly sinking.

Know Only Two Seasons.

There are but two seasons—the wet and the dry—at the equator in Africa. The former (summer) lasts eight months, with the thermometer averaging from 110 to 125 degrees Fahrenheit. During the dry or "cold" season of four months the thermometer stands at about 70 degrees. It is then that the natives, who have been hived in their bamboo huts so long by the rain, desert their towns and set off for the forests and jungles.

Pests Wiped Out.

Recently a government hunter shot two male wolves which had killed 150 sheep and seven colts on two Wyoming ranches, while another trapper bagged a pair of old wolves which had a record of killing $4,000 worth of livestock a year. A third trapper destroyed 85 coyotes and 2 bobcats in one month, using six horses and 200 traps over a trap line varying from 50 to 100 miles in length.

Called a Camisole.

The invariable subject was being discussed in a car between two men. Said the first: "I get on with everything bar the meat, and that's mostly too tough for me to manage." "The meat's all right at our house," rejoined the second; "they learned my girl cookery at school, and she gets the meat quite tender in a French cooking pot they call a camisole."

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Color and Lustre With Sage Tea and Sulphur

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. At little cost you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger.

SCIENTIST TELLS OF TRIUMPH

Professor Claims to Have Perfected System for Underground and Submarine Messages.

Speaking recently of his work for the navy, Prof. James R. Rogers, the inventor of a wireless system for underground and submarine transmission, stated: "Six or seven years ago I began experiments with the transmission of electric impulses by the ground. They were renewed during the war with the audion bulb, which renders the receiving apparatus more sensitive. I first established contact with mines by points and before long received with perfect distinctness impulses sent from Europe. I placed my antennae in trenches radiating from a center and pointing by the compass toward the distant station from which I wished to receive. I demonstrated to the navy department that eight operators may receive at once from eight separate wires. My system was installed at New Orleans, the Great Lakes station and Belmar, N. Y., and is now used at the principal wireless stations in the United States. I have found the best results with my wires buried six feet below the surface in damp ground. Some of my experiments were conducted in water 25 to 50 feet deep."—Scientific American.

Monkey as Labor Possibility.

The pig-tailed macaque or brok of the Malays is a highly intelligent animal, and the Malays train them to pick coconuts. The modus operandi is described by R. W. C. Shelford in "A Naturalist in Borneo." A cord is fastened round the monkey's waist and it is led to the coconut palm, which it rapidly climbs. It then lays hold of a nut, and if the owner judges the fruit to be ripe for plucking he shouts to the monkey, which then twists the nut round and round till the stalk is broken and lets it fall to the ground. If the monkey catches hold of an unripe fruit the owner tugs the cord and the monkey tries another. I have seen a brok act as a very efficient fruitpicker, although the use of the cord was dispensed with altogether, the monkey being guided by the tones and inflections of his master's voice.

Honoring the Dead.

The great Japanese shrine of the imperial ancestors at Yamada, in Ise, is taken down every twenty years and exactly reproduced. For many years every Japanese felt it his duty to visit the great shrine at least once.

Remedy for House Fleas.

Sprinkle the places where the pests appear with a thick layer of the following preparation: Insect powder, eight ounces; borax, eight ounces, and oil of pennyroyal, two drams.

Sash Serves as Ring.

Lovers in Japan, instead of an engagement ring, often give their future brides a piece of beautiful silk, to be worn as a sash.—Indianapolis News.

"Prince Charlie."

Charles Edward, the grandson of James II of England, sometimes called Bonnie Prince Charlie, was known as the young pretender, son of James II. At the time of the rising of 1745 he was at one time very near entering London, but the fatality that hung over the Stuarts overwhelmed him. He retreated to Scotland, where he and his army were utterly routed at Culloden. With him the direct line of the Stuarts became extinct. He died January 31, 1788.

"What Matters the Road?"

Now and then in Brittany one sees an East Indian, lithe as a panther, peering in at the open door of a cathedral with wistful interest. As Krishna said many hundreds of years ago: "What matters the road if it leads to God?"—Nina Larrey Duryea in Harper's Magazine.

Mangroves Destroying Island.

The island of Aldabra, near Madagascar, is being wiped off the map by the action of the mangroves that grow along the foot of the cliff. They eat their way into the rock in all directions, and into the gaps thus formed the waves force their way.

Mender on the Mend.

"I understood you to say the other day that your wife was ill, but I suppose she is better. I saw her this morning sitting by the window sewing," said one man to another. "Quite right!" replied the other. "As you observed today she is on the mend!"

Famous Martinique Women.

Josephine, ill-starred wife of Napoleon, was born in Martinique, and her statue, splendid and melancholy, dominates the public plaza, or Savanne, near the center of Fort de France. Here, too, was born Mme. de Maintenon, the beautiful courtesan, whose influence on Louis XIV was responsible for one of the religious massacres during his reign.

Soldering Aluminum.

French manufacturers are the most successful in use of aluminum solder. They use it in proportions as follows: Zinc, 80 parts; copper, 8 parts; aluminum, 12 parts. For soldering aluminum by means of the ordinary soldering iron, 95 to 99 parts of tin are recommended to 5 to 8 parts of bismuth, which makes an ordinary soft solder.

Water-Proof Match.

A new safety match which is claimed to be wind-proof and water-proof will be especially useful in modern warfare. It will burn five seconds in the face of a strong wind, and when it goes out it will not start a fire, no matter where it is thrown.

RED CATTLE AND KID BROMPTON BOTH ARE COFIDENT OF VICTORY

Will Fight Ten Round Return Match To a Decision To-night Bull Here To Fight Jordan—Dugan and Athony in Another Preliminary

Don't forget the big boxing and wrestling exhibition at the Brock street rink tonight. Kid Cattle and Kid Brompton are both in fine condition for the big contest and if enthusiasm and earnestness would win the fight a prize would have to be awarded to each man. Neither boxer was satisfied at getting a draw decision on their last appearance, and a real fight is promised for tonight.

Dugan and Athony are to link up again in one of the preliminaries and are going to fight it out in real earnest this time. Both are confident of victory and are determined to win. Both lads have a good punch and some real battling will be seen.

Irish Jordan, who played Alf's his opponent the best time, will be seen in a spirited bout tonight with the doughty Bull of Toronto. Bull is a great favorite in Toronto and has won many fights but Jordan won over some difficult men in France, and is not worrying a great deal over Bull's great reputation. He is certainly not at all afraid.

The bout is to be the best show of its kind seen here in a long time.

Dated at Peterborough this 16th day of September, 1919.

E. C. S. HUYCKE,
Chairman of the Voters' Registartion Board for the County of Peterborough.

TROUBLE FOR BOTH TEACHER AND SCHOLAR

It is not their occupation that causes school teachers to have pupils in their eyes, but it is sometimes inherited eye weakness or too steady application that gives their scholars trouble in getting up their studies. The children's eyes should be very carefully looked after; what looks like dulness may be only the effect of eye-strain. Let Dr. Fowler examine the child's eyes, if he or she is making poor progress with their lessons. CONSULTATION FREE.

THEATRICALS

For the first time since the shutters of a motion picture camera blinked at a miracle of movement on a motion picture screen a conjunction has been formed between eloquent silence of a film drama and the living appeal of human participants.

The result, a dazzling combination of feminine loveliness and a filmed satire of convulsing, yet heroically patriotic plot, is revealed to amusement seekers at the Grand Theatre, Thursday and Friday, October 2 and 3 where Mack Sennett's "Jack Canuck in Berlin" is projected on the screen and Mack Sennett's Bathing Beauties from California—yes themselves—appear for the first time professionally outside of the Sennett Studios.

The shapely, wholesome and beautiful models of feminine perfections are seen in person in their fetching costumery and in an act specially designed and lighted to reveal them at their athletic best.

Bigger even than Sennett's recent success "Mickey," is his latest screen feature, "Jack Canuck in Berlin," and in it, Sennett, while resuming his role of humorist, satirist and burlesque expert, appears in the role of a prophet of patriotism and a first aid to history; for Sennett has shown up the kaiser in his true colors.

No longer is he the "bogey" man running amuck among the nations—this huge bluff, whose evil and whose friends together with the might of a deluded maddened people, enabled the pigmy to camouflage himself successfully in the habiliments of Attila, the hun. Mr Hohenzollern is now "pegged." his "number" is registered, his "Goat" is released to run around and butt him, and the author of six safety-first Princelings is shown as all despots are always found at heart to be—rank blusterers and jokes.

How this somewhat serious scheme is developed in an atmosphere of burlesque and travesty satire and ridicule, is Mr. Sennett's trick. He is the only picture publisher who could accomplish it, and that he has done it will be conceded by all who see this masterpiece.

"Jack Canuck in Berlin" ought to be seen by every loyal Canadian not because it is a war play—for it isn't; there has been no opposition to add to the film representations of actual conflict—nor yet because it exposes the hollow and egotistical character of the former kaiser and his satellites, but rather because "Jack Canuck in Berlin" is calculated to stiffen confidence in the ultimate triumph of right in every dispute, and to demonstrate the spirit of true Canadianism that will proceed straight forward in the pursuit of duty without fear of evil monsters who would block the progress of humanity and destroy its dearest treasures and finest inheritances.

This is the first time since "Fatty and the Broadway Stars" that the same producer, that he has permitted his whole array of stellar talent to appear in one comedy. It includes Charlie Murray, Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling, Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver Chester Conklin, Eva Thatcher, Bert Roach, the famous bunch of California rosebuds, the Sennett bathing beauties and (specially engaged) Bothwell Browne, noted stage impersonator of female characters, who is the pivot point of the fun-film.

VARIETY PROGRAM AT GRAND TONIGHT

BEST BILL OF ATTRACTIONS POSSIBLE TO BE BOOKED.

It is a well-known fact that the moving picture lovers of Peterborough enjoy a variety program of pictures, and Manager Dahn has arranged one of the best variety programs for today that it is possible to book by any house.

Bessie Barriscale will be seen in the great society drama, in five acts, "The White Lie." As an added feature a big western production will be William S. Hart in "The Marked Deck." Two side-splitting comedies and a special Gaumont weekly will complete this star variety program

BLACKSTONE, GREAT MAGICIAN COMING

WITH BIG COMPANY, AT THE GRAND TOMORROW AND SATURDAY.

The great Blackstone, the world's greatest magician, will appear at the Grand with his own big company on Friday and Saturday, with a popular matinee Saturday This is the first appearance here of the great magician, and from the great interest his coming engagement has aroused he will be assured of a crowded house at each performance.

For this engagtment, Blackstone will offer the cream of all his sensational illusions, the same which created such a furore of awe and excitement during his last New York engagement, including the same cast of clever assistants, a company of fifteen people. Practically everything he produces in magic he is originator of. He presents his illusions at aeroplane speed, ofering thrills and sensation every minute of his performance.

Blackstone's production is truly an eclipse, his achievements in the creation of illusioning, tranformation levitation and human disingpreme, his slight of hand work, is beyond description Working right under the eyes of the spectators without fear of detection, his whole performance is marvellous

A scale of prices has been arranged within reach of everyone: evenings, best seats $1.00, 75c., 50c. and 25c., and a popular matinee Saturday, at 25c., 50c., and 75c. Seats can be reserved by telephone now.

Small Producers of Coal.

Portugal digs less coal than any other European country. Her total product of coal is only 22,600 tons a year. New South Wales digs yearly just twice as much coal as all Spain produces.

Pearl Fisheries.

It is definitely known that the Ceylon pearl fisheries have been in existence since 806 B. C., and tradition says they yielded gems before that time.

WIPED FROM EARTH

Only Dust Remains of Proud City of Babylon.

Belshazzar's Glorious Capital Now Visited Only by the Archeologist in Search of Mementoes of a Long-Past Age.

The city of Babylon of today is represented by nothing more than mounds of debris, in which archeologists dig for burnt-clay books and other treasures. There is no stone whatever in that region, where the land is a mere alluvial deposit, and all the great structures of Babylon, erected by the labor of myriads of slaves taken in war, were of sun-dried brick faced with burned brick.

Babylon, a long time ago was captured by the army of Cyrus. The town was "wet" and the population used to stage some high old times. It was provisioned for 20 years, and was by far the most formidably fortified city of antiquity, being surrounded by a wall 85 miles long, 350 feet high and 87 feet thick. Half a dozen four-horse chariots could be driven abreast along the top of the wall for the entire circuit of the metropolis, whose inhabitants numbered 2,000,000.

On a certain memorable night the whole city went on a spree. The guards deserted their posts and in the great palace of King Belshazzar a drunken orgy reigned.

The banks of the Euphrates where it ran directly through the city were defended by walls corresponding in height and thickness to that which encircled Babylon. They were pierced at suitable intervals (where streets ran parallel across the town) for ferry gates, which were massive affairs of bronze. The river bottom, within the city limits, was paved with brick. For if desired, as had happened when huge quays were built, the Euphrates could be turned out of its course, its waters being diverted into an artificial reservoir 100 miles in circumference outside the walls. This engineering expedient, in fact, had made it practicable to pave the bottom.

On the night of the most famous jamboree in history, Cyrus, being helped by spies within the walls, turned the Euphrates out of its course and marched his army over the dry river bed into the city, entering through one or more river gates which had been left open. The royal palace, a vast structure on the west bank, was captured; Belshazzar, sword in hand, was slain, and the city belonged to Cyrus.

He did not destroy it, but, ceasing to be a center of dominion, it shrank. A large part of the population migrated, deserting Babylon, whose huge walls and gigantic buildings (including the tower of Babel and the famous hanging gardens, built by Nebuchadrezzar for the enjoyment of his wife Amytis) soon fell to pieces.

When at Work Keep Busy.

It has been noted that most men do their best under pressure. Too often men are spoiled by not being kept busy during office hours. It may be there are some who can stand to be busy by spurts. But the average man begins to loaf when occasion offers and can't "get the gait" when the rush comes. Besides, there is danger of developing habits of procrastination when the job is indifferent as to time. As a matter of fact most men allow a job to lie until they have just time enough to produce it any way. So the wise man will keep himself busy. He will see to it that he develops the habit of getting down to business as soon as he reaches his office. He can then afford to leave his business at the office where it belongs and enjoy himself at home and get ready for the next day.

The Lady of the Lamp.

The memory of Florence Nightingale, the world's first woman war nurse, is honored in the design of the insignia of the American Army Nurses' School, just established this year. Florence Nightingale, in the Crimean war, was known as "the Lady of the Lamp," and the new insignia has a lamp superimposed on the caduceus of the medical corps. This, the first military school for nurses ever established, has 1,000 students already enrolled, and 5,000 others have been accepted for the three-year course. Each student will wear the uniform and insignia of the school.

What difference, if any, the signing of the armistice and the end of the war may have upon the hospital training plans has not been announced. It is supposed that the work will continue.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I am beginning in the middle of my story," he apologized. "Let me go back. Six years ago I was hardly the man you see now—I was at least twenty years younger. Hayden and I worked together in the office of the Suburban railway. We had been close friends at college. I believed in him and trusted him, although I knew he had certain weaknesses. I was a happy man. I had risen rapidly, I was young, the future was lying golden before me, and I was engaged. The daughter of Henry Thornhill, our employer—the girl you have met here at Baldpate—had promised to be my wife. Hayden had also been a suitor, but when our engagement was announced he came to me like a man, and I thought his words were sincere.

"One day Hayden told me of a chance we might take which would make us rich. It was not altogether within the law, but it was the sort of thing that other men were doing constantly, and Hayden assured me that as he had arranged matters it was absolutely safe. My great sin is that I agreed we should take the chance, a sin for which I have paid, Mr. Magee, over and over."

Again he paused and gazed steadily at the fire. Again Magee noted the gray at his temples, the aftermath of fevers in his cheeks.

"We took the chance," he went on. "For a time everything went well. Then one blustering March night Hayden came to me and told me we were certain to be caught. We arranged to meet the next night at the Argots club and decide on what we should do.

"We met in the library of the club. Hayden came in to me from the card room adjoining, where he had been watching the admiral doddering over his eternal game. Just at that moment the admiral finished his game and went out. We were alone in the library.

"It was—red—a measly little red two spot."

"Hayden told me he had thought the matter over carefully. There was nothing to do but to clear out of Reuton forever. But why, he argued, should we both go? Why wreck two lives? It would be far better, he told me, for one to assume the guilt of both and go away.

"I agreed to his plan. Hayden led the way into the room where the admiral had been playing. We went up to the table, over which the green shaded light still burned. On it lay two decks of cards, face up. Hayden picked up the nearest deck and shuffled it nervously. His face—God, it was like the snow out there on the mountain!"

"He held out the deck," went on the exile softly; "told me to draw. He said if the card was black he'd clear out. 'But if it's red, David,' he said, 'why—you—got to go.' I held my breath and drew. It was a full minute before I dared look at the card in my hand. Then I turned it over, and it was—red—a measly little red two spot. I don't suppose a man ever realizes all at once what such a moment means. I remember that I was much cooler than Hayden. It was I who had to brace him up. I—I even tried to joke with him. But his face was like death. He hardly spoke at all at first, and then suddenly he became horribly talkative. I left him—talking wildly—I left Reuton. I left the girl to whom I was engaged."

CHAPTER XXII.

"I wanted most—to die."

"I WENT to a little town in South America," continued Kendrick after a pause. "There was no treaty of extradition. I smoked cigarettes and drank what passed for rum on the balcony of an impossible hotel, and otherwise groped about for the path that leads to the devil. After a year, I wrote to Hayden. He answered, urging me to stay away. He intimated that the thing we had done was on my shoulders. I was ashamed, frightfully unhappy. I didn't dare write to—her. I had disgraced her. I asked Hayden about her, and he wrote back that she was about to marry him. After that I didn't want to come back to Reuton. I wanted most—to die.

"The years crept by on the balcony of that impossible hotel. Six of them. At last, a few months ago, I wrote to another college friend of mine, Drayton, and told him the whole story. I did not know that he had been elected prosecutor in Reuton. He answered with a kind, pitying letter, and finally I knew the horrible truth. Nothing had ever happened. The thing we had done had never been discovered. Hayden had lied. He had even lied about his engagement to Myra Thornhill. There, he had made a reality out of what was simply his great desire—I came north. What happened after you know as well as I."

"Yes, I think I do," agreed Mr. Magee softly.

"I have told you the whole story," Kendrick replied, "and yet it seems to me that still it is not all told. Why should Hayden have killed himself? He had lied to me, it is true, but life was always sweet to him, and it hardly seems to me that he was the sort to die simply because his falsehood was discovered. Was there some other act of cruelty—some side to the story of which we are none of us aware? I wonder."

"I—I had to creep back to Baldpate mountain finally."

He was silent a moment.

"Anyhow, I have told you all I know," he said. "Shall I tell it also to the coroner? Or shall we allow Hayden's suicide to pass as the result of his implication in this attempt at bribery? I ask your advice, Mr. Magee."

"My advice," returned Magee, "is that you befuddle no pompous little village doctor with the complication of this unhappy tale. No, let the story be that Hayden killed himself as the toils closed in on him—the toils of the law that punishes the bribe giver—now and then and occasionally. Mr. Kendrick, you have my deepest sympathy. Is it too much for me to hope"—he glanced across the room to where Myra Thornhill sat beside the professor—"that the best of your life is yet to come, that out of the wreck this man made of it you may yet be happy?"

Kendrick smiled.

"You are very kind," he said. "Yes, Miss Thornhill has waited for me all these years—waited, believing. It is a loyalty of which I cannot speak without—you understand. She knows why I went away—why I stayed away. She is still ready to marry me. I shall go again into the Suburban office and try to lift the road from the muck into which it has fallen. Yes, it is not too much for me to hope—and for you in your kindness—that a great happiness is still for me."

"Believe me, I'm glad," replied Magee with youthful enthusiasm, holding out his hand. "I'm sorry I spoiled your little game up here, but"—

"I understand," smiled Kendrick. "I think none the less of you for what you have done. And who knows? It may turn out to have been the wisest course after all."

Ah, would it? Mr. Magee walked to the window, pondering on the odd tangle of events that had not yet been completely straightened out. Certainly her eyes were an honest blue as well as a beautiful—but who was she? Where was she? The great figure of Mrs. Norton stirred restlessly near at hand; the puffed lids of her eyes opened.

"Mr. Magee," she said when she had made out his figure by the window, "you've been a true friend, as I might say, to a couple of mad females who ought to have been at home by their own firesides, and I'm going to ask one more favor of you. Find out when the next train goes to Reuton, and see that I'm at the station an hour or two before it pulls out."

"I'll do that, Mrs. Norton," smiled Magee. "By the way, is Norton the name?"

"Yes," answered the woman, "that's my name. Of course it ain't here. I [illegible]

"No matter," said Mr. Magee. "She'll probably change it soon. Can't you tell me something about her—just a tiny bit of information—just a picture of where she is now and what she's doing with that small fortune I gave her?"

"Where is she now?" repeated Mrs Norton. "She's home and in bed in my second floor front unless she's gone clear crazy. And that's where I wish I was this minute—in bed—though it's questionable in my mind if I'll ever be able to sleep again what with the uproar and confusion my home is probably in by this time, leaving it in charge of a scatter-brained girl."

"Why did you come?" prodded Mr Magee. "Why did you leave your house on this strange mission?"

"The Lord knows," replied the woman. "I certainly never intended to but she begged and pleaded, and the first thing I knew I was on a train. She has winning ways, that girl. Maybe you've noticed?"

"I have," assented Billy Magee.

"I thought so. No, Mr. Magee, I can't tell you nothing about her. I ain't allowed to, even you that has been so kind. She made me promise 'He'll know soon enough,' she kep saying. But I will tell you, as I told you before, there's no occasion to worry about her, unless you was to think she was held up and murdered with all that money on her, the brave little dear! If you was considering offering yourself for the job of changing her name, Mr. Magee, I say go in and do it. It sure is time she settled down and gave up this thing. gave it all up before something awful happens to her. You won't forget, the very next train, Mr. Magee?"

"The very next," Magee agreed.

In through the dining room door stamped Quimby, grave of face, dazed at being roused from sleep, and with him an important little man whose duty it was to investigate at Upper Asquewan Falls such things as had happened that night at Baldpate. Even from his slumber he rose with the air of a judge and the manner of a Sherlock Holmes. For an hour he asked questions, and in the end he prepared to go in a seemingly satisfied state of mind.

Quimby's face was very awed when he came downstairs after a visit to the room above.

"Poor fellow!" he said to Magee "I'm sorry—he was so young," for such as Quimby carry no feud beyond the gates. He went over and took Kendrick's hand.

"I never had a chance," he said, "to thank you for all you tried to do for me and my invention."

"And it came to nothing in the end," Kendrick asked.

"Nothing," Quimby answered. "I—I had to creep back to Baldpate mountain finally, broke and discouraged. I have been here ever since. All my blue prints, all my models—they're locked away forever in a chest up in the attic."

"Not forever, Quimby," Kendrick replied. "I always did believe in your invention. I believe in it still. When I get back into the harness I'm sure I can do something for you."

"I'm going to lay a stretch of track in Reuton with your joints. That's all you need. They'll have to use 'em then. We'll force the Civic into it. We can do it, Quimby—we surely can."

Quimby rubbed his hand across his eyes.

The Mute Messenger

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

Ben Dymond was out of a job and there was a hungry wife and child at home. He had wandered the streets all the morning without meeting with the least encouragement as to employment. Footsore, down-hearted, faint from the want of food, he was resting on a refuse box in front of a hotel when a bareheaded man in overalls came out on the sidewalk, observed his woe-begone appearance, and accosted him.

"Ready for a two hours' task?" he inquired incidentally.

"Ready for two years, night and day, so the home folks have regular meals!" responded Ben with alacrity.

"Well, there's fifty cents an hour in it," volunteered the other. "Come on. Hello! no drink in this, I hope?"

"Never touch that," said Ben. Then with a weary smile: "Nothing except a couple of crusts since last night," for he had staggered and his companion had mistaken the cause.

"Very well, you come with me," he directed. "The meal will be a good one, and thrown in with the dollar," and indeed it was a famous meal in the hotel kitchen. There was more than a plenty. Ben ate sparingly until one of the cooks, comprehending the situation, shoved in his pocket a box filled with choicest viands and "lunch at bedtime—see?"

Ben was taken to the roof of the hotel, where he was given a carpet beater and a pile of possibly a hundred small rugs. He attacked them with a will. In an hour and a quarter by the clock he had completed his task and his employer handed him a dollar bill.

"I haven't worked the full time," submitted Ben.

"No, but you've done two hours' average work, all the same. Now perhaps there's some odd work for tomorrow. You stay here till I hunt up the manager and find out."

Ben was nothing loath as to seating himself on the cornice and resting up. He became aware of a commotion in the street, and peered four stories down. Across the street was a great skyscraper, and in its shade a crowd was gathered, eyes fixed skyward. Ben followed their gaze. Dangling from a telephone wire was a pigeon.

The pigeon had struggled into flying position, fluttered up and took off in a violent dash. The string held and the bird was jerked back to helplessness. Women grabbed the arms of men they did not know and implored them to "do something!" Wordless prayers seemed concentrated upon anxious, sympathetic lips. Again the well-nigh exhausted pigeon fluttered up, drew the string loose, tumbled wearily through the air and dropped inert at the feet of the interested and pitying Ben. Its eyes were open, its breath came in spasms. As he took it into his hands and caressed it Ben noticed a small metal disk surrounding one foot. Clearly traced upon it were the words: "Carrier dove, registered A 32. Property of Arthur Blake, 32 Webster terrace. Return or report, at owner's cost."

The man who had hired Ben showed up to tell him that he could come to work on the morrow. He stared at the pigeon and listened with interest to Ben's explanation.

"It must be a bird of some value," he said. "Webster terrace? That's only a mile from here. I say, you stand a good chance of a reward for taking it to this Arthur Blake."

"I'll do just that," declared Ben. "Not that I want the pay, but the poor, gentle thing's heart is beating like a trip hammer," and he placed it within his coat and was on his way with his new adventure at once. His destination proved to be a handsome mansion on a select thoroughfare. The servant who admitted him led him to a room where sat a stately old lady, who took the bird from Ben's hand and held it as lovingly to her breast as though it was some cherished child. She asked Ben a number of questions, thanked him for his restoration of the bird, and explained that it was a valued pet of her son. She took up her purse and insisted on Ben accepting a $5 bill, and lifting a wing of the pigeon drew forth a compact little wad of paper secured to a tiny metal ring, opened it, perused it, and read aloud the words: "Come back and—forgive!"

Later Ben knew that this missive was from the former fiance of Arthur Blake, a Miss Ethel Brent. They had [illegible] a trifle. Blake had been disappointed in receiving no word from his petulant love and had just left the house bound on a long journey. The old mother arose to her feet deeply excited. She asked Ben to hasten to a certain railroad depot, to board the Sunset Limited, to hand to her son the little note and explain how he had come by it.

Just as the train was about to pull out Ben sped by the gate guard, swung to a rear parlor coach, made a voluble inquiry, placed in the hands of a handsome young man the tiny note, and both left the train just as it was moving out. As they parted, and Arthur Blake hastened to seek his contrite sweetheart, he pressed upon Ben half the contents of his purse, sufficient to keep the wolf from the door for many a day to come.

May Have Been Lincoln's

Abraham Lincoln had the habit of carrying in his pocket four or five cents each with a hole so that they were strung on a string. One of them he lost. Recently Mrs. J. L. Underwood of Newcastle, Pa., found such a cent bearing date 1818 in a field near Lincoln City, and she has refused $250 for it.

Plants Affected by Sun.

Some remarkable variations in plant structure and color from exposure to the sun at different hours of the day have been brought to the notice of the Royal Microscopical Society of England by Col. R. E. Rawson. In flowers of the common nasturtium—tropaeolum majus—the low sun of the early morning developed yellow coloring matter, the middle sun of midday stimulated the violets, blues and purples. The color of the foliage and lobing of the leaves also changed.

Washington's Hair in Ring.

A signet ring containing locks of hair of George Washington has been added to the collection of relics of Alexandria Washington lodge of Masons, No. 22, in Alexandria, Va. The ring, which was the property of Mrs. Martha Peter, granddaughter of Martha Washington, contains several locks of Washington's hair—of reddish brown mixed with gray. It is inscribed "A. Hamilton, 1798." Abigail Hamilton was the grandmother of the donor.

Must Always Have Horses.

A limousine is all very well for a fleeing kaiser. But for a triumphal entry, a journey over strewn roses, through acclaiming throngs, the monarch selects a horse. King Albert and his queen returned to their people in the ancient knightly manner. Many statesmen are less becoming to a horse, and it is perhaps fortunate that the president's limousine escaped damage on the Orduna, but it is certain that a highbred steed rises to an occasion of magnificence better than a motorcar. "A drift of crimson petals covered the mudguards, lilies became tangled in the nonskid chains, and the exultant crack of a blowout mingled with the people's cheers." This will never do. Come what may, we must always keep a few horses to head parades.

Collecting War Library.

The university at Bologna, Italy, has well under way a war library for the collection of which it has gone far afield. It has sought original documents from all the belligerent nations, has collected an immense number of documents from war correspondents and from accredited correspondents in all the countries affected by the war. Its latest gift from Great Britain is an anti-British book printed by German agents in San Francisco in the Hindustani language and intended for circulation in India, where German propaganda was rife during the period. The University of Bologna is attempting to make such a collection of books and documents as will furnish an historian material for an impartial record on which to base judgment of the war motives and events.

India Cans by Uncle Sam's Methods.

Even on "India's coral strand" they are canning, and doing it by the directions put out by the United States department of agriculture. The missionaries there have been the instigators of the movement. Hundreds of men and women have visited the exhibits of the products canned.

World's Greatest Cataract.

What is set down as the greatest cataract in the world is on the Iguazu river, which partly separates Brazil and Argentina. The precipice over which the river plunges is 210 feet high, that of Niagara being 167 feet. The cataract is 13,123 feet wide, or about two and a half times as wide as Niagara. It is estimated that 100,000,000 tons of water pass over Niagara in an hour. A like estimate gives the falls of Iguazu 140,000,000 tons.

THE PRINCE TAKES LEAVE OF HIS FRIENDS IN WESTERN ONTARIO.

AS WAR MEMENTO

Public Square of Arras Is to Be Preserved.

Just as War Left It, It Will Serve to Remind the World That Here the Marauding Huns Were Checked.

In the Little Place of Arras, where once stood the Hotel de Ville, with its belfry and its peal of bells, led by La Joyeuse, is today a notice-board in English. It says that this place is to be preserved in its ruin as war has left it.

Other places will be rebuilt again, and will forget, but this Little Place will remain empty, and one day Arras will be more proud of that emptiness and of those few broken stones than are other towns of the most beautiful things that they possess.

For so Arras will remain always, as it is today one of the rocks visible on which the great waves of invasion broke and surged and broke again, but could flow no farther. There they were held. There in the center of Arras you come suddenly today on the dark line of their highest tide.

Elsewhere, across the open country, you come more gradually, in the land of war, by roads where troops move, by fields where are lines and lines of brown and white trenches, ready but never used; by empty villages, with here and there a house broken; and so at last into the great No Man's land of France, uninhabited, uninhabitable, where armies fought and fought again, until all is destroyed and men live a gypsy life by the roadside. But in Arras you turn a corner of one of the little streets and it is as if a window had opened suddenly and you looked out on war.

For three years one could only enter Arras from the west, by the road from Doullens through the Amiens gate or by the road from St. Pol past Dead Man's corner, where nightly the reliefs, coming up, were shelled. Beside both these roads the trees stand, and the fields are tilled and there are woods across the hills. You enter Arras today through a country unchanged by war. The change is not yet.

It is a silent town. Its houses stand, though scarcely one is quite whole. Their shutters are closed—their broken faces boarded up. The town is like a man that sleeps after long suffering.

So you pass through cobbled streets, very gray, clean, silent streets, between those exhausted houses, going down the Rue St. Aubert and by the white hospital with its green vine leaves. Then you turn up other little streets, with their narrow sky above them and come, very suddenly, on an open lane with banks on either side, where nettles and coltsfoot and loosestrife grow. But this that looks like a country lane is cobbled, and its banks are heaps of brick.

It is as you enter this lane that you are conscious of something more unexpected and more awful than any ruined and broken things—of an enormous emptiness in the middle of that town of tall houses and narrow streets.

When the years have passed and all the country to the east of Arras has long been made whole; when the trees grow again beside the Cambrai and the Bapaume roads and there are cottages once more in Beaurains and Remy and Vis-en-Artois, there will still be that sudden emptiness beneath the sky among the narrow streets of Arras.

Standing there, men will remember that once one could come into Arras only from the west. They will think of it then as of one of those towns, now far inland and surrounded by quick fields, which once were on the seashore. They will look at that gray rim of the town hall as at the ruins of a great rock where once the storm beat.

Ancient Place of Worship.

What is said to be the oldest place of continuous religious worship in the world is at Tai Shan, Shantung province, China. The place is near the town of Tsinfu, and is located amidst cultivated fields on the bank of a small stream. A shrine was built over the spot many centuries ago, long before the coming of Christ. China claims an antiquity of 2,000 years.

To Keep Young.

The great enemy of youthfulness is the drying-up process, and this is why we should not only keep as much as possible with the young but should enter into their joys, their plays, with zest and enthusiasm. We should romp and play with them, interest ourselves in the things that delight them, instead of pushing children away from us and restraining them all the time, regarding them as a nuisance and a bore. Children were given us to keep us youthful, to keep our sympathies fresh.—Exchange.

No End to That.

"I thought more than a year ago they agreed not to quarrel any more." "So they did, but they've been wrangling about the peace terms ever since."

Some Gardener.

"Husband very fond of his garden?" "Very. He's even hired a man to come once a week to keep it weeded."

Seventy-Eight candidates attend the initial practise of the Universi of Toronto football team.

LABOR CANDIDATES.

Will Patterson May Be Nominated in Kingston.

Kingston, Sept. 18.—While efforts are being made in mercantile quarters here to secure the candidature of Sir Henry Drayton for Kingston Federal bye election, Labor interests are figuring upon placing in the field Ald. Wm Patterson, one of their number, who is a foreman in the Canadian Locomotive Works. They have made no definite announcement yet, but intimate they will have a candidate for the Commons. As they expect Brig.-Gen. A. C. Ross to again stand for the Legislature, Laborites will not have a candidate for the provincial election.

Life in Palestine.

Wearford, Sept. 18.—Quartermaster-Sergt. Philip Ciglen, who went to Palestine with the Jewish Legion from Toronto two years ago, and who was on active service there until the signing of the armistice, has just arrived home. He was very favorably impressed with life in Palestine, and says that the people there are gradually getting down to the customs and usages of European countries.

TIME FOR APPEALS AGAIN EXTENDED

APPEALS WILL BE ACCEPTED TO-MORROW—CRITICISMS OF LOCAL ENUMTRATORS PARTLY UNJUST.

The court is continuing to hear the appeal for names that were left off the voters' list, but they do not seem to be as rushed as expected by the large number of appeals. Voters are warned to press their appeals at their callest convenience as his is their last opportunity.

The time for entering appeals has been extended until tomorrow but no others will be accepted after that.

There has been severe criticism of the way the enumerations were carried out in this city. Probably if those citizens were to consider the magnitude and difficulty of the task their criticisms would be less pronounced and, when they are informed that in other places as proportionately as large, a number have been left off the lists, they will undoubtedly realise their criticisms were partly unjust.

The following is the condition in London ,which would indicate that the conditions there are as bad if not worse than here.

London, Ont Sept. 18.—City Clerk Samuel Baker, Clerk of the Court of Appeals, presided over by Judge J. M. Judd anounced today that 1,529 London electors have been left off the Provincial voters' lists because they did not personally attend in court in support of appeals made in their behalf. Mr. Baker states that there were 3,080 appeals in London. The Judge allowed 1,098 and added the names of the appelants to the lists. The appeals of 453 were denied, while the balance were not present and the court closed with no action taken.

It is up to those who are entitled to vote to avoid this state of affairs in this city as regards the number who failed to appear to press their appeals.

LABOR REPRESENTATIVES.

Sydney, Australia, Sept 18. — Premier Hughes states that it has been definitely decided that Australia is to be represented at the International Labor Congress in America, but the delegation has not yet been chosen.

CAPITAL CASES INCREASE.

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—Capital cases are on the increase. Already this year there have been 18, 50 per cent more than for the whole of last year, and judgments in the September assizes are still to come. This year's cases are made up as follows: Executions, 11; commutations 5; suicide, 1; deceased prior to date fixed for execution, 1. Total, 18. The total for last year was 12.

AUSTRALIA VS. STATE GOVERNORS

The cabled announcement that the Queensland State Government is about to make proposals to the Imperial authorities to abolish the office of State Governor, raises an issue that is becoming an acute one in Australian politics. The writer, who has lived in Australia all his life, and travelled widely both the city and country districts of the Commonwealth, is as ardent supporter of the Empire system as most Australians. We are well aware of the debt we owe to Britain. But for her mighty and protecting arm the infant Commonwealth would long since have fallen an easy prey to the avid clutches of the Prussian Eagle, the significance of whose dominion in the Pacific— wrenched from its grasp, in the opening months of the war, by Australian soldiers was only first realized by the mass of Australians when the Censor released the story of the occupation of German New Guinea – German "Kultur's" farthest outpost in the Pacific—well on the way to transformation from a peaceful trading station to a Southern Heligoland, and an instant menace to the security of the Commonwealth.

A Cash Nexus.

Nor are Australians unmindful of the generosity of the Motherland in purchasing, for cash before delivery our wheat and wool, the bulk of which, after nearly four years, still remains undelivered owing to lack of freight. Translate this action if the Imperial Government into the sphere of practical every day business — imagine (if it is possible to imagine such a transaction) a merchant paying cash for goods, instantly required for his business, in the terms that he would take delivery after a period of years, and one realizes that this one act of the Imperial Government has done more to bind Australia to the Empire than oceans of oratory of the "Empire Day" brand, or miles of "flag-wagging"—as, indeed, the deeds of Australian soldiers in Gallipoli, in Palestine and France have done more to bring Australian loyalty home to the minds of thoughtful Englishmen than all the talk of politicians.

Deep in the heart of every Australian is a love for the Old Land, from which Australia sprang. Do not Australians, of even the newer generation, speak of a voyage to England as a voyage "home"? But, as deep in his heart, is the cherished ambition to manage his own affairs. He is not satisfied with the measure of self-government—extensive as it is—that he at present enjoys. The sense of nationhood that, previous to August 1914, but dimly struggled to express itself, has, in the last five bloody years, found clamant voice, and "Australia for the Australians" is now his battle-cry. Will England understand that there is nothing in that slogan to cause her one instant's anxiety about this new young giant of the Southern States, or that, if ever again Western civilization the keystone, of whose arch is English liberty is threatened, "Australia will be there" with blood and sacrifice once more to help to defend it?

England Will Understand.

We, who know England, know that she will understand. No thoughtful student of the last fifty years of Imperial history beginning from 1867, when the beginnings of Dominion Home Rule were conferred on Canada can fail to appreciate the fact that it is because English statesmen do understand the needs and desires of the young nations of her far-flung Empire that England stands today as the greatest civilizing force in history.

In a referendum of the Australian people were taken tomorow on the question of the abolition of the office of State Governor, the writer has only one opinion as to the result. An overwhelming majority of Australians would be in favour of its abolition. What, after all, is the position of an English State Governor in Australia today? He is no more and no less than a "rubberstamp." We have a Governor-General in Australia and six State Governors. While there is something to be said in favour of the retention of a representative of the English Crown in the Commonwealth Executive—a matter for the discussion of which there it not space in the present article—it is absurd to suggest that the merely nominal duties fulfilled by the several State Governors could not be adequately performed by, say, the respective State Chief Justices.

The internal administration. Indeed, of the various State Governments, is "top heavy," and it will not be long before the movement for Unification, which has especially since the war— more and more agitated the minds of thoughtful Australians, takes definite shape. The proposal of the Queensland Government is not the first movement in that direction. It has been preceeded, so lately as June 11, by a resolution, "carried on the voices," at the annual conference of the New South Wales branch of the Australian Labout Party at Sydney that the abolition of the office of State Governor should be a new plank in the A. L. P's platform. But whatever the movement portends for Australia, it need cause no concern to Englishmen, fully seized of the real motives that lie behind it—and one of these motives is certainly not a desire, except in the minds of a few extremists, to "cut the painter."

ENEMY LANGUAGE PAPERS IMPOSSIBLE

ORDERS IN COUNCIL STILL ENFORCED AGAINST OBJECTIONABLE LITERATURE.

Since the institution of censorship at the opening of the war, all literature circulating in Canada has been kept under supervision and the Postal, Customs, Military and Police Departments have co-operated with the Censorship to prevent the circulation in Canada of foreign language literature of an objectionable character.

The Orders in Council at present in force make it impossible for newspapers to be printed in the German, Bulgarian or Turkish languages unless by special license of the Secretary of State, in which case there would have to be parallel columns in English of the exact matter. No enemy language publication, unless it be of a purely literary, scientific, religious or artistic character and no free from objectionable matter can be printed, in or imported into Canada. Further no publications in languages other than English and French can be circulated in Canada without the prompt delivery of a true copy thereof to the Chief Press Censor, Ottawa. Such copies are circulated and carefully read with a view of determining their character and during the last session of Parliament very drastic amendments to the Criminal Code were passed by Parliament prescribing imprisonment and heavy penalties to those who printed or circulated matters of a seditious character. The Chief Press Censor has been in daily communication with the Postal, Customs and Police authorities with a view to enforcing the Censorship laws. Samples of foreign language literature have continually passed through the Customs Houses in Canada and have been forwarded to the Chief Press Censor for scrutiny and a large number of publications have been placed under ban and are still under ban.

A certain amount of literature is brought to Canada in bulk by express; the Secretary of the Express Traffic Association is always notified of any changes and rulings in respect to literature of the type referred to.

The Consolidated Orders respecting Censorship assented to on May 22nd, 1918, provide that leaflets or pamphlets relating to the war or to the making of peace are required to have printed thereon the true name and address of the author and of the printer thereof. Newspapers and books require to print the names of the publishers, or the editors or authors in order to comply with the regulations of the Post Office Services in Canada.

NOTICE.

Mr. E. V. Ayres of the Bank of Toronto, who has been acting manager in the absence of Mr. H. F. McNichol returned to Toronto on Wednesday.

Havelock celebrated its Civic Holiday on Tuesday, Sept. 16, the feature of the day being a big programme of sports in the local park, under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. and A. F. & A. M. There was a large attendance, not only from Havelock and surrounding community, but from many of the towns and villages of the district as well, and a splendid bill of sports kept the crowd interested throughout the afternoon. In addition to a big bill of smaller contests which were runn off, all of which were keenly contested, a lacrosse match between Tweed and Havelock and a baseball match between Wellington's of Toronto and an all-star Trent Valley team, provided excellent entertainment. In the lacrosse game, which was fast throughout and evenly contested, Havelock carried off the honours of a 3-0 score. The all star Trent Valley aggregation composed largely of Havelock players kept the Toronto nine working hard in the early stages of the game but weakened towards the end, allowing the Queen City to carry home the bacon by a 14-4 score. In a quarter mile foot race for baseball and lacrosse players, Robert Elliott, of Tweed, went over the tape first fith Gordon Burgess and L. Pacey, of Havelock, following in close order. The Rebecca and Eeastern Stars (local chapters) conducted booths on the ground while the Havelock band played during the afternoon.

In the evening a moving picture show was held in the Town Hall, followed by a dance which was largely attended and much enjoyed.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paget, Trent River Road, on Tuesday afternoon, when their only daughter Zillah, was united in marriage to Mr. Roy Burgess, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Burgess, Belmont. The happy young couple left on the afternoon train for a honeymoon tour to the United States.

An interesting baseball game took place at the local park on Friday afternoon last. The contesting teams being Havelock and Smith Falls. The game was keenly contested throughout. The visitors carried off the honors.

A box social and dance was held at the pavilion, Trent River, on Tuesday evening under the auspices of the Trent River Association.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Siberty of Trent River are on a visit to Toronto.

Mrs. W. A. Deremo, of London, Ont., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Mrs. J. W. Bryans.

Mr. W. J. Bryans editor of the Retail Grocer, Toronto, is spending a week's holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bryans.

BULGARIAN DELEGATES HANDED TERMS OF PEACE WITH ENTENTE

Treaty Delayed by Negotiations With Germany--Disposition of Thrace Question Now.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 19 — The treaty of peace between allied and associated powers and Bulgaria, was presented to the Bulgarian mission this morning at 10:40 o'clock. After the delegates had assembled, Clemenceau, President of the Peace Conference, spoke briefly. He was followed by General Thodoroff, head of the Bulgarian mission.

Marked by Delays.

Many delays have marked consideration of the Bulgarian treaty Work onthe pact was begun May 26, but negotiations with Germany and Austria prevented the peace conference from completing the convention until late last week.

Disposition of Thrace

The disposition of Thrace was a subject on which the Peace Conference was forced to spend most of its time in preparation of the treaty As it develops, this question has not been finally adjusted, but Thrace is to be separated from Bulgarian territory and left under the supervision of the principal allied and associated powers, which will later announce their decision as to the future status of the country.

People Not Responsible

Theodoroff spoke for 15 minutes, pleading that the Bulgarian people were not responsible for the war, but that the Bulgarian Government had thrown the country into the struggle. He realized, however, that the people must share the responsibility.

"They are willing to do so," he said, "but feel that in no way have they committed such a crime as will compel them to accept servitude."

All 27 Governments participating in the conference, including Roumania, were presented.

Twenty-five days are allowed Bulgaria to present observations on the treaty terms.

The ceremony ended at 11 o'clock.

PREFERENCE FOR CANADIAN GOODS

URGED BY PETERBOROUGH BRANCH OF COUNCIL OF WOMEN

The Local Council of Women held their first meeting of the season in the Y. W. C. A. Thursday.

Mrs. Stevenson occupied the chair.

Much sympathy was expressed for the president, Mrs. Robert Harstone, who was unable to be present owing to illness in her family.

International Council

A communication was received announcing a conference to be held in London, England, preliminary to a meeting of the International Council, the first to be held since the outbreak of the war.

The members of the Local Council were urged to subscribe for the "Woman's Century," the official organ of the C. of W., which is "so good that no member can afford to be without it."

Buy Home Goods.

At the last meeting of the National Council at Winnipeg a resolution was received from the Peterborough, and spoken to by Mrs. R. F. McWilliams, to the effect that in buying, preference be given to articles made in Canada; that a committee be appointed to meet with a committee of manufacturers to discuss with them improvements in the quality and prices of "made in Canada" goods. This resolution led to an interesting discussion, was endorsed and a committee appointed.

Peterborough Memorial.

On invitation of the City Council a committee of three was appointed to confer with them on the subject of a suitable memorial to Peterborough's heroic dead.

The ladies were unanimous in the opinion that, through misuse, the word "memorial" is losing much of its suggestiveness, and regretted its use in connection with the new public school shortly to be erected.

On motion of Dr. Birnie the Council placed itself on record as strongly in favor of prohibition, and the members were urged to vote "No" to each of the questions on the Referendum ballot.

REVISED PARTY WHITE LEADER?

Ottawa, Sept. 19. — The Citizen contains a significant article this morning foreshadowing the early return of Sir Robert Borden as leader of the Unionist party, which, however, will not likely more than outlast this session. It is the general impression the next election may be fought by a revised Conservative party, with White as leader.

BOILER BLOWS UP FOUR MEN MISSING

FATAL EXPLOSION ON ITALIAN BARKETINE OFF MOBILE FLORIDA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pensacola, Fla., Sept. 19. — The "City of Biloxi," an Italian barkentine, blew up 23 miles off Mobile Bar yesterday, according to survivors brought here last night.

Trouble in Engine Room.

The explosion occurred in the engine room, and four men who had been on shore leave and who were coming alongside the ship at the time of the explosion, are missing.

GRATUITY FOR THE MEN WHO SERVED IN FRANCE

Such is Resolution Adopted by 3rd. Battalion Association.

After a heated debate last night the 3rd. Battalion Association adopted a resolution in favor of $2,000 or its equivalent to be paid to returned men who had spent the full period of the war in France, or who were only prevented from so doing by reason of disability contracted there, and that all other gratuities be paid on this basis. An amendment moved by J. J. Shanahan, and seconded by Major H. Alley, against the indiscriminate payment of gratuities and in favor of increased pensions, insurance for returned men, extension of the vocational training system, and of the Bureau of Re-establishment, to give financial aid to men to build up their own businesses, was voted down

The following officers were elected: President Chas. Fox; first vice-president, A. B. Blake-Foster; second vice-president, W. A. McMaster; secretary-treasurer, J. H. Jennings; executive committee, W. Williams, H. Alley, E. H. Lewis, B. L. Johnston and W. Tetlow.

PROFIT ON TWO MILLION POUNDS OF PORK WAS $169,000 TO SWIFT COMPANY

J. H. Tapley, Firm's Manager, Declares Average Profit Less Than One Cent a Pound--Seeming Discrepancy in Accounts Due to Difference in System of Accounting

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 19. — The accounting system of the Swift Canadian Company came under considerable fire at the session of the Board of Commerce food investigation owing to a double set of entries in the filed statements of the firm. Under the "old system," entry, one column showed a profit of $169,225 03 on total sales of pork, while in another column, headed, "New system," the same sales were credited with a profit of only $26,413.

J. H Tapley, manager, of the company, on the witness stand, declared that this seeming discrepancy was simply a difference in system of accounting. Under the old system of profit entries, no allowance had been made for dividends which were placed at 8 1-2 per cent. Under the new system the dividend of 8 1-2 per cent had to be deducted first because profits were placed on the books.

H. W Whitla, K.C.: "It is a most startling fact that the hog section is far and away the most profitable of all your departments!"

Mr Tapley said the profit per hundredweight is 82 cents—or less than a cent a pound, and that is below the profits allowed by regulation The total net profit of the Swift Canadian concern here, based on capital investment, was 4.94 per cent., or a little under 5 per cent. for the year, he said. Total profits were 61 1-2 cents to every hundred pounds, covering all products, or less than 5-8 cent per pound, witness declared.

Sales to the value of $4,896,000 had been made during the 43 weeks covered by statements filed. This showed a net profit of $169,225.03 and represented over 2,000,000 pounds of pork.

TO INVESTIGATE ALL FOOD PRICES

POLICE WILL LOOK INTO CONDITIONS IN RESTAURANTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—Two important announcements were made today by W F O'Connor, vice-chairman of the Canadian Board of Commerce.

Local Police Help.

The first is that the prices of all food stuffs in restaurants will be the subject of investigation. For this purpose the services of the local police and special officers will be enlisted.

No Milk Increase.

The other is that an order passed in Toronto prohibiting an increase in the price of milk for forty days is effective throughout the whole province.

TO ASSSUME PLACE VACATED BY FOE

LONDON UNDERWRITERS SURVEYING REINSURANCE FIELD IN UNITED STATES

New York, Sept. 19 — English reinsurance companies are surveying the American market with a view to assuming the place vacated by the German companies liquidated by the Enemy Alien Custodian. Representatives of leading London reinsurance interests are either already in this country, or on their way here for the purpose of arranging to take over the reinsurance business.

Americans have shown little aptitude for the business, and investors have never been partial to insurance stocks. Some of the largest individual fortunes in the country have been made out of insurance during the last few years, and the well managed insurance companies without exception pay heavy returns to their stockholders. The disinclination of the average investor to enter the insurance business is perhaps traceable to the fact that next to gold mines there have been few ventures that have defrauded stockholders as much as fraudulent insurance.

England thinks more of insurance. The premiums collected, form one of the veiled sources of income which have enabled the empire to go one in the face of apparent unfavorable conditions. The British Government is a keen supporter of insurance abroad, as it approves of every activity that insures an income from service. The English have little enough goods to export, and they can live only when they are enabled to perform services for the rest of the world in return for goods

Before the war England confined her insurance operations to direct writing companies. She had a better income from investments and was satisfied to do business direct. Germany saw the neglected opportunity and developed it. She became the leader of the reinsurance business and developed it to a marked extent. If reports put out during the war are to be credited, Germany used her reinsurance connections for espionage purposes, and it was charged that during peace times she used these connections for commercial espionage. The objections raised to the rehabilitation of the German insurance companies have been based on the assumption that these activities would be resumed. Except in the case of Germans, on objection has been raised to foreign reinsurance companies on the ground of fear of commercial espionage.

STATES REPORTED BY SCHWAB ON EVE OF INDUSTRIAL BOOM

Pessimistic Few Months Ago, But Now Filled With Optimism.

Pittsburg, Sept. 19— Charles M. Schwab, in an interview here, stated that the turn of the industrial and financial tide in this country had convinced him the nation is on the way toward a big boom.

"I was quite a pessimist," he said "a few months ago, but the turn of the industrial and financial tide has converted me to the other way of thinking."

"For some time I have been pessimistic as to business conditions throughout the world," he added, "and especially in the United States but now I share the opinion of those who have said that we are on the threshold of the greatest era of prosperity in our history. There is at best only a narrow line dividing good times from bad, and despite the evil effect of the war, with its heavy check to the world's production, conditions in America are shaped so that it needs only a degree of cool preseverance and steadiness to transform bad into good to bring about complete restoration of commercial confidence and inspire expansion instead of continued contraction.

"We in America have made remarkable progress industrially and financially, since the signing of the armistice. We have given a most interesting exhibition of our recuperative powers. It takes a situation such as we have just passed through to awaken us to our actual resourcefulness.

"Just as soon as the international credit system is readjusted, the American financial and industrial world will make more pronounced progress and march right into this era of prosperity, which such men as Judge Gary and H. C. Frick have heretofore predicted. I share their opinion in the whole."

COL. CHIPMAN DEAD

Widely Known in Lawn Bowling Circles in Canada.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—Col. John D. Chipman, vice-president of the insurance firm of Scott and Walmsley, widely known in curling and lawn bowling circles, died here early this morning, aged 63.

WILL NOW SALVAGE $2,500,000 IN GOLD

BRITISH RECOVERING BULLION STORES ON TORPEDOED LAURENTIC

Londonderry, Sept. 19.—About $2,500,000 has been recovered of the $35,000,000 specie and bullion which the liner Laurentic was carrying when she was mined in January of 1917 on her way to America. The Laurentic lies a wreck four miles off the entrance to Lough Swilly.

Of the money and bullion recovered, about half was salvaged one year ago before operations had to be suspended owing to German submarine activity.

The work of recovery now resumed is extremely difficult. The wreck lies twenty fathoms (120 feet) down and at this depth divers can work only half an hour at a time. Even then they require to be suspended three-fourths of an hour nearer the surface in order that the shock of taking off their helmets after the prolonged pressure may not be too great.

The general view on board the Admiralty steamer Racer, from which the divers work, is that all the bullion will not be recovered before the next two or three years, seeing that not only is fine weather necessary but that no diving is possible at 20 fathoms when the temperature falls below a certain point. Work will shortly have to cease for the present season, but the wreck will be carefully buoyed.

TRAGIC DEATH AT PORT HPOE

FARM HAND FOUND IN AN AUTO IN DYING CONDITION

Port Hope, Sept. 19— When Mr Byers of Peterboro' stepped into his automobile at the Town Hall here at an early hour this morning after a dance he was startled to find a man cuddled up in the back seat and covered with rugs. Being unable to rouse him he came to the conclusion that he was drunk, and lifted him out on the lawn. The caretaker of the Town Hall was called, when it was found that the man was in a dying condition

Toronto, Sept. 19.—The late Rev. John Sommerville, D.D., treasurer of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, in his will submitted yesterday in the Surrogate Court for probate, bequeathed his entire estate, valued at $11,573, to his widow, Mrs. Martha G. Sommerville.

Guests at the dance hurried to Mr. Byers' assistance, and he was carried into the Town Hall, but death occurred before he reached the building.

The man had been identified as Herbert Rawlingson, and was employed as a farm hand by Mr. Charles Beighton, a few miles west of this town. The cause of the death is unknown. A post-mortem examination was held this afternoon, and the stomach has been sent to Toronto for analysis. Deceased was twenty-three years of age, and had no relatives in this country.

ELECTORAL PLAN CAUSE OF UNREST

INVESTIGATE MERITS OF PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION AT ONCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—The Industrial Conference committee on proportional representation, through Sir John Willison, chairman, today presented a resolution setting forth that as the Royal Commission on Industrial Relations had classed imperfections of the present electoral system among the causes of unrest, this conference welcomes the declaration by the Prime Minister that speakers at the conference will be called on to investigate the merits of proportional representation, and urges that such action be taken without delay.

SIEGE STATE IN MOSCOW

Proclaimed by Soviet Owing to Operations of Cossacks

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Helsingfors, Sept. 19.—The Pravda of Petrograd published a soviet government proclamation declaring a state of siege in Moscow, in consequence of the operations of the Cossack general Manontoff's cavalry near the Red army.

EX-EMPEROR AND METHODS OF WAR

REPRODUCTION OF TELEGRAM TO PRESIDENT WILSON BEFORE ENQUIRY

It has been ascertained, says Reuter, that the telegram dispatched by the ex-kaiser to President Wilson on Sept. 8, 1914, complaining "that the Belgian government was opposing and waging war against the German troops in occupation of the country," was sent before the kaiser had taken the trouble to verify the facts.

A document has been discovered among the German papers left behind in Belgium, which shows that an inquiry into the truth of these allegations was not begun until Sept. 9. The document, dated Sept. 9, is addressed to the governor-general in Belgium, and also to the commanders of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd armies, and is as follows:

The Belgian government having protested against the methods of warfare practised by us in Belgium, it is necessary to secure without delay authoritative information, with which we can counteract this protest. The Ministry of War, therefore, requests you to proceed at once with a judicial inquiry into the following points:

1. Have any instances occurred in which our troops, having been peacefully received, have been, by day or by night, traitorously attacked?

2. Can it be proved that the Belgian government have provided the civil population with arms, either once or on repeated occasions?

3. Details of cases of cruelty by the civil population to isolated Germans or to wounded.

4. An account of the facts which formed the motive for the punishment of Louvain.

One reply, from the station of Lauden, which was found annexed to the document, was as follows:

"With reference to the enclosed form, no facts have come to the knowledge of the Landen station which could be used to counteract the reproach of the Belgian government as to the methods of warfare practised by us in Belgium."—"Signed) Sprengler.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED HOMES ARE CRUSHED AND WRECKED BY WAVE

Twenty Three Blocks in Corpus Christie Destroyed—Oil Covers Everything

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Corpus Christi, Texas, Sept. 19.—Through the storm swept area of Corpus Christi are wide stretches of sand and shell where last Saturday stood homes that had made this city of eighteen thousand a resort of national repute. Fifteen hundred homes stretching along the beach for twenty-three blocks were crushed and hurled away or wrecked by the tidal wave which reached a depth of fifteen feet in some places.

Appalling Destruction.

From Star street, where the business section of the beach terminated, to Dan Reid street, every one of nine hundred beach homes has been destroyed, most of them beyond trace, while here and there a palm tree hanging low with its oil-besmirched leaves marks the spot of some former show place.

Oil Coats Everything.

Oil from shattered tanks at Port Arkansas coats everything; even to pelicans along the beach, which are so burdened with oil that they cannot fly.

PROVINCIAL SYNOD ON PROHIBITION

RETURN TO OLD LICENSE ORDER WOULD BE A CALAMITY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—The Provincial Synod of the Church of England at its closing session last night discussed prohibition.

Would Be Calamity.

An amended report on prohibition concluded with the words, "It would be a calamity to restore the old order which existed before the passing of the Ontario Temperance Act." The delegates generally agreed with the report, but did not go on record as adopting the report, nor has any resolution been passed in its connection.

FIRST TO SURRENDER.

Stockholm, Sept. 19.—A bolsheviki communication received here from Petrograd says a son of Gregory Rasputin, the reputed Russian mystic, who was killed late in 1916, was among the first to surrender when the bolsheviki captured Pemkrovskma.

PLENTY OF EMPLOYMENT FOR ALL UNSKILLED LABOUR

100 Labourers Could be Given Work by Peterborough Labour Bureau—Partially Disabled Soldiers a Problem.

The labor conditions now, according to the Government public employment bureau, are not as serious as people appear to imagine. The local branch could at the present time give employment to upwards of one hundred unskilled laborers, if these could be obtained.

In the case of skilled labor, it appears that the demand can be met easily, and probably a few of these are out of work. If these could adapt themselves to unskilled labor for the time being the situation would be altogether cleared up. Unskilled labor is wanted on the bridge and by several manufacturing companies, and appeals are continually coming from the lumber camps for more men. If any one really desires work it can easily be obtained for him at the labor bureau.

According to reports from Toronto the supplying of employment for returned men is a very difficult and serious matter. The partially disabled particularly are hard to place. This will undoubtedly be a serious problem for some time, but it is comforting to know that at least work can be supplied for those in good health who are willing to work at unskilled labor.

OTTAWA V. McGILL.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—The Ottawa football club has invited the McGill team to play an exhibition game here on Oct. 13, Thanksgiving Day.

BACK TO OLD TIME.

Deseronto, Sept. 19.—Deseronto will advance all clocks one hour at midnight on Sunday, September 21. Thus ends daylight saving in this town for this year.

By the terms of an agreement between the French and Polish governments Poland will send to France 100,000 workers to be employed in the liberated regions.

According to despatches from Minsk the Poles have succeeded in cutting railroad communication between Kiev and Petrograd.

London is to get $150,000 from the Carnegie Foundation for a new public library.

BRITISH EVACUATING ARCHANGEL AS SMOOTHLY AS COULD BE EXPECTED

Many Difficulties Increased by Fact of Thousands of Civilians Awaiting Removal.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Archangel, Tuesday.—The evacuation of the Archangel front by the British is proceeding as smoothly as could be expected, in view of the formidable difficulties attending the operation.

Many Difficulties.

These difficulties have been enormously increased also by the fact that, in addition to soldiers, thousands of civilians are being removed.

Small Raids.

Small raids against the Bolsheviki are being continued for the purpose of screening the movements of the troops and keeping the soviet forces guessing. A number of British troops are now here ready to embark and the men are in high spirits at the prospect of returning home.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

FRIDAY, SEPT. 19, 1919

WOULD BRITAIN OBJECT?

SHOULD THE SENATE majority and the President agree—as, indeed, they must—on a moderate and adequate program of reservations and interpretative declarations respecting the Covenant of the League of Nations, would England, France, or Italy, or any one of these nations, raise serious objections, enter into protracted diplomatic discussions, and thereby indefinitely delay the return of the peace for which the world is longing? asks the Chicago Daily News.

President Wilson, in his speeches on the treaty, has asserted that there is a high probability, if not a certainty, of trouble and vexatious delays in the event of any sort of reservations being attached to the Covenant by the Senate. On this important phase of the present controversy between the Executive and the Senate majority, Mr. Bell, staff correspondent of the Daily News in London, has thrown light in a recent interesting cable.

Mr. Bell found a natural reluctance on the part of British officials to discuss the reservations issue. The exact meaning and implications of the four reservations recommended by the Senate committee on foreign relations, are, perhaps, not quite clear to London, though the text of the reservations was shown by Mr. Bell to those interviewed by him. However, there is no evidence in British diplomatic circles of hostility to or undue suspicion of the proposed reservations, while among the London advocates of a League of Nations it is conceded that there is nothing in the reservations to weaken the essential features of the Covenant.

Mr. Bell was assured by a prominent British supporter of the League that even the reservation affecting the famous Article 10, which provides for an economic boycott and even war as a means of checking territorial aggression, contains nothing that is not already well understood, since the American constitution places in Congress alone the authority to declare war.

There is no reason whatever to suppose that sentiment in Paris or Rome is different, or likely to be different, after due discussion, from the sentiment revealed to Mr. Bell in London. The general desire and anxiety to have America in the League are such that reasonable reservations, couched in proper language and offered in good faith, for the purpose of safeguarding the sovereignty of the United States and preventing future misunderstanding and friction, will not be captiously or gratuitously opposed.

If, then, the Senate and the Executive will thrust aside irrelevant issues and get together on essential reservations, the Allied Governments and the intelligent public opinion back of them may be confidently expected to acquiesce in America's decision and to welcome this country into the League on America's own fair and proper terms.

FALL PLOWING IN THE ORCHARD.

AFTER THE APPLES are harvested there is generally a slack time, when orchard plowing can be done to advantage. Experience has indicated that shallow plowing is advisable in orchard practice and that it is unwise to go deeper than five or six inches, and that the area close to the base of the tree should not be plowed deeper than three to four inches. There is, as a rule, little cultivation after the first of July, and from that time on, even if cover crops are not grown, a natural growth of some sort will have been made. This growth, when turned under, affords practically as good mulch as if left on the surface, and the fact that the ground has been loosened up tends to prevent as deep freezing as if left compact, for the more compact the soil the deeper will frost penetrate it. Where root killing of trees is liable to occur, it may be wise to leave the cover crop mulch undisturbed as it assists materially in holding snow, and as a result will give a better cover than if plowed in the Fall. Other than this there does not appear to be any disadvantage in Fall plowing as to possible winter injury from root killing. The great advantage is that a certain amount of work is out of the way for next Spring, and should the Spring be unfavorable for working land, the discing may be delayed much longer than it would be wise to delay plowing. Early orchard cultivation is of prime importance, and, as it is usually necessary to plow once to work under accumulated vegetation, this should as far as possible be done in the Fall, thus facilitating early Spring work and hastening bacterial activity the next Spring.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION.

THE WORD "brotherhood" enters largely today into the deliberations of conferences for the weal of many united interests—church, labor, fraternal—but its application internationaly must be forthcoming before we see the dawn of that better day for the world at large for which the Allies fought. Despotism in Germany has been destroyed by democracy, but democracy, which means in the abstract freedom of thought, freedom to the one's individual power, must broaden out as between nation and nation, before the real ideal of world freedom is reached. This is the objective of a League of Nations, or it should be; but unless there is a spirit of co-operation which will consult the individual interests of all nations united in that League, both internally and externally, and a principle of give and take put into active operation, the outlook for some European nations is far from bright. Writing on this subject, Sir George Parish says:

If the war has taught the world anything it has taught it the folly and danger of trying to be self-contained. The Entente nations won the war because they were able to draw upon the productions of the whole world outside of the enemy countries, and the Central Powers lost the war because they imagined they were self-contained and were not.

In his survey of the economic nad financial position of Great Britain, the Prime Minister appealed to other nations to assist in the work before us. He said:

"There is one thing that matters in economy, and it is this, that the great nations that promoted the League of Nations should show their confidence in it and trust it. If those who promoted it increased their armaments it would be a sham and would remain a sham. It will be a scrap of paper. Those who believe in it must trust it most. That is the fundamental first condition of real economy in armaments in the world. Britain is ready. Let all other nations do likewise."

The soundness of this advice and of this policy will be universally admitted. The difficulties of the present situation arise mainly from the unwillingness of the nations to pass from the old order into the new. It is idle for any one nation to appeal to other nations to reduce their armaments if in other matters the appellant nation is itself endeavoring to maintain a policy of isolation and of pure self-interest. A real League of Nations can only be brought into being when the world accepts the principles which alone can make the League an actuality. It is clear that the world cannot overcome even its present danger without co-operation. It is, however, of great moment that the principle of co-operation should be applied not merely to one phase of the problem that has to be solved—the question of reducing the world's great expenditure on armaments—but that it should be applied to all sides of the problem. Of what good would it be to reduce expenditures on armaments unless the labor displaced is applied to the expansion of production?

It is useless for the United States to produce vast quantities of food if the European nations have no means of paying for them. And, again, it is useless for the European nations to produce great quantities of cotton and wollen clothing, machinery, and other manufactured goods, if they are unable to dispose of their wares in exchange for the food and material they need. At the present moment, however, the nations are acting in a manner that indicates that not only are they not imbued by the principles which can alone make a League of Nations successful, but in a manner which must effectualy destroy any League of Nations; indeed, which will result in the destruction of a large part of the human race. One of the most essential of the steps demanded by the present position is a great expansion in the supply of food and raw material, and yet the countries which are most capable of expanding their productions of these essentials are erecting barriers against such expansion. In the United States there is much discussion concerning a measure to prohibit immigration for a number of years, and the announcement is made that the Uruguayan government is summoning a conference of the South American powers to discuss the same object. If there are restrictions upon the imports of manufactures to pay for food and raw materials, then it is obvious there will be a greater desire to emigrate on the part of the peoples of Europe. If the new countries will neither have foreign goods nor foreign people, then the people of Europe will either have to die or to insist upon the new countries, containing so little population in proportion to their circ receiving immigrants. That way lies destruction by war or by famine. All this would be changed by a policy of co-operation.

THE LABOR SITUATION.

A WEEK OR TWO AGO complaint was made in the City Council that men not resident in the city are employed on the new Hunter street bridge, specifying in particular some who, living in an adjoining township drove in to and out home again from their work, while citizens could not get employment. Council consequently passed a resolution that all men employed on the bridge must regitser their place of residence, and how long in the city, if not actually citizens, and this with a view to assuring preference for Peterborough men. But it now appears that there are not enough citizens desiring that preference, for work there is at the bridge for quite a few, and no comers, although the contractors have advertised their need of help. Union wages are paid on this work for an eight-hour day, and it is a source of congratulation that Peterborough has recovered from its period of after-war depression to the extent that the labor demand is greater than the supply.

At least, this is the only construction that can be put on the situation, should the Russell-Townsend Company still advertise in vain for home labor, in which event no complaint will surely be forthcoming if they look abroad for the help unobtainable in the city.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

TEACHERS IN FRANCE.

(The Public, New York.)

There is a great agitation in France at this moment among professors and teachers. The Chamber of Deputies has been called upon to discuss increases in salaries of all professors and teachers, which have not been changed since about 1853.

WHAT EVERY TOWN HAS.

(Kansas City Star.)

"No town is so small," says E. E. Kelley, of Toronto, Kansas, "but that it has a knocker, a tightwad, a gossip—male and female—a leading citizen, a man who gives generously, a man who takes the lead in boasting, a barber equal to the city kind, a beautiful girl, an old maid who would have made the right kind of a man a good wife, a tough boy, more widows than widowers, at least two boys who are known as 'good sports,' and a girl that does such a good job of canning that she is frequently without a beau."

NOT SAYIN' NUTHIN'.

(New York oWrld.)

It will be observed that these senators who are so keen about the Irish and the Exyptians and the Letts and the Ukrainians and all the rest of the so-called oppressed nationalities that failed to obtain the self-determination that they demanded at Paris, are saying nothing about the Filipinos, who are clamoring for independence, but are obtaining no satisfaction from Congress. Ther are to be no hearings for the Haytians and the Santo Domingans who are ruled by the American marines, or for Nicaraguans who object to the rule of American bayonets, or the Cubans who complain about the overlordship of the United States. There are no provisions for the negroes who are our own subject race and who are openly denied their constitutional guarantees in many states, where they are not only deprived of the vote that is assured them by the fifteenth amendment, but are also deprived of due process of law when charged with crime.

Why Bees Know Colors.

Interesting experiments have shown that bees distinguish different colors, but different colors acquire significance for bees when the insects have learned that certain colors are associated with certain nutritive advantages. The bees are not "reflex machines"—they are not compelled by any organic chromotoplasm to prefer certain colors to others. They accumulate experience, and remember that certain colors are associated with certain nutritive benefits. —Family Herald.

Flexible tips feature new umbrella ribs which their inventor claims will prevent an umbrella being blown inside out.

Piston Rings.

Piston rings, of which millions are used yearly, are shaped by centrifugal action from molten metal in the special machine of DeLavaud. In tests at Columbia university, it has been shown that these rings are not only made faster than by other methods, but are actually stronger and more resilient than rings of the same chemical composition cast in sand. The miscroscope reveals a more uniform and finer structure.

Economic Army Rations.

How the Mongols, like the Italians, put up an army fat for their forces in sausage casing, but go them two better in also utilising the strong bamboo fiber tissue paper and thin sheets of dried liver as containers, Mr. Lodian describes as follows: "The liver is cut into thin sheets and wrapped around the fat. In drying, like the Italian cheese covering, it contracts, and keeps its contents airtight. The whole thing is edible, liver having some food value, the membrane none."

Timely Warning.

A sturdy tramp went into a suburban garden where the lady of the house was occupied in attending to her flowers. He took no notice of her refusal to give him some coppers, but continued to annoy her until a large dog appeared, barking loudly. The lady seized his collar and held it, calling out: "You had better go; it may bite." "You ain't got no right to keep a savage dorg," replied the tramp. "Perhaps I have not," she answered coolly. "If you think so, I won't keep him. I'll let him go!"

HOME-MADE BREAD

Home bread-making reduces the high cost of living by lessening the amount of expensive meats required to supply the necessary nourishment to the body. The increased nutritious value of bread made in the home with should be sufficient incentive to the thoughtful housewife to give this important food item the attention to which it is justly entitled. Bread made with Royal Yeast will keep fresh and moist longer than that made with any other.

ROYAL YEAST CAKES

DANGER OF MATERIALISM

At the opening of the International Conference of Labour and Religion in London, England, in the course of his opening address, Mr. Barnes said that never in the whole history of the world has there been such a striking illustration of the dangers of materialism as during the past few years. For many years nations had been building up armies. They had thought in terms of disciplined material forces. The Central Empires especially had embarked on a career of materialism pure and simple and hoped thereby to carve out their way to greater dominion. Behind the glitter and show of modern civilization there had lusked the hideous thing called militarism, which knows nothing and cares as little for right or wrong. The result was to plunge the world into a bath of blood and to bring it to the verge of bankruptcy.

Even organized religion itself had to some extent become but an echo of individualistic teaching, for emphasis was laid on conventional personal rectitude, and but little attention was given to social justice. The churches had lost their power, or how else could they have tolerated a condition of things which was obviously leading to catastrophe. He was not laying blame on any particular country or creed. They were all more or less the victims of a poisoned atmosphere. And so evil was allowed to bud and flourish, and come to fruition in the world war.

After referring to the evils of profiteering, Mr. Barnes went on to speak of a new and more menacing danger. They were now becoming accustomed to a struggle of organizations, which was worse than that of individuals, because the anti-social result would be more far-reaching and terrible. It was an age of organizism. If organization be lop-sided and governed only by materialistic and sectional considerations then rival organizations could get a stranglehold on the community, and everyone would suffer, including the members of such organization.

Organizations were getting under control of those who had little idea of reciprocal service—some of them on the labor side were to some extent coming under the control of those who wanted to pull down the pillars of the State in the hope that something might arise from the ruin more to their liking. Those were the evils or dangers of materialism in the mass; they poisoned the springs of social life, they kept classes apart, and in some degree they had brought revolution by violence.

Some of the working-class spokesmen had become imbued with the materialistic doctrine with dire effect on the simple-minded workman. The happiest time of his life was, he believed, in the workshop, and his greatest satisfaction in a job well done. He knew there was something wrong in the scheme of things, but he never believed that a materialistic doctrine of rancour and ill-will would put things right. But that is just what was believed by an increasing number. He was not blaming them, and spoke of their drawbacks and isolation.

Yet he believed at the bottom of it all there was a feeling on the part of most workmen that there was something in life which wealth could not give, and that eating and drinking was not the end of all things. They were right—life was a complex thing, which onte began with eating and drinking. Man was not a beast of prey. True, he wanted his fill, but after that he wanted companionship and cooperation, and the satisfaction of that subtle, intangible, varied something which was in everyone, and which ought to be the best part of them in order to get he must give. An an old Scottish proverb had it: "If you want to bask freen' you maun be friendly." For himself whatever the economic system might be, he wanted to live with those of tolerance, good will, and simplicity. In this connection he paid a warm tribute to General Botha.

It was because of the lack of understanding between classes, because they lived and worked too much in watertight compartments and thought too much of their own projects and too little of the unseen forces, which, in spite of everything, would still rule the world in the long run. That was especially true of labor. Many thought of the labor question in terms of bread and butter, as a wage and stomach question. It was nothing of the kind. It was an educational question a religious question—a question of man's proper place as man, and not only as wage-earner. Workmen in the mass wanted to take their place in the community as equal with other people. There was an ardent desire on the part of the working classes for respect and recoginition and for greater actual and social equality. They wanted to be regarded as sentient human beings, to share in the benefits of knowledge and education, and in a fulled understanding of those high and lofty problems of the human soul which, despite the universal pursuit of wealth and externals, rise up before humanity today and presented old giddies in new forms. Materialism could give them none of those things. Because of that they believed that all lovers of their kind must combat the materialistic conception of belief.

Einar Li (Norway) and the Rev. H. T. Knight, also took part in the discussion, on the "perils to the workers from materialism."

Afternoon conditions, and the telephone, No. 3

Improved Conditions—Better Service

TELEPHONE service, like other public services, undoubtedly suffered through the war.

From our staff of skilled telephone workers, 846 went overseas. Many highly efficient operators sought temporary positions in munitions plants. Telephone material became almost unobtainable.

Abnormal conditions are now passing. More than five hundred of our men are back from the front. In most places the supply of competent operators is normal.

There is now the task of restoring the proper margin of reserve plant and of overtaking arrears in repair and maintenance work. The moving season is always difficult. At some exchanges an avalanche of orders for moves comes in—over 13,300 this year at one exchange alone, which meant somewhat of a set-back in getting our plant back to normal.

But the work is progressing. Our plans involve an outlay for the year on extensions and replacements of over $7,000,000. We are giving intensive training in our operators' schools to scores of young women to prepare them for central office positions.

Skilled workers, adequate equipment, a resolve to do the best work possible while realizing that we are all servants of the public—these are the factors which we hope will result in the maintenance of the pre-war standard of telephone service.

And we ask the co-operation of all telephone users.

Many a "Movie Plot" in London Want Ads.

Americans, and particularly the thousands of doughboys who are trading through England on their way home, are getting more than a few smiles from what is regarded as a typically British institution in connection with newspaper advertising—the "agony column," of the London Times.

"Now, I ask you," said a former agency man, as he pointed to the personal column of the Thunderer, "where in the United States could you fdin such a bunch of apparently irrevelant and meaningless ads as appear right here?

"Take this one signed 'Darling' for example. It's adressed to 'Duckie' and reads: 'You promised you wouldn't. Can't stick B. Can I see you before I go?' On the face of it that sounds like the basis of a typical Chambers-triangle, with Darling at one apex, Duckie at another and B., who looks to be the goat, at the third. What did Duckie promise and what did Darling try to stick B. with? That, as a famous Englishman remarked a few centuries ago, is the question.

"But all the queer ads aren't confined to the agony column. J. Bellus Wallingford himself couldn't improve on an announcement that An income of a thousand pounds a year may be secured by an investment of 1200 pounds evidently the rate of interest is going up rapidly.

"Lady William Phipps, judging by her advertisement for 'a good single-handed cook' believes in helping along wounded soldiers while the shortage of houses in and around London is indicated by the fact that premiums of from 350 to 1000 pounds are offered for unexpired leases, over and above the rental for the premises.

"Another radical difference between the Times and American newspapers is the almost total absence of classified retail advertisements, except those for used motorcars and cast-off clothing, which recalls the classic announcement which appeared some months ago to the effect that "Mr. and Mrs. oJnes, at such and such an address, have cast-off clothing of all varieties and invite your immediate attention."

Negro "Mammy" Helps Sell Many Washers.

In company with the other parts of these United States, the acute shortage in washwomen and laundresses has hit Illinois extremely hard. The high wages paid for unskilled labor and the great demand for workers of all kinds have made it virtually impossible to secure help, even at $3 a day, to do the family wash.

So Beatty, the local hardware man had a bright idea.

"If laundresses are as scarce as feathertd fish," figured he, "there ought to be a big market for electric washers. I'll put in an order for some at once."

The order was placed and the goods delivered, but Beatty didn't stop there. No sooner had the first bach of machines arrived than he started to work to move 'em all out again, across the counter.

To acomplish this most effectually he took everything out of his largest window and installed therein the fattest negro washwoman in town, with nothing to do but sit in a rocking chair and grin while she watched an electric washer doing the work. In the afternoon she put the sheets and other linen through an electric wringer— and grinned some more.

Mandy—possibly that wasn't her name, but all negro mammies answer to "Mandy"—not only attracted a crowd that blocked traffic in front of the Beatty store all day long, but she succeeded in moving every one of the original shipment of washers and securing orders for as many more as Beatty could lay his hands on.

A Cigar Man's Plan to Keep Neat Isplay.

A Cincinnati cigar man was long troubled by the necesity of always taking the various boxes out of his showcase whenever he sold a cigar. As a result his boxes were always in a ragged condition, partly full, and they did not look neat.

He finally evolved a way to get around that. In the rear of his counters and showcases he had a shelf built, and on this shelf he placed a layout of cigar boxes exactly as in the showcase. Now when a customer leans on the case and ponits out a cigar he wants the cigar man hands him the box from the shelf behind the showcase and doesn't have to disturb the showcase display at all. The latter now always looks neat because it is never touched.

"Personal Service" a Fact in This Store.

According to the latest available statistics, Oklahoma City has something like 92,000 inhabitants, and Madansky Brothers sell an average of seventy-five cents worth of goods a year to everyone of them, or an annual to tal of $70,000 worth of business, which wouldn't be considered bad in a city a good many times as large at this one.

The reason for this high percentage, in the opinion of Edward M. Taylor, of Madansky Brothers' clothing department, is that the firm has worked out a system of personal salesmanship which comes pretty close to being infallible.

This system starts automatically to work the moment a customer enters the store. In the first place, one of the three members of the firm is nearly always in sight and they know at least 75 per cent of the "regular trade" by name. When a stranger wanders in, they always introduce themselves before turning the customer over to a salesman to be waited upon, in this way overcoming the atmosphere of coldblooded commercialism which invites distrust and at the same time building up a feeling of friendly interest which goes a long way toward mkaing a satisfactory sale.

"The first thing that salesmen in the clothing department are instructed to do," states Taylor, "is to secure the correct cheat and waist measurements of every customer with a tape line. Even if a man is sure that he takes a size 40, we measure him just the same because it is more than possible that his body size has changed since his bought his last suit. Moreover, it makes it possible to sell him easily on the first suit he tried on.

"Right here is the crux of the whole system, this 'first suit idea.' Men are just the opposite to women. They like to do their shopping and get it over with. If they like the first thing you try on them, they'll buy it and tender you a vote of thanks for saving them time and trouble. What's more, you have that much more time to devote to another customer—so it works both ways.

"The moment that I find that a customer likes the coat I have picked out for him, I suggest that he step into the dressing room and try on the trousers. Once you get that far the sale's made. All that remains is to arrange for alterations, get the name and address and see that deliveries are prompt.

"But there is one another point that helps boost the average for the store. Having sold the suit, we always ask the customer if he would like to see a hat or a pair of shoes that will go particularly well with his purchase. That indicates interest in his appearance, and in at least 50 per cent of the cases, it works.

"After all, the plan simmers down to two words—'personal salesmanship'—and our constantly increasing business is proof of the value of the theory."

The Future Complaint.

Wish you'd tell the ace who drives
Your delivery plane
Not to drop his groceries
On our roof again.
Willie had to climb around
Nearly broke his neck.
Getting those potatoes down—
Lost a half a peck!

Wish you'd tell your pilot man
When he brings the fish
Try to make a better aim
At our chafing dish
Thursdays I will set it out
On the dewy lawn
Hope to find the fish therein
When I rise at dawn.

Also, while I think of it,
Tell the man to fly
Several kilometres
Nearer to the sky
Noise that his motor makes—
Careless, stupid chap!—
Always wakes your grandpa up
From his daily nap.

C.P.R.'S NEW RECORD

The re-employment of returned soldiers has been carried out by the C.P.R. so whole-heartedly that according to the official records up to the end of August, actually more returned soldiers have been given employment than left the Company for service overseas. The exact figures are as follows:—

Total reported as joining the Army	10,538
Dead	1,000
Wounded	1,952
Re-employed in the service	5,024
Other soldiers given employment	5,543
Total soldiers given employment to date	10,567

In finding employment for returned soldiers, the C.P.R. has found by experience that in most cases it is advisable to reinstate them in the same department as that in which they worked previous to enlistment. The freight handler who has ambitions to become a dining car waiter is not encouraged to change his vocation unless he can prove that he learned something about waiting, for instance, at an Officers' mess during his military life. His military experience has probably made him a better man than before for handling freight but has not qualified him for the skilled trade of a dining car waiter. Baggage men who have served in the Army come back as a rule all the better for their experience, but the Army training has not qualified them to be sleeping car conductors or ticket clerks, and if they prove to be misfits at a new job the only result is friction and discontent. The general experience, however, is that the normal returned man who goes back to his old or a similar job is all right, indeed is often improved by the discipline and teamwork which he has learnt in the Army.

The policy of the C.P.R. has been to find a position at least as good as the position given up, and this policy has been carried out in the higher ranks of the service as well as in the lower ranks. Thus:

Mr. T. S. Acheson who was employed as General Agricultural Agent at Winnipeg, enlisted in October 1915, was re-employed in the same capacity on January 1st, 1919.
Mr. G. W. Curtis, who was employed as Industrial Agent at Montreal, enlisted in November 1916, was re-employed January 1st, 1919 in the same capacity.
Mr. M. L. Duffy, who was Chief Clerk, Freight Department, at London, England, enlisted October 1914, was re-employed March 1st, 1919 as Agent at Glasgow.
Mr. F. A. L. Gascoigne, who was Superintendent Car Service, Montreal, enlisted July 1915, resumed duty as Secretary Treasurer of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Ltd., Montreal, in October 1918.
Mr. Gerald Hiam, who was District Freight Agent at Fort William, enlisted in June 1915, and returned to duty on March 15th, 1919, as District Freight Agent, at Cleveland.
Mr. W. M. Kirkpatrick, who was Assistant Freight Traffic Manager, at Montreal, and enlisted in September 1915, resumed duty on February 1st 1919, as Assistant Freight Traffic Manager at Winnipeg.
Mr. T. M. Leask, who was Chief Surgeon at Moose Jaw, enlisted in February 1916, and resumed duty as Chief Medical Officer at Moose Jaw on June 1st, 1919.
Mr. B. H. Muckleston, who was Division Engineer in the Natural Resources Department at Calgary, enlisted in April 1916, and resumed duty as Division Engineer on March 17th, 1919.
Mr. G. G. Ommanney, who was Special Assistant Engineer at Montreal enlisted in August 1915, and resumed duty in July 1919, as Assistant Engineer in the Chief Engineer's Department at Montreal.
Mr. L. C. Ord, who was Assistant Works Manager at Angus Shops, Montreal, enlisted in September 1915, and resumed duty in the same capacity in May 1919.
Mr. C. W. P. Ramsey, who was Engineer of Construction, Montreal, and who took command of the Canadian Overseas Railway Construction Corps in February 1915, resumed duty as Relieving Superintendent on Eastern Lines in March 1919.
Mr. M. J. Robertson, who was Assistant to the Manager of the C.P.R. Real Estate Department, Montreal, enlisted in June 1916, and returned to duty in his former position in March 1919.
Mr. H. B. Yewdall, who was Purchasing Agent in the C.P.R. Right of Way Department at Winnipeg, enlisted in November 1914, and resumed his former position in June 1919.

THE NEW AND CORRECT
AUTUMN HATS
You Will Be Interested in These

Shall it be large Hats or small? Whatever your question, our Millinery will answer. Interesting and lovely are the new Hats rivaling each other in beauty. There are small Turbans with soft shirrings of velvet—so kind to the face—and much is made of ostrich as a trimming, for it not only has Paris' endorsement, but is unequaled for charm of line and color.

The woman who likes the new and fashionable in Millinery, evolved with that conservation which is particularly appropriate and becoming to her, will find that we have many models from which he will surely be able to make satisfactory selection; while she who desires the very last word in style, Fashion's latest fancies, will discover that here the variety is abundant and the styles most authentic.

NEVER LIVED IN MORE CRITICAL TIMES IN THE CHURCH'S HISTORY

Canon Plumptre Urges Cooperation Between Clergy and Laity in Forward Movement—St. John's Harvest Festival

Praise and thanksgiving was the dominant note of the whole harvest festival at St John's church last evening, when the service was fully choral and admirably sung by a trong and well-trained choir, under the conduction of Mr R J Devey.

The stately old historic church, characterized by many English visitors as the most church-like church in Canada was tastefully adorned with just enough products of farm, garden and orchard to produce a picture of quiet beauty, void of ostentation

Canon Davidson, the rector, was assisted by Rev R B. Grobb, of All Saints' and Rev. J Price, of St George's church.

Vows and Thanksgiving.

Canon Plumptre delivered an interest-holding discourse on reverence to vows offered to God, and thanksgiving. He made passing reference to the Jews' predilection to vows and hanksgiving and emphasized the remarkable fact that Anglicans today, in giving thanks in their churches, could find no more fitting words than embraced in the psalms sung in the Jewish Temple three thousand years ago but the practice of making vows — Almighty God, when petitioning for His favor, unlike the Psalms of David, had of late centuries been discarded by Christians, on the ground that it appeared too much like bargaining with God; but nevertheless, he was not sure of the wisdom in the elimination of vows from Christian custom. He was quite certain that during the Germans' last drive in France, congregations in Canada, who assembled to petition God for ultimate victory, were quite willing to pledge themselves to much in return for the overthrow of the enemy. And now that victory has been awarded us, even beyond all expectations, the enquiry "what shall I do for all that God has given us," should dominate all minds today.

Forward Movement

The reverend gentleman here urged an individual congregational forward movement in preparation for that great Anglican general forward movement to be inaugurated next year. This means development and progress, which there are two ways of accomplishing.

First there is the matter of church fellowship, of which there is not enough in the Church of England. And the speaker appealed for the cultivation in the church of that spirit of fellowship learned in the army where all sectional differences were forgotten in brotherhood of arms and of the whole nation. There is fellowship in trades unoins, where all stand together to help one another, and there should be a similar fellowship in the church—a brotherhood in which the new comer can find sympathy practically expressed Democratic Principles.

Canon Plumptre here pointed out the need of democratic principles in the church We fought, he said, for democracy to make the world safe and the last great despotic government has been destroyed. And although we haven't yet solved all the problems of democratic government we must never return to autocracy.

The church must be democratic, otherwise it would lose all power and prestige. Democracy, he asserted, gives the right to express one's individual opinion on matters political, and allows the use of one's free-born power. And the Church of England if it is to become in truth the church of the pople, must be governed in a spirit of democracy. He encouraged the laity to take an active part in the church's sessions, which invite practical individual interest on the laity's part.

Fuller Co-operation.

In conclusion Canon Plumptre asked for fuller cooperation between clergy and laity. "For," he said, "I am convinced that we never lived in a more critical times for the church, and from now on it will either be a forward or a backward movement in our history."

Fifty Voices.

The service was chorally and rendered splendidly by the choir of fifty voices to Tallis' setting, the Canticles to Winchester, and the anthem, "He Watereth the Hills," with solo by Mrs W G. Perks, a triumph of choral work.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lead and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

BREACH OF MOTOR VEHICLE ACT

A citizen from Warsaw was fined $11.32 in police court this morning for passing a street car which was standing for the purpose of taking on passengers

EDISON'S VOICE IN RECORDS

Inventor of Phonograph, for the First Time, Makes Short Speech Which Will Be Preserved.

Thomas A Edison, who invented the phonograph 42 years ago, has for the first time consented to have his own voice recorded on a phonograph record. The reproduction, which is on the back of a record containing the national anthems of our allies, was heard recently for the first time in the Edison laboratory at Orange, N. J.

Mr. Edison celebrated his 72nd birthday on February 11. The talk which is Mr Edison's first comment about the war since America entered the fight, follows:

"Our boys made good in France. The word 'American' has a new meaning in Europe. Our soldiers have made it mean courage, generosity, self-restraint and modesty. We are proud of the North Americans who risked their lives for the liberty of the world, but we must not forget, and we must not permit demagogues to belittle the part played by our gallant allies. Their casualty lists tell the story.

"However proud we may be of our own achievements, let us remember always that the war could not have been won if the Belgians, British, French and Italians had not fought like bulldogs in the face of overwhelming odds. The great war will live vividly in the minds of Americans for the next 100 years. I hope that when we do reverence to the memory of our brave boys who fell in France we shall not forget their brothers in arms who wore the uniforms of our allies.

"I believe that the national airs of France, Great Britain, Italy and Belgium should for all time to come be as familiar to us as our own 'Star-Spangled Banner.'"

Honduras Attractive.

With a population estimated at 600,000 and an area approximately equal to that of Pennsylvania, Honduras has abundant room for development. It has a tropical climate with few of the usual disadvantages. The interior is mountainous and salubrious, with considerable rich land suitable for diversified farming and fruit growing, while all of the remainder, even the deep mountain slopes, is used for pasturage.

Law of Compensation.

The law of compensation is, even in these wonderful modern days, very much in evidence. Most of us—in fact, all of us—receive from the world just what we give to it. Smiles and happy words will fall from other lips to us if we ourselves play the same role; but if we are too busy or too "big" to practice these little courtesies we should not be surprised to see only frowns on the faces we meet.

OMEMEE

Omemee, Sept. 19.—Mr. Laurence Lamb, of North Bay, visited Omemee last week.

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Institute was held last Thursday at the home of Mrs T. M. Correll, Mrs. Widdes presiding. After the business for the month was transacted the subject "Temperance" was thoroughly discussed. "Booze and Throttles" was the subject of a very interesting article read by Mrs. Wilbert Fee.

A duet, entitled, "Somebody's Boy" was rendered by Mrs. Morcomie and Miss Parsons

"The Referendum and How to Vote" was an article given by Mrs. Lorne Mahood.

A very fitting poem entitled "Mrs Moriarity's Boy" was delivered in an able manner by Mrs. T E. MacPherson. The singing of "God Save the King" brought to a close a most interesting meeting. Mrs. McConnell closed the meeting. The October meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Robert Bannon.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Payne attended the Peterboro Fair on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Rose, of Lindsay, have taken up residence in Omemee.

Mrs. Rutherford, and daughter, were visitors in Peterboro on Tuesday.

Miss Corbett, of Peterboro, has resumed her teaching of piano and vocal in Omemee, on Tuesday and Wednesday, of each week.

Miss Smith, of Toronto, is the guest of Miss Gwendolyn James.

Mr. Harold Cunningham spent Wednesday in the "Electric City."

Friends of the Rev. Mr. James will regret to learn that he had the misfortune of breaking a rib last week.

A very interesting meeting in the interests of U. F. O. Candidate, Mr. F. G. Sandy, was held in Coronation Hall on Thursday evening.

Mr. MacMillan of Huron County, was the speaker of the evening.

Miss Edith Curry returned home last week after a very pleasant visit with her sister, Mrs. Kimpton.

Mrs. Herrington, and little daughter, Lucille returned home last week after a pleasant month's vacation.

The picture entitled "The Great Love" which was presented in Coronation Hall on Tuesday evening to a fair sized audience was much enjoyed. Preceding the main picture, a number of lightning sketches by Capt. Bruce Bairns' father, the famous cartoonist were thrown on the screen to the delight of the audience

A monster reception is being arranged for "Our boys" who have returned since the last recognition. Emily will join with Omemee again in the welcome of "Our boys" of whom it is expected there will be about thirty.

A miscellaneous shower was given last Wednesday evening to Mr. Fred Brockley and his English bride by the young people of the Presbyterian Church at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Sandy. The gifts were many and beautiful and all good wishes come true a long and happy wedded life await the young couple.

LAKEFIELD FAIR.

The Annual Exhibition of the Lakefield Agricultural Society will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday Sept. 23rd and 24th, a week later than previous years. The directors have been busy during the past week getting the grounds into shape and the indications are that the Fair will be better and bigger than ever. On the evening of the second day a grand concert will be given in the main building. The best talent has been secured and for this event ample seating accommodation will be provided and those attending will be made comfortable.

School Board.

A special meeting of the public school Board was held in the Council Chambers on Thursday evening. The members were all present, Dr. J. R. Fraser in the chair.

A number of applications for the position of janitor were received. On motion Mr. C. Stenner was appointed to the position at a salary of $400 per annum.

Afternoon Tea.

On Friday afternoon, Sept. 19th, an afternoon Tea and sale of work, homemade cooking and etc., will be held under the auspices of the Girls' Auxiliary, from 4 to 6 o'clock.

A business meeting of the G. A. was held at the home of Mrs. Marling on Tuesday evening.

Miss Elsie Ogilvie, graduate of Grace Hospital, Toronto, is at present spending a few weeks with her father and sister.

Mr. Harry Shein left last week for Saskatchewan on a business trip.

Mr. Robert Mackay, of Lindsay, spent the week-end in the village, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Alford.

Major H. A. Ben Ollel, who has recently arrived from overseas, Mrs. Ben Ollel and children, are at present in the village visiting friends. Major Ben Ollel was former rector of St. John's Church.

GUARD IN BRILLIANT ARRAY

Cretan Soldiers in Attendance on Venizelos at Peace Conference Were Gorgeously Uniformed

Kings, presidents and premiers ceased to be a novelty at the peace conference, but the bodyguard of Premier Venizelos of Greece never failed to attract great crowds. At the hotel where the American delegation was housed and at the foreign office, Venizelos' approach was always heralded by the arrival of one of his Cretan soldiers arrayed more brilliantly than a comic opera bandit.

The Cretans who escorted the Greek statesman were all more than six feet tall and apparently had been chosen from various organizations, as a different man appeared daily, and the same uniform was never seen twice. The swarthy Cretans all had small waxed mustaches twisted into upturned points and stood rigidly at attention for hours while awaiting M. Venizelos at the entrance to the hotel or the foreign office. The jibes of small boys and the jokes of various allied soldiers who gathered in wonderment never seemed to disturb the imperturbable Cretans.

Perhaps the most startling uniform worn by one of the guards consisted of white tights bound by tasseled black silk cords at the knees, a red velvet blouse and sash, a red fez surmounted by a black silk tassel so long that it fell below the waist and black sandals with upturned toes topped by great black silk pompons. This costume was completed by an ivory handled knife two feet long thrust carelessly into the sash.

The knives and swords worn by the Cretans were the chief feature of the uniforms and made collectors of antique weapons very envious. They were of all sizes and shapes and had sheaths of great splendor, jeweled and carved in a marvelous manner.

Some of the guards were breeches and had costumes not unlike the Scotch in style, but much gaudier in color. Others wore marvelously elaborated leggings reaching far above the knees. Capes of Oriental hues were frequently worn by the Cretans and added to the brilliance of the Greek uniforms which made the fancy dress imitations of the French and English look somber.

American Oil.

A famous British statesman, Lord Curzon, declared that the allies "floated to victory on a sea of oil." It might have said "on a sea of American oil." No less than four-fifths of the petroleum products used by the allies were furnished by America. At the time, before the shipping of American oil was properly organized, the allies in France had on hand less than a month's supply, forcing the general staff to make calculations of how they must retreat in case of a breakdown in the supply of gasoline. America, however, came heroically to the rescue and saved the day. Chief credit for our titanic achievements in keeping the allied navies and armies going with oil was cheerfully given A. C. Bedford, chairman of the petroleum war service committee of the United States fuel administration, by representatives of both the British and French governments on the occasion of the presentation to Mr. Bedford of the cross of the French Legion of Honor. The occasion was historic in that it brought together in a harmonious way all the independent oil representatives and the Standard Oil group, a thing which would have been impossible before the common danger begot the necessity for common action.—World's Magazine.

The Jugo-Slavs.

"Jugo-Slavs" means South Slavs. The weight of the word as a political designation is not definitely known. It appeared, perhaps, first as an official name for a South Slav combination at the convention of Corfu. It had, however, been used previously by Archduke Francis Ferdinand to describe the Slavic people of southern Austria-Hungary, Serbia and Montenegro.

According to the plan credited to him the South Slavs were to be united into one nation and to form an integral part of Austria-Hungary, thus changing it from a two part to a three part monarchy.

He Did.

One of the Indianapolis grade schools recently organized a company of cadets. A high school cadet was obtained to train them, but the principal of the grade school was a bit uneasy over the way her boys might treat him. "You have to impress them in a dignified way," she advised him, when he came to the building. "Make them think you're a person of importance and then they'll mind you."

The seventeen year old cadet nodded. He went on into the assembly room, faced the boys and explained his position. "Fellows," he began, "my name's Jones. Captain Jones. Now salute me."

They did. So did the principal, mentally.

A Layer of Tin.

At my friend's wedding everything had gone off fine. The ceremony was over and the bride was about to cut the wedding cake. The knife went half-way down the cake and stopped; the table rocked dangerously, and everyone wondered what the trouble was. To the bride's embarrassment her mother removed the bottom of a cake tin from the center of the cake. All the bride did was to tell the guests that "revenge is sweet."—Chicago Tribune.

The Descent of Man.

Professor Jehn, at the Edinburgh university, recently said: "Some Madagascar tribes believe that man descended from the crocodile, and they regard these animals as brothers, but when one crocodile so far forgets the ties of kinship as to eat a man, it is caught, tried and generally executed."

NEW TOM MOORE PICTURE REPLETE WITH SURPRISES

Tom Moore, now an established Goldwyn Pictures star, has a surprise production for his thousands of admirers in "Thirty a Week," the Goldwyn picturization of Thompson Buchanan's successful stage play, which comes to the Grand Theatre, beginning Monday next. "Thirty a Week" brings out, as no other Tom Moore vehicle has, the many angles of the handsome, rollicking Irishman's talents.

It tells the story of love finding the way to bridge the gulf that separates the strata of a girl of wealth and society and that of a stout-hearted American youth. Dan Murray (Tom Moore) is a chauffeur for a millionaire Wall Street operator, whose daughter, Barbara Wright, is deeply in love with Dan, despite his lowly station. Her parents have arranged for her marriage with Freddy Ruyter a man about town, but Barbara frowns upon their scheme. Knowing Dan loves her but fears to take the initiative, Barbara smooths the way for him and later they elope.

Angered by the marriage, Barbara's father has Dan dismissed from several positions. Ruyter vents his rage in an even more despicable way. He informs Barbara that Dan is untrue to her—that he has given money to another woman in his sight. Barbara is heart-broken and returns to her parents. Plans are made for the annulment of the marriage. The lawyer investigates and learns that Dan has given the woman the money to save the life of her invalid husband. Barbara's father hears the facts, throws Ruyter out of his home and Barbara and Dan go away to live happily ever after on thirty a week.

EMMY WEHLEN'S VOICE IS LOST IN PICTURES

It is not everyone who knows that the beautiful Emmy Wehlen, who will be seen at the Grand Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in her latest Metro all star comedy-drama success, "A Favor to a Friend," possesses one of the most entrancing soprano voices ever heard in the stellar roles of Broadway musical comedy.

Since Miss Wehlen's appearance as a star of the screen, it is a regrettable fact that a voice of such quality is lost to the enormous following which this fascinating young star enjoyed on the stage. In "A Favor to a Friend," Miss Wehlen has a vehicle which deals, incidently with the Broadway stage, and is replete with humor and thrills, besides enabling her to again demonstrate to the up-to-date woman, the last word in modes and millinery.

However, in spite of the fact that motion picture fans are deprived of the possibility of enjoying her rich, clear voice, Miss Wehlen, between times, keeps up her vocal training so that some day if she returns to the footlights she may renew her personal acquaintance with lovers of light opera.

WEALTH OF WONDER AT GRAND TONIGHT

SEE THE GREAT BLACKSTONE IN ASTONISHING MAGIC

Over at the Grand Theatre there was today an atmosphere of red devils, spooks, begie folks and mystery. The sidewalk at the stage is covered with big crates, boxes and queer-looking containers, from which the mechanics are removing to the stage the queerest looking freaks of handiwork curious and awe inspiring contraptions which kept a large crowd of onlookers on edge and whetted their anticipation of the work of wonder to be revealed at the opening performance, tonight, of Blackstone the great magician.

"THAT'S THE STORY," QUOTH MR. WASHBURN

THAT'S WHY "THE WAY OF MAN WITH A MAID" WAS WRITTEN. SEE IT AT THE ALLEN THEATRE TODAY.

Sometime ago Bryant Washburn read a splendid story in the "Saturday Evening Post," and it impressed him greatly.

"There's a story I want to do on the screen," said Bryant enthusiastically. "I can just see the character, Arthur McArney, the $21 a week clerk. I want to play him."

The result was that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation bought the picture rights from Ida M. Evans the author, and under the title of "The Way of a Man with a Maid," the story will be seen as Washburn's Paramount starring vehicle at the Allen Theatre today.

Ida M. Evans, the author, is a widely known writer who lives in Chicago. Several years ago she was engaged in the notions and millinery business in that city, and she was starting to write stories about the clerks and stenographers that she knew well. The stories were unusual in plot and development, but more than that, they became popular with a large number of readers.

Ida M. Evans has been compared to O. Henry in her original fresh way of handling story material. But really she has created stories that are distinctly her own and "The Way of a Man With a Maid" is one of her best.

GRAND THEATRE KEEPING AHEAD

WELL-KNOWN POLICY IS TO SHOW BEST PICTURES ALWAYS

The programme at the Grand last night included two big feature films, a laughable comedy and the Gaumont Weekly as well as several solos by Mr. A. E. Caldwell. This big programme was brought to Peterboro just for one night, last night being an open one between two different shows, and goes to prove that the management of the Grand is striving to keep ahead of the well known policy of the house, which has always been to show the best pictures all the time.

"The White Lie," in which Bessie Barriscale is starred is a melodramatic story which keeps the audience guessing right to the last scene, but which ends just as the audience would wish it to. Wm. S. Hart was seen at his best in "The Marked Deck," a story of the west. The comedy picture was entitled "Too Young to Marry," and was very funny. The solos of Mr. Caldwell were much appreciated by those who heard them.

Shakespearean Brides.

None of the weddings of Shakespeare are conventional and no thought of the display wedding that women are said to love disturbed these brides who all seem sadly lacking in the reserve attributed to women. The Shakespearean bride does not have to be coaxed to name the day. Juliet, Portia and Olivia forestall their lovers in mentioning the ceremony, the latter two hurrying their bridegrooms to church with a haste that is almost unseemly; and we have the testimony of Othello that Desdemona did the most of the courting.

Day of Quill Pen Gone.

Trite as true is it to say that times change and the manners with them. Although the habit of carrying the pen behind the ear has not altogether disappeared in this day of the fountain pen, typewriter machine and other similar devices, the quill pen, so far as the present generation goes, is now more of an adjunct of romance, stage settings and motion pictures. The fountain pen does not lend much artistic atmosphere to such as these.

Where the Trouble Is.

If we cannot agree with our present co-workers or neighbors, making a change will in no way help to mend matters. It is almost a certainty that we shall find the new folks just like the persons we left behind us, as far as indifference and inconsideration are concerned. The trouble is with ourselves, and until we realize it and make an attempt to change our own unfortunate temperaments we will not be happy anywhere.

Long Mountain Range.

Sumatra is of volcanic origin, and, together with the other members of the Malay group, formed in an early period of the world a part of the Asiatic continent. The Barisons, or Sumatra Alps, form a broken chain of mountains, running lengthwise of the island. Some of the highest points of the chain are 10,000 and 12,000 feet above the level of the sea.—Rocky Mountain Herald.

Wisdom of the Ancients.

It is my custom every night to run all over the words and actions of the past day; for why should I fear the sight of my errors when I can admonish and forgive myself? I was a little too hot in such a dispute; my opinion might as well have been spared, for it gave offense and did no good at all. The thing was true; but all truths are not to be spoken at all times.—Seneca.

Not a Bad Old Custom.

Until recent years there was a most respectable old inn in Warwickshire, England, the proprietor of which was accustomed to invite all his patrons to accompany him and his wife Sunday mornings to a church directly opposite the inn. On returning from service each customer was expected to partake of refreshments offered by the hospitable landlord free of charge.

Found His Stories in Dreams.

Human dreams are instinct with imagination, as is shown by the case of the romancer R. L. Stevenson, who asserted that he had so trained his dreaming mind by self-suggestion that it furnished him with the conception of some of his best stories. Anybody who can do that may make a mine of his dreams.

In preparing a lunch for a journey, bake the bread in empty baking powder cans. After slicing and spreading replace it in the cans, put on the covers, and the bread will be as fresh at the end of the trip, though it may be several days, as it was when first packed.

Butterbean Is Meat.

A meal for a whole family from one bean is possible now in California. The bean is called the Guinea butter bean, and one offered in the Los Angeles market was almost three feet long and nine inches in circumference. It is said to be excellent eating, similar to the eggplant.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

At 4 in the morning Baldpate inn, wrapped in the arms of winter, had all the rare gayety and charm of a baseball bleachers on Christmas eve. Looking gloomily out the window, Mr. Magee heard behind him the steps on the stairs and the low cautions of Quimby, and two men he had brought from the village, who were carrying something down to the dark carriage that waited outside. He did not look round. It was a picture he wished to avoid.

So this was the end—the end of his two and a half days of solitude—the end of his light hearted exile on Baldpate mountain. He thought of Bland, lean and white of face, gay of garb, fleeing through the night, his Arabella in fiction disowned in the real tragedy that had followed. He thought of Cargan and Max, also fleeing, wrathful, sneering, by Bland's side. He thought of Hayden, jolting down the mountain in that black wagon. So it ended.

So it ended—most preposterous end—with William Hallowell Magee madly, desperately, in love. By the gods—in love.

Quimby dragged into the room, the strain of a rather wild night in Upper Asquewan Falls in his eyes.

"Jake Peters asked me to tell you he ain't coming back," he said. "Mis' Quimby is getting breakfast for you down at our house. You better pack up now and start down, I reckon. Your train goes at half past 6."

Mrs. Norton jumped up, proclaiming that she must be aboard that train at any cost. Miss Thornhill, the professor and Kendrick ascended the stairs and Magee gathered his things together, put them in his bags and with a last look at No. 7 closed the door forever on its many excitements.

A shivering group awaited him at the foot of the stair. Mrs. Norton's hat was on at an angle even the most imaginative milliner could not have approved. The professor looked older than ever; even Miss Thornhill seemed a little less statuesque and handsome in the dusk. Quimby led the way to the door, they passed through it and Mr. Magee locked it after them with the key Hal Bentley had blithely given him on Forty-fourth street, New York.

So Baldpate inn dropped back into the silence to slumber and to wait.

Down the snowy road the five followed Quimby's lead.

"Come right in, all of you," chirruped Mrs. Quimby, ushering them into a pleasant odor of cookery. "Take off your things and sit down. Breakfast's most ready. My land, I guess you must be pretty nigh starved to death! Quimby told me who was cooking for you, and I says to Quimby: 'What,' I says, 'that—no account woman hater messing round at a woman's job, like that,' I says. 'Heaven pity the people at the inn,' I says. 'Mr. Peters may be able to amuse them with stories of how Cleopatra whiled away the quiet Egyptian evenings,' I says, 'and he may be able to throw a little new light on Helen of Troy, who would object to having it thrown if she was alive and the lady I think her, but,' I says, 'when it comes to cooking, I guess he stands about where you do, Quimby.' You see, Quimby's repertory consists of coffee and soup, and sometimes it's hard to tell which he means for which."

"So Mr. Peters has taken you in on the secret of the book he is writing against your sex?" remarked Billy Magee.

"Not exactly that," Mrs. Quimby answered, brushing back a wisp of gray hair, "but he's discussed it in my presence, ignoring me at the time. You see, he comes down here and reads his latest chapters to Quimby o' nights, and I've caught quite a lot of it on my way between the cook stove and the sink."

"I ain't no judge of books," remarked Mrs. Norton from a comfortable rocking chair, "but I'll bet that one's the limit."

"You're right, ma'am," Mrs. Quimby told her. "I ain't saying that some of it ain't real pretty worded, but that's just to hide the falsehood underneath. My land, the lies there is in that book! You don't need to know much about history to know that Jake Peters has made it over to fit his argument and that he ain't made it over so well but what the old seams show here and there, and the place where the braid was is plain as daylight."

After ten more minutes of bustle Mrs. Quimby announced that they could sit down, and they were not slow to accept the invitation. The breakfast she served them moved Mr. Magee to remark:

"I want to know where I stand as a judge of character. On the first night I saw Mrs. Quimby, without tasting a morsel of food cooked by her, I said she was the best cook in the county."

CHAPTER XXIII.

Exeunt Omnes.

THE professor looked up from his griddlecakes.

"Why limit it to the county?" he asked. "I should say you were too parsimonious in your judgment."

Mrs. Quimby, detecting in the old man's words a compliment, flushed an even deeper red as she bent above the stove.

"It's so seldom anything really happens around here," she said. "I just been hungering for news of the strange goings on up there. And I must say Quimby ain't been none too newsy on the subject. I threatened to come up and join in the proceedings myself, especially when I heard about the book writing cook Providence had sent you."

"You would have found us on the porch with outstretched arms," Mr. Magee assured her.

It was on Kendrick that Mrs. Quimby showered her attentions, and when the group rose to seek the station, amid a consultation of watches that recalled the commuter who rises at dawn to play tag with a flippant train, Mr. Magee heard her say to the railroad man in a heartfelt aside:

"I don't know as I can ever thank you enough, Mr. Kendrick, for putting new hope into Quimby. You'll never understand what it means when you have given up and your life seems all done and wasted, to hear that there's a chance left."

"Won't I?" replied Kendrick warmly. "Mrs. Quimby, it will make me a very happy man to give your husband his chance."

The first streaks of dawn were in the sky when the hermits of Baldpate filed through the gate into the road, waving goodby to Quimby and his wife, who stood in their dooryard for the farewell.

In the station Mr. Magee encountered an old friend—he of the mop of ginger colored hair. The man who had complained of the slowness of the village gazed with wide eyes at Magee.

"I figured," he said, "that you'd come this way again. Well, I must say you've put a little life into this place. If I'd known when I saw you here the other night all the exciting things you had up your sleeve I'd a-gone right up to Baldpate with you."

"But I hadn't anything up my sleeve," protested Magee.

"Maybe," replied the agent, winking. "There's some pretty giddy stories going around about the carryings on up at Baldpate—shots fired and strange lights flashing. Doggone it! The only thing that's happened here in years, and I wasn't in on it. I certainly wish you'd put me wise to it."

Two drooping figures entered the station—the mayor and his faithful lieutenant, Max. The dignity of the former had faded like a flower, and the same withered simile might have been applied with equal force to the accustomed jauntiness of Lou.

They filed out upon the platform, Mr. Magee carrying Mrs. Norton's luggage amid her effusive thanks. On the platform waited a stranger equipped for travel. It was Mr. Max who made the discovery.

"By the Lord Harry!" he cried. "It's the hermit of Baldpate mountain!"

And so it was, his beard gone, his hair clumsily hacked, his body garbed in the height of an old and ludicrous fashion, his face set bravely toward the cities once more.

"Yes," he said, "I walked the floor, thinking it all over. I knew it would happen, and it has. The winters are hard, and the sight of you—it was too much. The excitement, the talk—it did for me, did for my oath. So I'm going back to her—back to Brooklyn for Christmas."

"A merry one to you," growled Cargan.

"Maybe," replied Mr. Peters. "Very likely, if she's feeling that way. I hope so. I ain't giving up the hermit job altogether—I'll come back in the summers to my postcard business. There's money in it if it's handled right. But I've spent my last winter on that lonesome hill."

"As author to author," asked Magee, "how about your book?"

"There won't be any mention of that," the hermit predicted, "in Brooklyn. I've packed it away. Maybe I can work on it summers if she doesn't come up here with me and insist on running my hermit business for me. I hope she won't, it would sort of put a crimp in it, but if she wants to I won't refuse. And maybe that book'll never get done. Sometimes as I've sat in my shack at night and read it's come to me that all the greatest works since the world began have been those that never got finished."

The Reuton train roared up to them through the gray morning and paused impatiently at Upper Asquewan Falls. Aboard it clambered the hermits, amateur and professional. Mr. Magee from the platform waved goodby to the agent standing forlorn in the station door. He watched the building until it was only a blur in the dawn. A kindly feeling for it was in his heart. After all, it had been in the waiting room— Then he started for the smoker. On his way he paused at the seat occupied by the ex-hermit of Baldpate and fixed his eyes on the pale blue necktie Mr. Peters had resurrected for his return to the world of men.

"Pretty, ain't it?" remarked the hermit, seeing whither Mr. Magee's gaze drifted. "She picked it. I didn't exactly like it when she first gave it to me, but I see my mistake now. I'm wearing it home as a sort of a white flag of truce—or almost white. Do you know, Mr. Magee, I'm somewhat nervous about what I'll say when I come into her presence again—about my inaugural address, you might put it. What would be your conversation on such an occasion? If you'd been away from a wife for five years what would you say when you arrived back?"

"That would depend," replied Magee, "on the amount of time she allowed me for my speech."

"You've hit the nail on the head," replied Mr. Peters admiringly. "She's quick. She's like lightning. She won't give me any time if she can help it. That's why I'd like to have a wonderful speech all ready—something that would hold her spellbound and tongue tied until I finished. It would take a literary classic to do that."

"What you want," laughed Magee, "is a speech with the punch."

"Exactly," agreed Mr. Peters. "I guess I won't go over to Brooklyn the minute I hit New York. I guess I'll study the lights along the big street and brush elbows with the world a bit before I reveal myself to her. Maybe if I took in a few shows—but don't think I won't go to her. My mind is made up. And I guess she'll be glad to see me too, in her way. I got to fix it with her, though, to come back to my postcard trade in the summers. I wonder what she'll say to that. Maybe she could stay at the inn under an assumed name while I was hermiting up at the shack."

He laughed softly.

Then Mr. Magee went forward into the smoking car. Long rows of red plush seats, unoccupied save for the mayor and Max, greeted his eye. He strolled to where they sat, about halfway down the car, and lighted an after breakfast cigar.

Max slouched in the unresponsive company of a cigarette on one side of the car; across the aisle the mayor of Reuton leaned heavily above a card table placed between two seats. He was playing solitaire.

BROMPTON WINS DECISION FROM CATTLE AND NOW MEETS BULL

Small Crowd Witnesses Great Exhibition of Boxing and Wrestling Last Night—Dugan Won From Athony

Kid Brompton won a decision over Red Cattle at the Brock Street Rink last night in their return match. The fight was fast and lively, both men stopping a good many hard knocks and handing out the same.

The first round was rather slow the boxers contenting themselves with feeling for an opening and the gong sounded before any real work had commenced. The second round was a little faster and the punching began to get heavier and oftener. The third round was when the fireworks started. Brompton rushed out of his corner and waded right in, landing a hard knock to the face and a few telling body punches. Cattle was game and retaliated with a couple of blows to the jaw that showed their effect even upon the tough Brompton, during the rushing.

The fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh rounds were of the same description. Brompton went right in, first with his left leading and then his right first. Cattle used every device at his command to keep his sturdy opponent out. He tried a straight left to the jaw that would have stopped the ordinary man, but Brompton just smiled and continued right in. Then he started giving blow for blow but the was a disadvantage, because in receiving punishment he showed up considerably while the more he hit the little New Yorker, the better he seemed to like it. During the last three rounds the red-headed boy contented himself mostly with covering and side stepping, although he occasionally showed signs of his old life and went right in to meet his persistent opponent.

There was on doubt that Brompton took advantage of his better condition and worried his slighter opponent until he was tired out and then went right after him and won the fight by sheer cheerfulness to accept punishment. Referee George Graham's decision was a popular one and the only one that could have been given.

The first bout of the evening was a juvenile one between Red Lavery and Young Rex. Both boys mixed it freely and put up very clever guards. The decision was a draw and properly so, as Lavery perhaps boxed more cleverly but Rex went right in time after time and mixed it up. Both these boys will make great fighters some day if they are only kept right at it.

The other preliminary was a six-round affair between Dugan and Athony, the former getting the decision. Dugan showed the effects of careful training and his boxing last night was a credit to any amateur. Athony is inclined to be an in-fighter with a terrific right hand swing. Dugan knew this from his former engagement and whenever Athony would attempt to rush he would stop him with right and left to the face and if his opponent would still come on Dugan would very wisely fall into a clutch.

Both boys appeared to be very much in earnest in this bout and every blow was intended to be felt. Judging by his rapid improvement over two weeks ago Dugan is shaping up like a comer and may be expected to be seen in the local ring this winter against some clever boxers.

A telegram was received last night before the entertainment started, from Frank Bull, lightweight champion of Canada, stating that he was unable to come to meet Irish Jordan the local fighter, but issued a challenge to the winner of the Brompton Cattel affair. This means that Brompton will have an opportunity to meet Bull, but promoter Drummond made the announcement that the fight would not take place in this city as the support was not sufficient to warrant bringing the champion here.

After a speedy two minutes of wrestling, Dunsford succeeded in throwing Minard with a very clever hold.

PRES. COMISKEY WIRES MERRMAN

Chicago, Sept. 19.—President Charles A. Comiskey of the White Sox today sent his congratulations to Garry Merrmann and Pat Moran on winning the pennant in the National league. Comny has only words of praise for the two men who have given Cincinnatti its frist championship, and is delighted that his old friend, Garry, has finally succeeded in getting into a world's series because he belives the veteran magnate is deserving of the opportunity to figure in the big games.

"I do not know of another man in the National League I would rather see take the championship than Herrmann," said President Comiskey today. I am delighted over the Reds' winning for Garry's sake. He has been affiliated with the game for a long time and has always been honest in his dealings and has done everything possible for the uplift of the sport. He stuck to the fans in Cincinnati when reverses almost submerged him and always tried to give them a winner. He has finally succeeded and I hope the followers of the game in his town appreciate the fact. I have sent Herrmann a wire congratulating him on the wonderful performance of his club, and I think it was wonderful considering that few gave his club a chance to win the pennant when the race began."

Has Praise for Pat Moran.

"I do not see how one can overlook the remarkable work of Pat Moran. I have also wired him my congratulations on his splendid victory. He must be a miracle man to take the Reds after few gave them a chance, and win a championship with them. He did the same in 1915. It is not a simple task to take a ball club, develop its pitching staff and then go out and win a pennant. I am sure the best club in the National League won. It must have been to win as consistently as it did.

"I do not care to discuss the possible outcome of the world's series because we have not won the flag in the American League. Until we do I would rather refrain from making any comment other than to say what we expect to do. Of course, everybody can imagine what we think we are going to do and what we hope to achieve.

"Manager Gleason has written me that the team is in tiptop shape and will be when the schedule is over in our league. He writes that the men are bubbling over with confidence that they will win the pennant. The fact they are in good condition is encouraging. If they do not meet with any mishaps I am sure they will be keyed to the limit when the race finishes."

MUCH LIKE THEIR FELLOWS

Average Persons Behind Bars Would Compare Favorably With Those Who Have Liberty.

"Some people, Bud," said Leonard V. Whenne, according to Glenn M. Farley in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, "seem to think the jails are filled with very dangerous and very wild people. I suppose the average man or woman would no more think of mingling with these persons behind the bars than going into the bear pit at Woodland Park. As a matter of fact, there are about the same grades of society in jail as out of it. Man and woman prisoners go about their daily tasks quietly; they are as soft spoken and trivial in conversation as are the people outside. I have seen some mighty pleasant people in jail; men that could sit down and talk courteously and intelligently with you on any topic. And in general appearance they will line up with the average street exhibit. They don't look dangerous, they don't look wild. Not one in forty is a confirmed criminal. Most of them were caught off guard; they made a little slip when the judgment was asleep, and there they are. We ought not to be sentimental with these prisoners, nor should we hold them in horror. They are just a piece of the community, split off temporarily, mostly through their own carelessness.

"We are all living over powder magazines; a man or woman may live for fifty years before an explosion comes, and it might never come. Many a man has been a model citizen, sober, decent, upright, fair and square with his neighbors, and in an unguarded moment has destroyed it all. One little word will sometimes move a good citizen to shoot and kill. The human equation is a mighty complicated instrument, set on a hair trigger, and some fool is always fingering it, or examining it to see if it is loaded; we live in a succession of tragedies, though never expecting them. Even now the loom of time is weaving tragedies to come, with the sun shining and the birds singing and spring in the air; tomorrow, perhaps, a blow, a lapse from moral consciousness for a moment, and another respectable person will go wrong.

"Bud, never be thankful you are not as other men; be thankful that nobody ever happened to set off an explosion under you, and if you pray, Bud, pray for strength to go puckered for ambushes until your time is up, and you lie down to sleep with your fathers. And, Bud, that's about the only time you will be wholly safe."

THE PRINCE PREPARING TO FISH AT NIPIGON.

Sun Power Heats Coal, Is Claim.

The Philadelphia inventor of a sun-power engine, which is said to be working successfully in Egypt, has assured that it would be necessary to cover but 20,270 square miles of the Sahara desert with the engines to obtain as much power as the world's coal supplied in 1909.—Baltimore American.

Hint for Gardeners.

Buddy was helping work in the garden, when grandpa told him to pull some radishes for supper; the ground was hard, and Buddy had great difficulty in trying to pull them; finally he gave it up, and going to grandpa said: "I wist you'd planted 'em upside down, granpa; then they wouldn't be so hard to pull."

Squirrels and Their Nests.

The gray squirrel makes a nest of leaves. He is more or less busily engaged in leaf construction during the entire year, writes Dr. Edward F. Bigelow in Boys' Life. Even in the summer he cuts off the green leaves and skillfully packs them among the branches or in the fork of a tree, so that they shed the rain and roof a cavity big enough to shelter two or three squirrels. Until within a few years I supposed that these leafy homes were for rearing the young only, but in a small grove near my own home I find a number of leaf nests occupied by the squirrels at various times. . . . I recall vividly the bending down of a white birch tree that contained a leaf nest, and having four young gray squirrels drop out of it as the nest fell to pieces. I still feel a keen regret for having destroyed a squirrel home, but I am glad to add that, when I placed the young in the nest, reconstructed on the ground to the best of my ability, the mother squirrel came and carried them to a hollow tree, as a cat will carry a kitten, or a mouse will carry the young, though by a somewhat different method.

Lost Art.

A. H. Powell tells a good story in that interesting little volume called "Handicrafts and Reconstruction," recently published, anent the disappearance of the fine wheelwrighting of a generation ago. "The difference between the old and new atmospheres of work came out vividly between two wheelwrights, one old good, the other bad modern. The last was filling in a mistake with putty, and must fall to praising it—'A fine thing is this putty'—to hide his shame. Says old good, 'Why deant ye mek the hull thing o' putty then?' and walked away!" It is only the genuine craftsman who can find the real contentment in his work, and it is equally only the monotony and sameness of mechanical work that makes a man weary of it.

New Harbor on the Baltic.

It is reported from Copenhagen that a new harbor is to be constructed at Korsor, which is a Danish seaport 60 miles west-southwest of Copenhagen. The cost of this work is estimated at 80,000,000 kronen and it is stated that American capital has been interested. The harbor will have a depth of ten meters as against nine meters in Copenhagen and large quays will be built with ample facilities for handling merchandise.

Big Demand for Watches.

Watches are not being turned out fast enough by American manufacturers to supply a demand which, according to the representative of one large producing concern, is greater today than ever before. Leading factories fell behind in their regular output last year, when their plants were busy filling war orders.

Cloves In Commerce.

The clove tree has been introduced into the western world and now is and for more than a century has been grown in Brazil, Guiana and the West Indian Islands. Clove trees now grow in groves in the island of Mauritius, where plantations were set out under the auspices of the French in the eighteenth century, and in Zanzibar and Pemba. The second named islands, off the east coast of Africa, have become important producers of cloves. Java and Sumatra, in the east, also make their contribution to the world's supply of cloves.

"Western Reserve."

When Connecticut, in 1786, ceded her western lands to the United States, she reserved a large tract adjoining Pennsylvania, now forming several counties in the northeastern part of Ohio. From this the region came to be called "the Western Reserve." The reservation by Connecticut only lasted a few years, as in 1800 she completed the transfer of all the lands to the United States. The Western Reserve soon became famous for its good citizenship, fine farms and determined opposition to slavery.

BRIDAL FLOWERS HERE AGAIN

That Orange Blossoms Are in the Market Is a Sure Harbinger of World Peace.

One interesting sign of the coming of peace has been the reappearance of real orange blossoms at weddings. During the war they were difficult to obtain, owing to the fact that they come as a rule from France. Nearly all the orange flowers which are used at smart marriages in London and Paris are grown in the sheltered valleys of the Alps Maritimes behind the Riviera.

Here there are orchards of orange trees scattered over the sunny slopes, and the local peasantry devote most of their time to growing the beautiful flowers. No attempt is made to get the fruit, seeing that the orange trees are solely cultivated for the sake of the glistening blooms.

A large part of the floral crop finds its way to the perfume factories of Grasse, but the choicest sprays are picked for the London and Paris markets. Orange flowers keep fresh for a considerable time, and they stand the journey to England very well, arriving in perfect condition.—London News.

Many a man will give another man a letter of recommendation, though he wouldn't lend him a dollar.

CHOIR SOCIAL [illegible] PRESENTED MRS. COOPER LAST NIGHT.

Following the Harvest Festival at St. John's Church, last evening, a choir social was held in the schoolroom to welcome back Mr and Mrs. Frank Roberts, Lieut Dick Perry and Mr. Packman, from overseas, and to present Mrs Cooper with a gold cross before leaving for England. The presentation was made by Mr. H. W. Morphet.

Mr. R. J. Devey spoke heartily of the immense value of a corporate body of singers, such as formed St. John's choir, and urged the younger choristers not to form the bad habit of only attending one service a day.

Addresses were given by Mr. Frank Roberts, Lieut. Dick Perry and Mr. Packman, after which refreshments were served by Mr. Chas. Coleman. Sir Roger de Coverly was danced by the whole company and a pleasant re-union terminated with the National Anthem at 11 p.m.

POULTRY EXHIBIT AT LINDSAY EXCELS

Opening Day of Fair Promises Record Exhibition.

Lindsay Sept. 19. Yesterday was the opening day of the Lindsay Central Fair and all necessary to make it a grand success is the gracious smile of the weatherman and his assurance of ideal weather conditions. The scene at the Agricultural Grounds in the morning was an animated one. Everybody was busy and then some. The stalls and pens for horses, cattle, sheep, etc., were being filled up rapidly and while the entries are not as large in some classes as in past years, this will be more than counter-balanced by increased entries in others.

There was something doing, too, in the poultry building, and this year's exhibit in this department gives promise of being a record-breaker. Many new poultry men are on hand this year with birds and the space allotted promises to be congested.

The greatest activity, however, was witnessed in the main building and the directors are experiencing some difficulty in mapping out space owing to the great number of exhibitors. The need of a greatly enlarged main building is one of the problems with which the directorate is grappling.

Then there is the Midway. Talk about activity. The management of the different attractions with their staff of workers were on hand bright and early and the speed with which hammers, nails, tent pegs, ropes, etc. were handled was a sight worth witnessing. The Midway promises to be bigger than ever this year and they're going some. There are some new features this year and the space alloted is more than filled up—it is simply choked.

The grounds never looked better. The track is in splendid shape and a fine string of fast ones has arrived for the racing events on Friday and Saturday.

OUR LOCAL CHURCHES PAY OVER MINIMUM

ACCORDING TO PRESBYTERY REPORT NEARLY ALL THEIR CHURCHES PAY OVER $1,800 AND FREE MANSE.

At the meeting of the Presbytery held in St. Andrew's Church the clerk gave a very favorable report as to how the various churches in the Presbytery stood regarding the minimum salary.

At a former meeting of the Presbytery the clerk was instructed to write to all the congregations within the bounds which were paying their ministers less than $1500 a year and a free manse, calling their attention to the action of the last General Assembly in fixing the minimum salary at the above amount commencing from April, 1919, and a most encouraging response was received, nearly all the congregations coming up to the minimum as fixed by the Assembly.

The budget allocation for the Presbytery of Peterborough of $27,600 was accepted, and ordered to be apportioned to the various congregations.

Rev. P. L. Jull of Lakefield was appointed convener of the committee on systematic giving, to succeed the Rev. Mr. Earchman, former minister of Port Hope, now assistant minister of College street church, Toronto.

The clerk, Rev. T. A. Thomson and Mr. Anderson, of Keene, were appointed to represent the Presbytery on the Synod on the hills and overtures committee.

The Presbytery adjourned till the second Tuesday in December.

10 TO 15 PC. DROP IN PRICES

Washington, Sept. 19.—Reports to the Department of Justice from twelve states indicate that there has been a decline of 10 to 15 per cent in food prices since the time the fair price commissions began their work. From four states have come reports on wholesale prices indicating a decline of two to five per cent. Virtually no reductions in clothing prices have been noted.

The reports on retail food prices were said to have been from cities and counties well distributed throughout the country, and the information is believed by officials here to be a fair indication of what is going on everywhere. They think that results now becoming evident will be cumulative as the season advances, new declines in wholesale prices being reflected in retail prices and additional reductions coming from the campaign against hoarding and profiteering.

RUSSIAN SOVIET GOVT. TOO FULL OF RED TAPE; FAILS TO IMPROVE ON CZAR

Has Developed a Proletarian Bureaucracy Almost as Hidebound as That of any Bourgeois Country—Methods Remind One of Old Days of Czarism—No Room for Argument, and Many Officials to be Seen on Every Question

The Soviet Government is only twenty months old, but it has already developed a proletarian bureaucracy which is almost as hidebound as that of any bourgeois country, writes I. O. Levine, an American correspondent. New officials have been installed all over Russia but the methods of administration remind one strangely of the good old days of czarism. There are men in soviet Russia who believe that Russia's social revolution, after surviving Kolchak's war and the allied blockade, will die of the same disease that killed czarism—that is, bureaucracy.

There is an atmosphere of officialdom about the sovite institution which, to put it mildly, is exasperating. One of the first victims of soviet bureaucracy was the present soviet commissioner for foreign affairs, Tchitcherin. He had been a prisoner in England and after long negotiations was allowed by the British government to return home. He arrived in Stockholm, where the first soviet legation was established in charge of Vorovski. Tchitcherin, one of the big men in the Bolshevist party, went to see Vorovski, who, of course, knew of him, but had never met him personally.

Tchitcherin could not see Vorovski. The attendant did not know who Tchitcherin was and would not report him to the soviet representative. Ordinary mortals could not gain access so easily to Vorovski. His highness the soviet agent was too busy to be bothered. Tchitcherin tried to argue. He tried to explain. You see, he was Tchitcherin one of the veteran Bolsheviki, and it was rather important for him to see Vorovski. The attendant would stand no argument. He seized the prospective commissioner for foreign affairs by the collar and threw him out.

Professor Cools His Heels

This happened in a Soviet institution abroad. Similar things occur at home. A professor of the Petrograd university had an appointment with a Soviet official for 12 o'clock. He was in a great harry to keep the appointment. He arrived at the office on time and was requested to wait awhile. He waited. The clock struck 1, 2 3, 4. The professor still waited. At 5 he was shown in. There were profuse apoligies, but five hours had been spent by the professor in the waiting room. I met him after he got through with the Soviet bureaucracy. He was indignant. Here was the new order, but it was not very new after all

There is a law in Moscow that for every newly born child thirty yards of linen are issued free by the government within a month of its birth. There was a mother, one of thousands, who wanted to get the linen, which in the open market is worth a fortune. She went to the district distribution station to obtain a card for the linen. After waiting for several hours in line, she was informed that "the whole matter has been turned over by the distribution station to the district card bureau."

Mother Compelled to Wait.

The following day the mother went to the bureau. Again she waited in line for several hours until she reached the proper desk. Here she was greeted as follows: "We have no time today. We are issuing new cards. Come the day after tomorrow."

"But I can't leave the baby alone," protested the mother.

"I told you to come the day after tomorrow," was the answer.

On the appointed day the mother came tothe bureau. But the official was too busy. Again he asked her to come the day after tomorrow..

"But tomorrow the monthly limit expires and you told me to come today," the mother protested.

"I answered you," said the official with finality. After much begging on the part of the mother, he issued her a note to the effect that she should not lose the right to her linen card after the time limit. Again and again the mother called but all in vain. Finally, she fell sick but recovered soon sufficiently to make one more attempt to obtain the coveted linen. This time an old communist happened to be present when she applied for her ration. He took a personal interest in the matter and in five minutes she received the card entitling her to draw the linen!

In Saratov a commission was created to register all the unemployed bourgeois residents. In due time all the Saratov bourgeois appeared before the commission and received special passports But the commission did not disband after finishing this work The zealous proletarian commissioners looked around for a new field of activity They found one soon enough There ware many nonproletarian communists in the soviet ranks. Why not register them? The idea appealed tothe commissioners. They sent a summons to the local soviet food commissioner, Gorbunov, and he and other food commissioners not Communists, were forced to accept a bourgeois passport bearing the inscription "He who does not work does not eat."

WOMAN IS CHARGED WITH AIDING CROOK IN $60,000 BANK HOLD-UP

Alleged to Have Been Accessory in Slaying of Cashier in Metropolitan State Bank Raid—Also Thought Implicated in the Big Cleveland Robbery

Chicago ,Sept 19 — Miss Veta Wilson, alias Lyons, was arraigned today in the stockyards court as accessory after the fact in the murder of William Biegel, cashier of the Metropolitan State Bank. Despite pleas of her attorney, W. W. O'Brien for immediate hearing, Judge Daniel Trade, granted the request of the police for a continuance and set the hearing over until Sept. 30. He fixed bond at $1,500 and Miss Wilson was taken to detention home No. 3.

The charge against Miss Wilson followed her arrest in connection with a $60,000 bank robbery at Cleveland. She denied knowledge of that crime, but told the police she was the sweetheart of Frank Quigley, who is now in the county jail awaiting trial on the charges of murdering Biegel during an attempt to rob the Metropolitan Bank

Sought Release of Woman

She was held without booking until this morning, when Attorney O'Brien appeared in Judge Hebel's court with an application for a writ of habeas corpus to effect her release. Upon receipt of information as to O'Brien's actions, Capt. Lee of 50th street immediately placed a formal charge against his prisoner.

Miss Wilson and her companion, Florence Murray, with whom she was arrested, were held at the state's attorney's office until the early hours of the morning, but in the face of a continual grilling gave the officers no information as to where the $60,000 had been hidden. Miss Murray, the police say, confessed that she was connected with a gang of robbers who have been active in Chicago, New York, Cleveland, Toledo, and other cities of the middle west. Miss Murray is still held at detention home No. 1. She is not formally charged with any crime.

Information has been obtained pointing to a southside saloonkeeper through whom members of the gang communicated with each other, and he will be arrested soon, it is expected.

"Six men are involved," Mr Lowery said, "and three are already under arrest. The names of the other three are known and detectives are searching for them."

In the arrest of three men, two of whom served as lieutenants in the royal flying corps, and a woman, wife of one of the officers, detectives believe they have in custody a gang which was about to begin passing bogus checks in Chicago and throughout the west.

Nab Four of Gang.

Four men picked up last night in a poolroom at Halsted and West Madison streets were identified today as robbers who yesterday held up John Coffey's saloon at 4112 South Ashland Avenue. One of the prisoners, the police say, has confesesd to eight or nine robberies committed by the gang, and it is believed they are responsible for a number of other crimes They were arrested because their descriptions tallied with those furnished by numerous victims of holdups on the south side. identification today was made by Coffey, his wife and sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Sullivan.

One of the prisoners bears marks of the robbery at Coffey's place. He is Steve Novak of 913 West Madison street. He was one of the four who got out of a stolen Yellow cab entered the saloon and ordered pop. When Coffey turned around to fill the order and was ordered by the robbers to stick up his hands, Novak meaning to keep the womenforlk quiet while the robbery was in progress, sauntered into the back room where Mrs. Coffey and her sister were at work. He asked for something to eat and they prepared to get it, eyeing him, however, with suspicion. Finally Novak drew his revolver. The women then set upon him like tigbesses, took his revolver away, threw him on the floor, beat him, tore off his coat and finally tossed him bodily out the back door. They knew nothing of the robbery going on in front. Steve limped around the side and met his companions coming out of the saloon door and with them escaped in the automobile.

NO GROUND FOR SUSPICION IN BRITISH-PERSIA AGREEMENT

Gives Persia Opportunity to Work Out Her Own Destiny as an Independent Country—Earl Curzon Forecasts Chaos and Confusion in Asia For Some Time.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 20. — Great Britain's treaty with Persia does not constitute a protectorate of the latter country in any way, the only object of the agreement being to insure Persia an opportunity to work out her destiny as an independent country, said Earl Curzon, government leader in the House of Lords, in speaking at a dinner given here last night in honor of the foreign minister of Persia.

The speaker admitted there had been a misunderstanding of the treaty, but said there was no ground for suspicion, as the working out of the agreemnt would prove.

Era of Chaos.

An era of chaos and confusion in Asia was forecasted by Earl Curzon, who declared it would be some time before stability is restored in the regions formerly dominated by Russia and Turkey.

WHITE STAR LINER IS DRIVEN ASHORE

BELIEVED TWO THOUSAND BRITISH TROOPS ARE IN PERIL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 20. — An Evening News despatch from Kirkwall today reports a White Star liner ashore north of Ronaldsnay. It is believed, says the massage, that two thousand troops from Northern Russia are on board.

The liner ran ashore during a gale, adds the despatch, which gives no further details.

GERMAM GOVT. ONCE MORE BACK DOWN

WILL COMPLY WITH ENTENTE'S DEMAND RE-AUSTRIAN REPRESENTATION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 20.—Paul Dutasta, secretary of the Peace Conference, has received a long note from the German delegation at Versailles advising the Conference of acceptance in the name of the German government of the demand for a declaration annulling Article 61 of the German constitution, which would give Austria representation in the German Reichstag.

Murt von Lerssef, head of the German delegation, takes occasion to complain at what he characterizes as the ironical tone of the last note from the Entente Powers.

WESTERN CLOCK COMPANY HAS PERMANENTLY LOCATED HERE

Makers of the "Big Ben" Will Occupy the Canadian Chicklet Company's Building While That Company Moves to Larger Premises.

The Western Clock Company of La Salle, Ill., have finally decided to locate in this city. They have purchased the building now occupied by the Canadian Chicle Company on south George street, but will not be able to occupy these premises for two or three months. In the meantime they will occupy rooms in the Barrie Building and will start work about October 1.

The company will commence with a few hands, and as these acquire skill they will gradually increase the number of hands and the extent of operations until by the time they occupy their own building they hope to have a complete staff trained for the work.

The Western Clock Company is one of America's large manufacturing concerns. They are famous the world over for the manufacture of the Westclox make of watches and clocks in different lines, including the Big Ben alarm clock. This company employs about 1,750 hands in their factory at La Salle.

They are noted in the districts where they have been previously located for the consideration shown to their employes, never having had a strike in their many years of operation. They are establising their Canadian branch here without asking any assistance or concessions from the city. The city officials have done everything in their power to facilitate arrangements, and are to be congratulated upon bringing to this city such a world renowned concern as the Western Clock Company.

The city is not losing a factory when this new company occupies the Chicle Company's building, either, for the latter firm are moving into the building formerly occupied by the Lundy Shovel and Tool Company. They find it necssary to locate in larger premises on account of their rapidly increasing export trade in gum and sweetmeats.

NEW YORK TYPOS ASK BIG INCREASE

PUBLISHERS PREPARING TO REMOVE PLANTS TO WESTERN CENTRES.

New York, Sept. 19—Officials of "Big Six," the local union of printers whose demands for an increase of $14 a week in all present wage scales in books and the establishment by Oct. 1 of a forty-four hour week has been met by a threat on the part of 152 periodical publishers to suspend publication or to move their plants to western cities, where they will be free of labor "radicalism," announced today their willingness to arbitrate the question of higher pay. They declared they were determined however, to insist on their demand for shorter hours, refusal of which would mean a strike.

John Adams Thayer, secretary of the New York Publishers' association in a statement announcing the employes' attitude said that "two publishers of publications of national circulation" were preparing to sell out their real estate in New York city, much of it entirely new property, and were arranging to purchase land and buildings in other cities. Orders for new printing and binding machinery for these New York plants, he said, had been canceled in expectation of removal.

Publishers of another periodical of more than 1,000,000 circulation, with a weekly pay roll of more than $17,000 according to Mr. Thayer, and whose leases are about to expire, have decided not to renew them and are negotiating with outside real estate firms for a location in the west.

BON MARCHE CO. STARTS MONDAY

The Bon Marche manufacturing Company, a local concern for the manufacture of dress goods, will start work on Monday, September 22 in the Knights of Pithias Hall. They purpose starting work with 10 or 12 employees and hope to enlarge this number as the business progresses. They will manufacture all kinds of goods white and colored cotton and fine silks

THOMAS GRAYSTOCK WENT UP ON CHARGE OF VAGRANCY

Thomas Graystock of nowhere was sentenced to one month in the county jail by Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of vagrancy.

Detective Newhall laid the charge and swore he had known this man for several years, and had never known him to work more than two or three months at a time.

Prisoner objected to this, but was politely informed by the magistrate that he was the only man of leisure in the city.

Detective Newhall declared that he was a nuisance, as the police had received frequent phone calls objecting to his behavior. He has a nasty habit of hiding behind trees in parks and springing on couples walking out together, declared Mr. Newhall.

A week ago today he had informed the detective while on the market square that all the police should be in h— ,and he knew a man who was going to put them there.

Graystock protested that he wanted to go to the bush, but the magistrate decided that a month's rest in jail would prepare him for his work.

CAPT. D'ANNUNZIO MAY BE GIVEN TWENTY HOURS NOTICE TO EVACUATE FIUME

Squadron of Allied Warships Have Turned Guns on the City

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 20. — Capt. D'Annunzio may be given twenty-four hours in which to move his forces out of Fiume, upon which city a squadron of allied warships have turned their guns, according to advices received here by way of Berlin, Laibach and Vienna.

Allied Ultimatum.

It is indicated that this ultimatum will come from the allied powers, the forces of which are reported to have concentrated at Abbazia, about two miles northwest of Fiume, to which place they retired when Capt. D'Annunzio entered the latter city.

Ministers Disagree.

Rome, Sept. 20. — Premier Nitti and Foreign Minister Tittoni have disagreed over the Fiume incident, the latter disapproving of the attitude of the premier, according to the newspapers

Fleet of Airplanes.

A despatch from Trieste is to the effect that a fleet of airplanes has landed near Fiume, and have been placed at the disposition of Capt. Gabriele D'Annunzio, having flown from one of the Italian aviation camps.

ALL PITTSBURG STEEL WORKS TO CLOSE FOR INDEFINITE TIME

U. S. Corporations Will Postpone Operations on Account of Attitude of The Workers

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburg, Sept. 20.—All the plants of the U. S. Steel Corporation in the Pittsburg district where any employe is a member of the Steel Workers Union, will be shut down tonight for an indefinite period, according to reports in circulation here last night.

Not Verified Officially.

The reports could not be verified officially, but originated from a trustworthy source, according to a local news bureau. Plants that are one hundred per cent. loyal will remain in operation, and loyal men in those plants which will close will be taken care of by the company, reports say.

Reports Are Denied.

Those plants which will remain working will continue to do so, reports say, only so long as operations are not interfered with. Should the mills close it is unofficially estimated that by Monday morning 135,000 men will be idle.

PUT BACK CLOCKS TOMORROW 12 P.M.

CITY REVERTS TO STANDARD TIME MONDAY MORNING

Citizens of Peterborough are warned to set their clocks back one hour at 12 o'clock Sunday night This city is following the example of a number of other places and returning to the old standard time before the railways, which do not revert to it till Sunday, Ooctober 26.

Churches will meet by the daylight saving time tomorrow, but Monday morning all factories and stores in the city will start work by standard time..

Some confusion will ensue till Oct. 26 during which time the incoming and outgoing mails will use the daylight saving hours.

KAISER' GONE PUPILS STRIKE

German Children Are Angered by Removal of Portraits of Leaders

Berlin, Germany, Sept. 19—Pupils of the grammar school in Griefswald have struck because portraits of the former kaiser and popular army leaders were removed from the schoolrooms during the vacation season. They sent a telegram to the minister of education, giving as a provision of their return to school the restoration of the pictures.

GERMANY CAME THROUGH WAR A PERFECT DYNAMO OF STRENGTH

Have Learned Economy and Self-Denial.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 20. — Germany came through this war a perfect dynamo of strength. Her human military power is practically as great as ever, and her sixty-five million people have been schooled and hardened by trials. They have learned economy and self denial.

Surcharged with Energy.

The nation has been compressed into one concentrated mass, which is surcharged with energy and moving with centripedal force, while Germany's neighbors are spreading themselves out thin and quarrelling and moving with centrifugal force.

Thus spoke Henry Morgenthau, who headed the U. S. investigation commission which has been at work in Poland, in discussing today his observatoins in Central Europe.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

SATURDAY, SEPT. 20, 1919

NEVER A NAVY TODAY.

BUT CLEARLY, it won't do for the pacifists to hail Lord Fisher as a Daniel come to judgment. His mind, as his last letter shows, is full of war, and he is still unregenerately thinking of 20in. guns and internal combustion engines to drive incredibly destructive battleships. He points proudly, and justly, to his own record as a pioneer of the new sea warfare. But he thinks it can be done quite cheaply, if we will only scrap all obsolete and obsolescent ships, and clear out the unscientific spendthrifts. The difficulty is that nobody quite understands what is meant by "obsolescent." From one point of view every warship is obsolescent from the moment it is put into commission, for all Admiralties who know their business will by that time have a superior type in construction. If, therefore, we act ruthlessly on the principle of scrapping the obsolescent, we shall have a navy yesterday, a navy tomorrow, but never a navy today.

TOBACCO CULTURE.

THE GROWING of flue-cured tobacco in Canada dates back to the first experiment conducted by Messrs. Fox Brothers in the vicinity of Ruthven, Essex County, Ont., where very light sandy loams, somewhat gravelly, were first devoted to that type of leaf. From Ruthven it rapidly extended to the very light sandy loams along the lake shore, which proved suitable for the raising of tobacco of the bright Virginia type. Bulletin No. 38, "Flue-cured Tobacco in Canada," which will be supplied free upon application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, states that the area that can be devoted to the growing of this leaf in Canada is rather limited; Southern Ontario is the only tobacco district where the season is sufficiently long and warm to allow the full ripening of the leaves before they are taken to the kiln. A comprehensive description of the curing process, as far as the conditions in Southern Ontario are concerned, is given in the first part of the bulletin. The second part contains a more general description of the soils that are most suitable and the methods to be followed for raising a crop of good quality without impairing the fertility of the land. The objective of the grower of flue-cured tobacco should be to obtain the best color and the maximum possible yield at the same time. This requires the maintenance of the fertility of the tobacco land to a nice degree of equilibrium so as to prevent the leaf from becoming too coarse for successful curing. The curing process by itself requires expert handling, and so far has been mastered by very few in Canada.

THE LIBERTY TO GET DRUNK.

HAS A MAN a right to get drunk, or half drunk, or quarter drunk, if he wants to? This is a timely inquiry in the Christian Guardian. We know that if this happens, one man will begin to fight, another will go home and thrash his wife, maybe kill her or the children; another will wreck an automobile or a train; and another will make a beast of himself and render himself a nuisance to a neighborhood. We know that if we acknowledge this right it will cause probably about seventy-five per cent. of our crime, will help to fill our asylums, and will quickly populate our graveyards. These are not guesses; they are not prohibition imaginings; they are hard facts that are abundantly illustrated in every country which licenses the liquor traffic.

Have we a right, then, to license the liquor traffic when we know just what the result has been, and what it inevitably will be if liquor is sold? The drinker declares that it is our duty to do this in order to gratify his appetite for beer or whiskey. But if he cannot get beer his health will not suffer, his fortune will not be depleted, he will wear even better clothes, and he will eat better food, he will have better neighbors, he will be in less danger of accident, and he will live longer. Surely this is not inflicting any great injury upon him. It is true he may say that he would sooner have beer and die younger; he would sooner have beer than better food and clothes; he would sooner have beer than more money; and he may be sincere in saying this; but it is hard to work up much sympathy upon his account.

And then there is the other and darker side to this question. The Hamilton Times puts it this way: "Under the old license system it could be mathematically ascertained how many boys would grow up debauchees, a disgrace to their parents and outcasts from society. Under that system nobody was sure of their boy—the open bar was the rock upon which he was shipwrecked. It is for parents and others to decide this matter for themselves. If they think that their boys should have the opportunity to learn to drink if they want to, why, vote 'yes'; if, on the other hand, they want to protect their boy, then they will vote 'no'."

We regret the inconvenience which prohibition causes to men who have been accustomed to their beer, and who never got drunk. But we suspect that such men are not very plentiful. But when we place over against this inconvenience the absolute certainty that the licensing of the liquor traffic (even if we only license wine and beer) will mean that thousands of Ontario's boys will become drunkards, that homes will be ruined, fortunes wrecked, and manhood and womanhood destroyed beyond reach of remedy, we submit that no thinking man can calmly decide to cater to the appetites of a few beer drinkers, with the certainty that in so doing he is voting for the ruin of thousands of boys and girls. It is not what we fear beer will do, but what we know it has done. When one man's liberty means ruin and death to others, his liberty must go.

PRODUCTION VERSUS CONSUPMTION.

MR. BURNHAM, West Peterborough's Federal member, has the following proposed resolution before the House of Common:

> "That, in the opinion of this House, whereas the struggle for existence expresses itself largely in the cost of production and the cost of consumpeiton, and whereas confusion, and therefore, injustice and unrest, are developed by the constant struggle to maintain a due relative proportion between these two costs, it is desirable that this House should discuss the situation to the end that the scientific method may be applied in Canada to the struggle for existence, and whereas it is desirable that the directing head or government of the nation should conduct itself and all business, according ot the said method, to the end that such order and success as attend, for example, the affairs of a department store should be applied to the national business, therefore, be it resolved that a definite plan of government in this respect be laid before the people at the next general election, and that a committee be appointed for that purpose."

Mr. Burnham expresses himself well when he says in the above proposed resolution that the struggle for existence expresses itself largely in the cost of consumption and the cost of production, and especially is this true in the latter case, to which must be attributed the industrial unrest more or less prevailing today. The earning powers of man or woman must be based on the cost of consumption, and even now, with wages that, in comparison with those paid a few years ago, seem exorbitant, the mass of wage and salary earners merely exist—only that and nothing more. For prices of all commodities have climbed and climbed the past five years until we see a suspicion of their injustice by the governments both of Canada and the United States publicly acknowledged in the appointment of commissions of inquiry into the cost of living. Without restriction, without even inquiry in Canada, any price seems to have obtained, even on the bare necessities of life, during the war, whereas the British Government fixed a basis for prices on food, and prosecuted profiteers to the limit. Of course, the cost of production is responsible for prices in the first place, and any scientific methods applied which will reduce that first cost, together with assuring an equable cost for consumers, and consequently alleviate the struggle for existence, would be a God-send. In fact, the average Canadian has no right to "struggle for an existence." The country owes him a "living," not an "existence," and any man who wilfully relegates his fellow-man to a mere existence to his own aggrandisement of wealth is guilty of a crime against humanity. This is just what trade unions are organized for today—the opportunity to "live," uplift their families, provide against old age, to enjoy a fair share of the fruits of their land and their own industries, and increase in the cost of living will always be followed by industrial unrest and increased labor demands. Labor may not be always right in its demands, and neither may capital; therefore, if Mr. Burnham can get his resolution through Parliament, and the Government define some scientific plan for application to the struggle for existence, the path toward that national Utopia so many hoped for as a result of the war will have been coniderably broadened and straightened out.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

ABSURD.

(Hamilton Herald.)

According to a statement by Col. Cooper, who is in charge of the Canadian Bureau of Information in New York, there are twice as many Canadians in the United States as there are in Canada. But the statement is extravagant. In 1911, the census year, there were in Canada 5,619,682 native-born. It is simply absurd to say that there are in the United States 11,239,364 native-born Canadians.

ROOTS OF RADICALISM.

(Buffalo Express.)

More radicalism is based on greed, envy and the personal ambitions of agitators than on any grievances. No greater mistake can be made than to assume that the existence of agitation in itself is evidence that something is wrong, except in the sense that the original sin in human character is something wrong.

AUTO HELPS CRIMINALS.

(Buffalo Commercial.)

Trust even the criminal to do it a little better in New York! Six bandits walked calmly into a bank in broad daylight, held up all the customers in sight, rifled the tills and made away with $8000. As usual, they came ui a high-powered car. The automobile has made this sort of thing easy for the criminally inclined.

SHEER WASTE.

(New York World.)

When one thousand straw hats go into the discard in one day at a single New York hotel what becomes of those cherished precepts about economy as respects making the old hat do for another season? Is the high cost of living a myth? Certainly prodigals who throw away hats will not consent to wear patched pants.

THE VICIOUS CIRCLE.

(Christian Science Monitor.)

The great mass of the nation which comes between the capitalist and the manual worker is growing tired of being the sufferer. When the miner demands more wages, the mine owner raises the price of coal; when the price of coal is raised the railway man demands larger wages, the merchant raises the price of his goods to cover the extra cost, caused by the extra freight; and so the full length of the vicious circle, so that in the end everybody concerned is as they were before, with the exception of the largest section of the whole nation, the section coolly ignored as the general public, which has to pay more for its coal, more for its railway travelling, more for its merchandise of every description, without any corresponding raise in compensation.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES TOO LOW.

(London Advertiser.)

The Toronto Times was unable longer to face the heavy bills which are the lot of every newspaper. The price of newsprint has practically doubled in two years, wages have doubled in many cases, and other items entering into the cost of the business have gone up in price from 100 to 300 per cent.

Publishers faced with these rising costs have not increased the price of their product in proportion, and as a result many of them have had to go out of business. Many other papers are liable to meet the same fate unless an adjustment in prices is made. A metropolitan daily should not sell for less than $10 a year, yet most of them are selling for $4 or less. The advertising rates in most cases are 50 per cent. below what they should be. At the low rates prevailing publishers are able to pay expenses only by giving up the greater part of their space to advertising, which at one time was regarded as a mere side issue.

THE NEWLY APPOINTED CONSTABLE

The police constable, having been duly admitted to the force, will, for the first six months, be busy passing what may be termed his period of graduation, that is to say, he will be acquiring a practical knowledge of his various duties and powers. Every constable, by virtue of his office, is authorized and required to maintain the public peace. But he should exercise such powers legally and with proper caution. He must, therefore, make himself acquainted with his duties and the nature of the offences with which he may be called upon to deal; also under what circumstances he can and ought to interfere with the liberty of others. One of the first duties that a police constable should take up is that of attendance at police court, in order to acquire a knowledge of procedure and to familiarize himself with those methods with which he is destined to be called to observe in the near future.

It may be well here to remind the constable that the correct official way to address a magistrate is "your Worship," a judge of the High Court "your lordship," and a judge of a county court "your Honor." It is, however, permissible, in order to vary the monotony, to instead use the word "Sir."

There are, of course, the minor charges which take but a short time to dispose of. The prisoner goes straight to the dock, and the constable perefrring the charge into the witness box. These are usually referred to as night charges, and invariably consist of street offences such, for instance, as drunk and disorderly, soliciting, betting, and so on; sometimes a prisoner may have a solicitor to plead for him, or he may speak for himself. But it is essential that the constable pay attention to the way in which the more serious charges are dealt with, in order to acquire a knowledge of the workings of the higher courts, for the methods of dealing with the more serious case in the police court are similar, although in a much modified form, to the mode of procedure adopted in the higher courts, and in order to still further assist the constable graduate, I propose to say a word about an important possession of a police constable, namely, his note book. Every constable is required to carry a note book, in which he should inscribe details which may form the basis of a charge. Notes made at the time of, or as soon after an occurrence or a criminal inquiry, may be referred to in giving evidence, but this practice is not desirable, as the opposite party has a right in such case to examine them, and cross-examine upon their contents. Notes which should be invariably made, and never destroyed, should be read over before going into court, rather than being referred to in the witness box. Where two or more officers are engaged in any case, the notes should be made independently of each other. The notes should be made as quickly after the occurrence or acquisition of the knowledge as possible, so that very little may be left to the memory, and in order to bring this about it is desirable that the graduate should always be trying to improve his education. A word may also be given here on the subject of reports. It has been said by the heads of police departments that they experience some difficulty in procuring intelligent reports from constables. Every report should be legibly written, on one side of the paper only; if the subject is in any way involved, full particulars should be given, without, however, going into excess details. Slang statements should never be used. Reports should be signed by the officer by whom they are made, and submitted through the proper channel, that is, his immediate superior; it is then forwarded to the head of the department.

Erasures in reports should rarely be made. If the report has to be transmitted to a third person. Erasures say little for the clearness of the writer's mind, and it will generally be better to write the report again. The constable will do well to take this remark to heart.

It is expected that the newly appointed constable shall acquire sufficient knowledge within the first six months of his service to enable him to carry out his duties in an intelligent manner, when eventually he is allowed to go out into the streets and act entirely upon his own responsibility. Every possible facility for assimilating such knowledge is given him, and it therefore, depends a good deal upon himself as to whether he makes the most or but little of his opportunities; also a good deal depends upon how he conducts himself when in the streets, whether on or off duty, as to whether he is to be a successful member of the force or merely a mediocre failure. As to civility and demeanor, all persons should be treated with the utmost civility, forbearance and good temper by the police constable.

When a question is put to an officer by any person, he should not answer it in a short and abrupt manner, but with the greatest possible attention, avoiding, however, entering into unnecessary conversation with any one. A civil question will frequently elicit a courteous answer and valuable information.

Above all, ladies, strangers, old people and every person calling at the police station upon any business whatever, should be treated with civility.

Occasional mistakes and errors of judgment may be unavoidable on the part of the police, but civility will do much to prevent any resentment being felt.

There is nothing a police officer should more studiously avoid than argument. Suggestions should be courteously received and freely invited, for they will often prove of value, and however ridiculous, it does no harm to hear them.

The utility of a constable mainly depends on his own individual bearing and conduct. The exercise of his authority as representing the law on every petty occasion will only provoke opposition and resentment. A polite, forbearing demeanor will, on the other hand, if accompanied by intelligence and zeal, enlist the sympathies and respect of the public and greatly assist him in the discharge of his duties in such a manner as will entitle him to the confidence of his superiors, and secure him ultimate honor and success.

D. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

TEETHING TROUBLES

Baby's teething time is a time of worry for most mothers. Baby's little gums become swollen and tender, his bowels get out of order and constipation, colic or even diarrhoea set in. To make the teething period easy Baby's Own Tablets should be given the little one. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels and keep baby good natured. Concerning them Mrs. Marcel D. LeBlanc, Memramcook West, N. B., writes: "I have used Baby's own tablets for the last six years and have found them indispensable. To my mind nothing can equal them in allaying the fever accompanying teething. I would not be without them and can strongly recommend them to other mothers." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

YOUR COMPLEXION BY ALL MEANS

Beautiful Skin and Stuart's Calcium Wafers Have Made Thousands of Girls Happy.

Don't smear the face with creams, lotions, powders and rouge to hide

what ought to be real natural beauty. Don't try to hide pimples, etc., but get rid of them by clearing the blood with Stuart's Calcium Wafers. This wonderful beauty-maker has a most remarkable action to naturally seek the skin, drg up pimples, so that the impurities pass off. In a few days the skin becomes clear, pimples dry and flake off, boils cease, blackheads are gone, sallow muddiness disappears and before you can realize it you have a more beautiful complexion. No creams, lotions, bleaches or other external methods can do this as all experience has proven. Get a 50-cent box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store. Begin today.

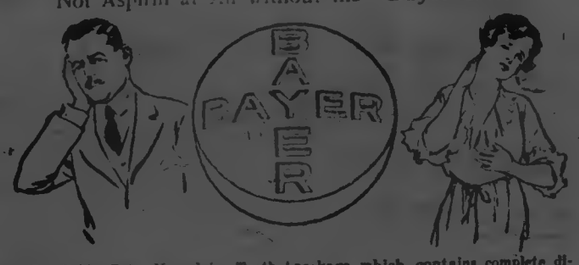
ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"



For Colds, Pain, Neuralgia, Toothache, Headache, Earache, and for Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuritis, take Aspirin marked with the name "Bayer" or you are not taking Aspirin at all.

Accept only "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" in an unbroken "Bayer" package which contains complete directions. Then you are getting real Aspirin—the genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years. Now made in Canada.

Handy tin boxes containing 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

Singer looked on, only mild interested. Then suddenly his interest grew. He watched the mayor build in two piles; he saw that the deck from which he built was thick. A weird suspicion shot across his mind.

"Tell me," he asked, "is this the admiral's game of solitaire?"

"Exactly what I was going to ask," said a voice. Magee looked up. Kendrick had come in and stood now above the table. His tired eyes were upon it, fascinated; his lips twitched strangely.

"Yes," answered the mayor, "this is the admiral's game. You'd hardly expect me to know it, would you? I don't hang out at the swell clubs where the admiral does. They won't have me there. But once I took the admiral on a public service board with me—one time when I wanted a lot of dignity and no brains pretty bad—and he sort of came back by teaching me his game in the long dull hours when we had nothing to do but serve the public. The thing gets a hold on you, somehow. Let's see—now the spade—now the heart."

Kendrick leaned closer. His breath came with a noisy quickness that brought the fact of his breathing insistently to Magee's mind.

"I never knew how it was played," he said.

Something told Mr. Magee that he ought to rise and drag Kendrick away from that table. Why? He did not know. Still, it ought to be done. But the look in Kendrick's eyes showed clearly that the proverbial wild horses could not do it then.

"Tell me how it's played," went on Kendrick, trying to be calm.

"You must be getting old," replied the mayor. "The admiral told me the young men at his club never took any interest in his game. 'Solitaire,' he says to me, 'is an old man's trade.' It's a great game, Mr. Kendrick."

"A great game," repeated Kendrick. "Yes, it's a great game." His tone was dull. "I want to know how it's played," he said again.

"The six of clubs," reflected the mayor, throwing down another card. "Say, she's find now. There ain't much to it. You use two decks, exactly alike, shuffle 'em together—the eight of hearts, the jack of—say, that's great! You lay the cards down here just as they come, like this"—

He paused. His huge hand held a giddy pasteboard. A troubled look was on his face. Then he smiled happily and went on in triumph.

"And then you build, Mr. Kendrick," he said, "the reds and the blacks. You build the blacks on the left and the reds on the right. Do you get me? Then—say, what's the matter?"

For Kendrick had swayed and almost fallen on the admiral's game—the game that had once sent a man to hell.

"Go on!" he said hoarsely. "Nothing's the matter! Go on! Build, dash it, build!"

The mayor looked at him a moment in surprise, then continued.

"Now the kick," he muttered, "now the nice. We're on the home stretch, going strong. There, it's finished. It's come out right. A great game, I tell you."

Professor Bolton pushed open the smoker door and sat down.

Cargan leaned back. Kendrick's fever yellowed face was like a bronze mask. His eyes were fiercely on the table and the two decks of cards that lay there.

"And when you've finished," he pointed. "When you're finished"—

Mr. Cargan picked up the deck on the left.

"All black," he said, "when the game comes out right."

"And the other?" Kendrick persisted softly. He pointed to the remaining deck. A terrible smile of understanding drew his thin lips taut. "And the other, Mr. Cargan?"

"Red. What else could it be? All red."

"Red," replied Cargan. "What else could it be? All red."

He picked it up and shuffled through it to prove his point. Kendrick turned like a drunken man and staggered back down the aisle. Magee rose and hurried after him. At the door he turned, and the look on his face caused Magee to shudder.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Miss Evelyn Rhodes, Reporter.

"YOU heard?" he said helplessly. "My God! It's funny, isn't it?" He laughed hysterically, and drawing out his handkerchief passed it across his forehead. "A pleasant thing to think about—a pleasant thing to remember."

"I thought I'd join you," said Professor Bolton. "Why, David, what is it? What's the matter?"

"Nothing," replied Kendrick wildly. "There's nothing the matter. Let me—by—please." He crossed the swaying platform and disappeared into the other car.

The train slowed down at a small yellow station. Mr. Magee peered out the window. "Hoopersdown," he read, "Renton—Ten Miles." He saw Mr. Max get up and leave the car.

Noiselessly Max returned to the group and stood silent, his eyes wide, his yellow face pitiful, the fear of a dog about to be whipped in his every feature.

"Jim," he cried, "Jim! You got to get me out of this. You got to stand by me."

"Why, what's the matter, Lou?" asked the mayor in surprise.

"Matter enough," whined Max. "Do you know what's happened? Well, I'll tell"—

Mr. Max was thrust aside and replaced by a train newsboy. Mr. Magee felt that he should always remember that boy, his straw colored hair, his freckled beaming face, his lips with their fresh nocturnal smile.

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says 1 glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purifying the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

METHODISTS AND THE REFERENDUM

DISTRICT MEETING ADOPTS A STRONG RESOLUTION IN FAVOR OF FOUR NO'S.

The financial district meeting in connection with the Methodist church was held yesterday in the Reid street Sunday school hall of the Trinity Methodist church. All the ministers of the district were present and a large number of laymen from the different churches. A great deal of work was discussed and plans made which speak well for the activity of the Methodist Church in this district for the next season. Rev. A. McLaughlin, of Pontypool was appointed statistical secretary of the district.

A resolution was passed that this district express its appreciation of the great work accomplished by the Lord's Day Alliance and that this district promise its most hearty support of the alliance.

Three inspirational and helpful addresses were given, one by Rev Dr. Burns, of Toronto, who outlined clearly the work before the Methodist Church, in connection with the great national campaign. Mr. W. B. Sparling, of Lindsay, gave a very comprehensive talk concerning the church of today, its faith and mission. Rev. W. P. Rogers, B. A., president of the Bay of Quinte Conference, spoke to the district about its obligations and duties in regard to the Great National campaign of all the churches.

The district accepted the objects set to it regarding spiritual and financial aims and the following committee was appointed to organize and carry out the plans for such in the district. Rev. A. J. Thomas, B. A. B. D., chairman, Rev S. T. Tucker, B A. B. D. of Millbrook, Mr. J. M. Green, of Peterborough, Mr. F. G Staples of Cavan, Mr. William Harper, of Lakefield, Mrs. Jas. Kendry of Peterborough, Mrs. S. S. Spence, of Lakefield.

But probably the most important work undertaken for the immediate future was the stand the district took on the impending referendum vote as embodied in their wide conclusive resolution which follows:

Resolved—That we heartily endorse the action of the Provincial and various local referendum committees in their plan to unite all churches' social and moral agencies throughout the province for a solid vote of four "No's" on the referendum ballot of October 20th.

2. That we urge all our pastors and workers to give their committees their fullest co-operation and support in every way possible.

3. That we request all our pastors to give special prominence to this matter especially on the three Sundays preceeding the vote.

4. That we welcome with unbounded confidence the coming vote of the women, knowing it will stand for the protection of the home, the welfare of the child and the continual deliverance of many who had fallen under old conditions, but today or sobre, respectful citizens.

5. That we urge all our church societies to participate in the educational work necessary to a correct marking of the ballot and the demonstration polling booths be conducted in co-operation with various referendum committees.

6. That continuous emphasis be placed on the absolute necessity of voting a full four no ballot. Keep to the right of your ballot and you will vote right. Place your crosses in the right hand column under the word NO.

EDITOR'S MAIL

MR. BURNHAM'S STAND.

Editor Review: What stand is the Federal member, Mr. J. H. Burnham, taking on the Referendum? Will you oblige me by answering?

READER.

Mr. Burnham, while opposed to the bar and what may be called the easy way of getting strong liquors that used to be, is opposed to the O. T. A. on the grounds that it allows the rich man have all he wants to import, but deprives the poor man who is not rich enough to import but whose family often need it most. He is opposed to it also because he considers the Act ignores the simple principles of liberty for those charged with offences under it, which it has taken centuries of struggling to gain. A selfish man, he says, will vote "no," but a fair minded man will not do so, but will ask for new and better legislation.

Booze Costs Years of Life

Insurance Records Prove Moderate Drinking Increases Death-rate 35%

FOR ages folly has accredited "a short life but a merry one" to those who made free with alcohol. Plain truth shows that the misery outweighs the "merriment." Life Insurance figures prove that the excess of deaths among moderate drinkers over abstainers runs from 11% to 74%.

And the highest percentage applies to men in the prime of life.

It is the business of Life Insurance Companies to know the risks a man takes when he uses liquor. Actuaries of the big companies, with access to records of many years and covering hundreds of thousands of lives, have tabulated your chances of death by the great law of averages. And these chances vary according to your use of alcohol.

Actuarial Comparison of Death Records

Ages	Total Abstainers	Moderate Drinkers	Excess Deaths Among Moderate Drinkers
20-30	4,221	4,617	11%
30-40	4,201	7,041	68%
40-50	6,246	10,861	74%
50-60	13,056	18,524	42%
60-70	29,078	34,568	19%

From tables prepared by R. H. Moore, Actuary of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Insurance Company, based on Records of over 60 years' experience.

These Insurance men have no theories to prove and no doctrine to preach. Their figures are as cold as ice, and they make you pay for the risks you run. To them it is simply business—a matter of dollars and cents. But to you it is a matter of life and death.

Are You Willing to Die Before Your Time for Sake of Booze?

BY actual experience of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Insurance Company covering a period of sixty years the number of deaths among moderate drinkers averaged 35% higher than among abstainers.

All insurance companies prefer risks upon lives of total abstainers. Some companies charge lower rates to abstainers. Other companies allot a larger share of the participating profits to policy-holders who abstain from alcohol.

Certain companies in Canada, several companies in the United States, England and elsewhere specialize on Temperance Insurance. Their records invariably show a lower percentage of deaths among abstainers, the average for the Canadian Companies being only 31.5% of ordinary expectation.

Every insurance company wants to know your alcoholic habits before issuing your life insurance policy. If you are and have been a drinker to excess, no Company will insure you.

If during the working years of your life you have habitually taken two glasses of whiskey per day or the alcoholic equivalent in beer or other intoxicating beverages, your chances of dying before your time are double those of total abstainers.

If when you apply for a policy your present alcoholic habits are satisfactory to the company, but your history records excessive drinking in the past, the company deducts four years from your life chances.

And it has been costing total abstainers yearly millions of dollars in premiums to help pay for excessive deaths among drinkers!

Ontario has suffered the loss of 25,000 men killed in battle. We have entered upon a period of Reconstruction. Human life is the nation's greatest asset. In the face of this enormous wastage Ontario cannot afford to lose a single life, or a single year or a day of life, because of beer or whiskey or any other form of alcoholic intoxicant. Ontario's men and women should be 100% efficient.

Vote "No" to repealing the Ontario Temperance Act. Vote "No" to 2.51% beer (equal to 5.46% proof spirits) in Government Liquor shops. Vote "No" to the sale of 2.51% beer (5.46% proof spirits) in standard Hotel Bars. Vote "No" to sale of whiskey, beer, and all spirituous and malted liquors in Government shops for consumption in the home.

Beer of the Ballot

The public should be warned that the Beer proposed in the ballot and described as "light" beer is intoxicating. It is 118% stronger than the beer allowed by the Ontario Temperance Act, and over five times as strong as the limit allowed for beer defined as non-intoxicating in Great Britain and the United States.

Beer 2.51% Alcohol by wright equals 5.46% Proof Spirits as compared to 2.50% proof spirits now permitted.

"The difference between those who drink beer and those who drink water is unmistakable, while the loss on beer drinkers has been almost the same as among wine and spirit drinkers"—From the report of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, New York, after an investigation of classified death records among policy holders over a period of fifteen years.

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

Answer every question on the Referendum Ballot with an X under the heading "No," and herein fail not, or your vote is lost to Temperance Progress.

MANY OFFICIALS TO BE SEEN

Official correspondence in Soviet Russia has a way of traveling for many long days and passing through numberless bureaus before it is acted upon. I met an agricultural expert in Moscow managing some communal estates in the country, who came to the capital to obtain the funds necessary for his work. It was May and every hour that he stayed away from the country was extremely valuable. When I saw him he had spent two weeks in Moscow, succeeding in drawing 35,000 rubles only after obtaining the signatures of seven officials and after wasting many days waiting in various reception rooms. He spoke bitterly of the Soviet bureaucracy, taking a very gloomy view of its consequences.

MAYOR McBRIDE DISSAPOINTED LABOUR MEETING BY NOT COMING

Missed Train Connections at Toronto and Sent His Regrets

To the great disappointment of the Labor sympathizers, War Veterans and many others, Mayor McBride of Brantford failed to put in an appearance at the meeting held in Victoria Hall last night. Two telegrams were recived from him, one sent at 2 p.m. yesterday saying he would arrive in the city at 8:20 and go at once to the meeting. At 7:30 another message was received from Mr. McBride saying the Brantford-Toronto train had been delayed and he had missed the connection for Peterborough.

Mr. Peter McArthur occupied the chair, and the local Labor men and farmers present made the best of the circumstances, endeavoring to start a movement for nominating a candidate for West Peterborough to represent the Independent Labor Party and the United Farmers.

T. TOOMS SPEAKS.

Mr. Tooms was the first speaker, and after reading the platform of the Labor party made a brief appeal for the Labor men to get in the fight. He stated that a Labor or a U. F. O. candidate had been nominated in every constituency in Ontario excepting Ottawa, Kingston and Peterborough. These candidates ould receive the combined suport of the two factions.

R. M. Scott Speaks.

Mr R. M. Scott was the next speaker. Like the former speaker, Mr. Scott had come to listen and not to speak and he had nothing prepared. He stated he felt like a fish out of water—a farmer at a Labor meeting. "But it should not be so; the farmer and the Labor man should have come together 35 years ago," declared Mr. Scott. He felt the farmers could do nothing alone, and the Labor men could do very little by themselves, but united they could make things very exciting for somebody. "The man we are after," declared Mr. Scott, "is the man who asks us to keep a family on $600 while he has difficulty in keeping his on $6000. We are after such men as Sir Joseph Flavelle," continued the speaker, "the man who asked the farmers to send their wives and daughters out to work. And they did it. But did Mr. Flavelle send his wife out to work? No; she had advertisements in the papers for maids to come and wait on her."

Mr. Lane spoke at considerable length, attacking the old party system. He started off with the words, "I am not an orator, but I will attempt to do something the old party orators failed to do—I will endeavor to tell you a few truths." (Applause.) He declared that the politicians were the big interests and would look after their own interests. He pleaded for the Labor men not to expect anything from the big interests, for "blessed are they who expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed." The speaker continued, "this is a day of combines, and it is time we were combined, too."

Attacks Combines.

Referring to the commissions the government had appointed, he compared them to a bunch of small boys who might have been chosen to make a big show, but do nothing. In conclusion Mr. Lane made an appeal for the nomination and support of a Labor candidate in the next provincial election.

Ald. Morrison, F. Astor and Tom McMurray also added a few words to what had already been said in favor of running a Labor candidate, and then Mr. E. N. McDonald, farmer candidate for the East Riding, came to the platform and delivered an address.

Producer and Consumer Unite.

Mr. McDonald thought it was time that the producer and consumer united to right the common wrongs imposed upon them by the big interests. At a place where he was not long ago, he was eating cheese. He asked his hostess how much she paid for the cheese and she replied 40 cts. per lb. This was not half a mile from a factory where the cheese was selling for 25 cents per lb. What the farmers and labourers want to know

"TELL THEM TO SEE ME" HE SAYS

WANTS EVERYBODY TO KNOW WHAT TANLAC DID FOR HIM GAINS 30 POUNDS.

"I don't believe there's any medicine on earth can equal this Tanlac," recently declared F. J. Richardson, a well known pattchman on the Rock Island, living at 60 South Fifteenth St., Kansas City, Mo.

"I've gained thirty seven pounds since taking it, and I feel stronger than I have for many years," he continued. "I suffered for a long time from stomach trouble and indigestion and I tell you, I sure had a time of it. I didn't have any appetite and what little I did force myself to eat would sour and form gas that would get up around my heart and smother me so I could hardly get my breath. I had terrible headaches and dizzy spells every now and then, and I had such a pain across the small of my back that it was all I could do to get up when I sat down. I just couldn't get a good night's rest and I lost a lot of time from work on account of the way I felt. Of course I took a lot of medicine but no matter what it was nothing did me any good.

"A few weeks ago I decided to try Tanlac and I hadn't taken one bottle when I began getting hungry and then I found what I ate didn't sour and form gas any more. Now I'm eating anything I want and never suffer from indigestion. I sleep sound all night long and get up in the morning feeling like a two year old and ready to tackle any kind of work. Yes, sir, I sure do think a lot of Tanlac. I've recommended it to several of my friends and whenever they have given it a fair trial, it's benefitted them just the same as me. As far as my own case is concerned, if anybody doubts what I say just tell 'em to see me and I'll prove what Tanlac has done."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. H. Warne Drug Co. Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood, by G. Pringle & Son.

TOM MOORE, DARING DRIVER, RACES AT SHEEPSHEAD BAY

Goldwyn Star Shows Mettle at Wheel in Thrilling Contest on Historic Course for Newest Picture "Thirty a Week," Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

A week after Ralph De Palma made is record run in the annual automobile racing classic at Sheepshead Bay, the historic racetrack and mecca of the country's horsemen in the heyday of the "sport of kings" was the scene of a thrilling motor race for one of the big incidents in Tom Moore's second Goldwyn starring vehicle, "Thirty a Week," from the successful play by Thompson Buchanan. And the popular screen artist demonstrates that he is as much at home at the wheel in the midst of stirring competition on a racing course as he is on a romantic love scene or at comedy.

Tom Moore has the role of Dan Murray, a chauffeur, in "Thirty a Week," which comes to the Grand Monday and Tuesday. Barbara Wright, his employer's pretty daughter, falls desperately in love with Dan and finally convinces him that the difference in their stations of society should not prevent their marriage. After the ceremony Dan and Barbara make their abode in a cosy flat. But her father who seeks an annulment of the marriage, brings them to poverty's door by having Dan dismissed from one position after another.

Larry Spencer, long a friend of Barbara and one of Dan's former employers, brings a ray of sunshine into the impoverished household. He asks Dan to take the place of his driver, who is ill, in the big automobile race and promises $500 if his car finishes among the first five. Dan, of course, gladly accepts, and sees visions of a beautiful gown and other costly apparel for Barbara.

Here is shown the famous Sheepshead Bay track with thousands of racing enthusiasts piling in for the big event. Then Dan is seen making the round of the course for a test, following which Dan and Spencer are depicted giving final instructions to the mechanician. The big race starts as the crowd rises as one man to cheer the drivers. Dan is slow at starting, but before five laps have been run shows the others he is a factor to be reckoned with.

A mishap to one of the riders at the turn forces many of the contestants to slow down, but not Dan, who is speeding yards away from the mix-up. Once again the crowd gets to its feet as the starter announces the last lap. Dan having reached sixth place at this point. Here a flash of the Spencer box is shown with the occupants throwing hats in the air as Dan overtakes the fifth man. Another burst of speed and Dan passes two others and is now in third place, a position he holds until the finish. Dan has earned the big reward.

"Huh!" is all the expression Tom Moore gave vent to as an admiring throng rushed to congratulate him back of the winning post. Harry Beaumont, director of "Thirty a Week," said more. "It was the closest thing to the real article that I or any other racing 'bug' ever saw," he said

MARGUERITE CLARK AT EMPIRE THEATRE

Those who saw Marguerite Clark in her famous Paramount picture "Miss George Washington" will be reminded of it by "Bab's Diary," the charming story by Mary Roberts Rhinehart of Bab, the "Sub-Deb," in the clever manner in which Miss Clark has portrayed the role of Bab, who, like "Miss George Washington," makes the discovery that we weave a "tangled web" indeed when first we practice to deceive. "Bab" is a fascinating girl with a vivid imagination and much surplus energy—which makes it hard for her family, but adds to the charm of a diary whose every page abounds in adventure and the realest kind of farce. "Bab's Diary" will appear on Sept. 22 and 23 at the Empire Theatre.

GREAT BLACK STONE IS BEWILDERING

IN A CLASS BY HIMSELF, HE WILL ASTOUND YOU TONIGHT AT THE GRAND

Watching the great Blackstone last night at the Grand made one doubt his sense of sight. To see doves, rabbits, ducks and chickens evolved out of nothing is enough to make anyone blink a little. Blackstone is in a class by himself and his exhibition was truly marvellous.

The performance opened by Blackstone transforming an ordinary pair of gloves into a dove and from then on he had the audience completely mystified. A handkerchief, which was borrowed from the audience, was made to dance a tango as well as several other unbelievable tricks. His presentation of spiritual phenomena including the hand of Cagliostro provided much amusement. The golden ball of Osiris defies the laws of gravity.

As a card manipulator Blackstone has few equals and some of the tricks he displayed last night filled the audience with wonder. He went hunting with a net and picked doves from space as fast as an attendant could put them into cages. Two men from the audience were called to assist the magician in one of his card tricks and even though they were on the stage at the time were as much bewildered as those in the audience.

The levitation of Princess Azrah is a most remarkable illusion. The young lady is placed upon a couch in full view of the house and covered with a light spread. Blackstone then makes a few passes over the recumbent form and it slowly starts to rise. After it has risen clear the couch is removed and to all appearances the lady is suspended in the air. A committee from the audience is asked to go upon the stage to see that there is no mechanical contrivance used in the illusion. They are asked to lift the lady from her position and move her to another place but as they are ready to do this Blackstone waves his hand and there is nothing there but the sheet which was placed over the object in the first place.

Blackstone is a most remarkable man and his performance at all times is most bewildering. A matinee will be given today as well as the regular evening performance and it is safe to say that all who see him will come away just as much in the dark as they were when they went. At any rate Blackstone is well worth seeing.

"National" ready-made clothing at the rate of 25,000 suits monthly will be put on the market in France, in the fight against the high cost of living.

MR. JAY J. ALLEN SAILING FOR EUROPE IN THE INTERESTS OF GOOD PICTURES.

Among the passengers that sailed on the steamship Aquitania was Mr Jay J. Allen, of Toronto, one of the principles of the Allen Theatre Enterprises which controls some sigty theatres either in actual operation or under construction in Canada. Mr. Allen goes abroad to make a study of motion picture conditions in England and other countries with a view to providing an even improved quality of English and other foreign makes of pictures for showing at his theatres in the Dominion.

"Almost since the beginning of our operations on a small scale," said Mr. Allen, to a New York representative, just before he sailed, "we have given special attention to the showing of our very best of English productions in Canada. Many of the pictures we first showed at our theatres in Canada afterwards scored big successes in the States. In fact, we believe that the activities of our company have been largely responsible for the interest that has been shown by exhibitors in the United States in British productions.

"For some time we have maintained in London our own representative whose sole concern is to view English product and to recommend the best to us. Canadians are familiar with many big English productions that we have shown recently and we have now in our Toronto vaults, and still to be shown in Canada for the first time, a number of big pictures which we have just bought. These will be a part of our big production policy for the fall and winter season.

"During my stay abroad I will get in close touch with the English producers and explain to them just what is wanted by Canadians in the way of motion pictures. I believe that the British makers of films are giving more attention than ever to the Canadian market and we want to co-operate with them so that they will be able to produce pictures that have the greatest possible interest to our people. One of the results of the Great War has been to bring our people closer together than ever with the mother country and we believe that the time is here when there should be the fullest possible business co-operation. The motion picture furnishes the rare opportunity of furnishing this business co-operation, together with the sentimental, as expressed in the cinema.

"I hope to be able to make some announcements on my return that will increase the already great interest in motion pictures in Canada.

One of the big British pictures referred to has recently been shown at the local Allen Theatre in "Sporting Life." Many of the patrons have asked when the Allen will show another of our Mother country releases, and the manager expects to be able to make a definite announcement in the near future.

"THAT'S THE STORY," QUOTH MR. WASHBURN

Sometime ago Bryant Washburn read a splendid story in the "Saturday Evening Post," and it impressed him greatly.

"There's a story I want to do on the screen," said Bryant enthusiastically. "I can just see the character, Arthur McArney, the $21 a week clerk. I want to play him."

The result was that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation bought the picture rights from Ida M. Evans the author, and under the title of "The Way of a Man with a Maid," the story will be seen as Washburn's Paramount starring vehicle at the Allen Theatre today.

Ida M. Evans, the author, is a widely known writer who lives in Chicago. Several years ago she was engaged in the notions and millinery business in that city, and she was starting to write stories about the clerks and stenographers that she knew well. The stories were unusual in plot and development, but more than that, they became popular with a large number of readers.

Ida M. Evans has been compared to O. Henry in her original fresh way of handling story material. But really she has created stories that are distinctly her own and "The Way of a Man With a Maid" is one of her best.

"MICKEY" AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE SHORTLY

The public is "fed up" on war plays, on vampire stories, and the people want to laugh. They want relaxation for their strained nerves, and just at the right moment along comes "Mickey" the little girl you will never forget. A tear-stained world is laughing with "Mickey" the little tomboy from the mountain country, with her pranks, mischievous eyes, and magnetic smile, a super-production that is making a great hit. "Mickey" will appear soon at the Grand, with matinee.

PAINFUL RHUEMATISM

MAY BE DRIVEN OUT OF THE SYSTEM BY ENRICHING THE BLOOD.

In the days of our fathers and grand fathers rheumatism was thought to be the unavoidable penalty of middle life and old age. Almost every elderly person had rheumatism, as well as many young people. Medical science did not understand the trouble—did did not know that it was rooted in the blood. It was thought that rheumatism was the mere effect of exposure to cold and damp and it was treated with liniments and hot applications, which sometimes gave temporary relief, but did not cure the trouble. In those days there were thousands of rheumatic cripples. Now, medical science understands that rheumatism is a disease of the blood, and that with good, rich, red blood any man or woman of any age can defy rheumatism, can be cured by killing the poison in the blood which causes it. There are many elderly people who have never felt a twinge of rheumatism, and many who have conquered it by simply keeping their blood rich and pure. The blood making, blood enriching qualities of Dr. Williams Pink Pills is becoming every year more widely known, and it is the more general use of these pills that has robbed rheumatism of its terrors. At the first sign of poor blood, which is shown by loss of appetite, palpitations, dull skin and dim eyes, protect yourself against the further ravages of disease by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They have cured thousands of people—if you give them a fair trial they will not disappoint you.

You can get these pils through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 form The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A syndicate of English sportsmen offers a purse of $150,000 for a match in London between Dempsey and Beckett in April. Dempsey has been barred in Cincinnati, where he is described as a "prize fighter," and not a "boxer."

MACK SENNETT'S BIG FILM FEATURE

JACK CANUCK IN BERLIN. — LIVING BEAUTIES TO ACCOMPANY MOTION PICTURES AT GRAND

For the first time in the history of the theatre, a conjunction has been formed between the eloquence of the silent motion picture and the appeal of palpitating, living, human participants. The result, a dazzling combination of beauty and convulsing filmed satire, arousing patriotism, will be offered at the Grand Opera House, Thursday and Friday October 2nd. and 3rd.

Mack Sennett's biggest film feature, "Jack Canuck in Berlin," greater indeed in power, scope and significance than his recent success, "Mickey" will be shown. Accompanying the picture and appearing in person in an alluring stage performance will be the pick of the Mack Sennett beauties—the girls whose presence in the Sennett "two reelers" has carried the gospel of good health, grace and charm to the four corners of the earth.

With the addition of the celebrated Sennett beauties, the entertainment becomes irresistible in quality. This is the first time they have ever been seen on any stage, it having been, till now, Mr. Sennett's policy to confine the professional activities of these beautiful girls to the arduous duties of the studio. His consent to this proposed tour was secured upon reasonable representations. It was pointed out there was a natural desire on the part of the great public that had so long been loyal to his picture creations, to see in person those specimens of clean-limbed, radiantly wholesome girls as they really are when the camera catches them in piquant posings for his "Two-reelers."

As to "Jack Canuck in Berlin," it is a picture that ought to be seen by everyone of no matter what political leaning, for its story is "Pure Canadianism," its message is pure satire and farce and its story is pure fun—with something after the laugh is done to cause the brows to knit in thought.

National Steel Car, Atlantic Sugar and other industrials made strong advances on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Mr. ROBT. HICKS HAS INSTALLED NEW STYLE OF GASOLINE PUMP

Gasoline Comes From Glass Container in Full View of Purchaser

The newest thing in gasoline pumps and one which will prove a source of satisfaction to the automobilist is that recently installed by The Robert Hicks Co., at 264 Charlotte street. It is an electrically operated pump and the gasoline is measured in full view of the purchaser before it is put into the car.

Mr. Hicks stated that the reason he purchased this pump was to overcome the feeling of dissatisfaction caused by the old style pumps in that the gasoline user was never positive that he was getting correct measure. With the new pump there is absolutely no chance of a dispute in this regard. The gasoline is first measured into a glass tank at the top of the pump standard in any quantity from one to five gallons and from there it passes through a rubber tube into the car.

Mr. Hicks first saw this style of pump in an American city and being convinced of its efficacy decided to purchase one. He had comparison made between this pump and the ordinary kind and while 55 per cent of the old pumps were found to be defective the new style showed 100 per cent perfection.

Mr. Hicks will be pleased to demonstrate this pump to motorists, and other users of gasoline and an absolute guarantee of measures is given with every sale of gasoline.

WRITTEN 50 YEARS AGO "LITTLE WOMEN" IS SWEET AS EVER

FOUR SAM ALCOTT'S FAMOUS STORY WILL BE SEEN HERE IN PICTURE FORM AT THE ALLEN THEATRE TODAY.

One of the most charming adaptations of well known stories to the screen is "Little Women," the famous novel written by Louisa M. Alcott, fifty years ago, which is now released as a Paramount-Artcraft special picture. It is a delightful photoplay and is shown at the Allen Theatre today only. The four famous "little women"—Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy have been visualized with delightful effect and all who have read the story will find the picture excellent in every way.

The photoplay presents every prominent character of the novel and all will be instantly recognized by Miss Alcott's admirers. Sweet, gentle Jo, whose sacrifice of her wonderful hair, so that her mother might have money for the journey to Washington to see the father lying ill there, is appealingly played by Dorothy Bernard. Meg, who marries John Brooke after she waited while he fights the battles of the Union, comes to life in the person of Isabel Lamon, and Henry Hull is Brooke. Beth and Amy are played by Lillian Hall and Florence Flim respectively.

The scenes of the story were photographed in and about the Alcott home in Concord, Mass., where "Little Women" was written, and these lend great attractiveness to the picture. The home of Ralph Waldo Emerson also is shown in this respect, the picture is of great educational value. Harley Knoles, who directed the production, has provided a splendid cast of players to interpret the various roles, so that from this standpoint as well as all others, the photoplay doubtless will attract widespread attention.

PLAIN STATEMENTS BY THE CITIZENS' LIBERTY LEAGUE

The Citizens' Liberty League is not dominated by selfish interests, nor has it any undisclosed purpose to serve.

The League is composed solely of men and women throughout Ontario who believe that the Ontario Temperance Act is unsatisfactory and that new legislation more in keeping with the wishes and needs of all classes should be enacted.

The Citizens' Liberty League is in accord with the Ontario Temperance Act in so far as it prohibits the unrestricted sale of spirituous liquors. The League is absolutely opposed to the return of the old license system.

What the League wants is:—That the Ontario Temperance Act be repealed and a new Act passed which would make provisions for the general sale of more palatable, non-intoxicating beer (containing 2.51% alcohol by weight), light wine; and the sale of pure spirituous liquors under proper Government control.

You are asked to vote for the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act because the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act does not mean a return to the general sale of spirituous liquors, as the Premier, in his speech of April 7th, said: "Now, practically no one suggests a return to old conditions. The distillers in a recent manifesto say that they themselves are opposed to it. Many hotelkeepers say they are opposed to it. The brewers say they are opposed to it. Honorable gentlemen in the House and the people out of the House who are opposed to the present Act, say they are equally opposed to the old order. The labor men who ask for stronger beer say they don't want the sale of hard liquor."

The Premier and the Government, realizing this, would not be parties to a continuance of the general sale of spirits as under the old license system, but would amend the License Act in accord with public sentiment. This would be in keeping with the policy of the Provincial Governments of the past fourteen years, which have from time to time amended the License Act to conform to the wishes of the people. To vote "Yes" to question number one would enable the Government to provide for the sale of beer and light wines in the hotels, and beer and spirits in Government stores for home consumption.

Therefore the only thing to be done is to wipe out the unsatisfactory Ontario Temperance Act and thus enable the Government to bring in new legislation more in keeping with the wishes of the people.

Be sure to vote "Yes" to Question No. 1 for that will be your guarantee that proper consideration will be given to your vote in Questions 2, 3, and 4.

Vote "YES" on All Four Questions

Remember:—Every voter must vote on every question or his ballot will be spoiled.

FOUND GUILTY OF NEGLECT

THREE YEARS' PUNISHMENT FOR MAN WHO ALLOWED A SERIOUS SITUATION TO DEVELOP.

Failure to take proper precautions has been responsible for many deaths, and is the cause of much suffering and hardship to-day.

Take the case of Wm. Dunn, 313 Gerrard St. East, Toronto, Ont. Mr. Dunn was a chronic rheumatic sufferer for ten years. Three years of that ten he spent in bed suffering indescribable torture. Picture the joy of this man on finding that Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules were restoring him to normal health again. Here are a few extracts from his letter to us: "During the past ten years I have been laid up with Rheumatism. One attack confined me to my bed for a year, and a second attack left me helpless for over two years. After I had tried almost everything, a friend got me a box of T.R.C.'s, and a few doses convinced me that I had at last found the proper remedy for my trouble. T.R.C.'s improved my condition rapidly, and I feel that had it not been for T.R.C.'s I should have been laid up for years."

Ask your Druggist or write us for our new booklet; it is interesting and costs you nothing (Templetons, 142 King West, Toronto). We mail T.R.C.'s anywhere on receipt of $1.60.

THE YOUNG FAMILY HOLD A REUNION

OCCASION OF THE 82ND BIRTHDAY OF MRS. NEIL McDONALD—FAMILY HISTORY.

A very interesting gathering of the Young family of Smith Township was held at the home of Mrs. William Paul on Thursday, September 18. The occasion was the 82nd birthday of Mrs. Neil McDonald of Peterborough, who, with her brother, Mr. Thomas Young, her sister, Mrs. Paul, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. John Young, received the felicitations of their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. A story of the settlement in Canada of the family was read by Miss Irene Young, and many congratulatory letters and telegrams from members of the family in Canada and in the United States were also heard with pleasure. A sumptuous repast was spread, at which over ninety guests were served. The evening was spent very enjoyably in music and games. Among the interesting relics on exhibition was a piece of bread, left at his home when finishing his last meal there by the late Thomas Young. It was preserved by his mother and sent over years afterwards. It is as hard as stone and is so porous in appearance as to resemble a sponge. Two beautiful shawls were shown, one of silk and one of cashmere, which graced the shoulders of two of the brides of the family in the early days, and also a pen and ink portrait of the pioneer's mother which is a treasured possession of the family on account of its great age. Mr. Roy photographed the group on the lawn.

Mrs. Young's story was as follows:

Dear Friends,—

We are gathered here today as a family under very happy circumstances. It is a rare occasion for us and should be remembered as one of the best family gatherings of our lives. We are all interested in the stories of the past, and what should interest us more, both young and old, than the story of the founder of this family in Canada, the late Thomas Young, of Northumberland England?

This pioneer left England in March of 1832, accompanied by his wife and five children, and after eleven weary weeks of sailing, landed in Canada on June 2 of that year. The journey inland was made on a boat drawn up the St. Lawrence River by oxen which walked along the bank. During the voyage cholera had broken out on board, and upon reaching Prescott one of the children, a bright little girl, died, and was buried there. By the time the party reached Port Hope Mrs. Young's father, Mr. Edminson, who also accompanied them, had become so ill that they were obliged to care for him in a barn near by, until he also died. To facilitate matters, Mrs. Young and her children proceeded to Peterborough, to the home of her brother, who was living on the old Edminson farm north of Jackson Park, leaving her husband to care for her father. Before Mr. Young reached Peterborough two of the little boys had died, leaving only two children to the bereaved parents.

Mr. Young took up land lying along Chemong Lake, where his son Thomas, of Charlotte street, Peterborough, resided until a few years ago. During eleven years of the pioneer's life here he taught the old Fourth Line school on the site where his great-grandchildren are now getting their Public school training. His salary was $130 a year, providing he took only one month off to take off his harvest, and $10 less if he required two months in the summer to attend to his farming operations. The school year in those days included every alternate Saturday.

Mrs. Young only survived the rigors of Canadian pioneer life for nine years, leaving at her death six children. Mr. Young died in the year 1864 at the age of 63 years.

Now, it is to do honor to the surviving members of this family that we are gathered here today. To Mr. Thomas Young, to Mrs. Neil McDonald, whose 82nd birthday we are celebrating; to Mrs. Wm. Paul and to Mrs. John Young, of Peterborough, sister-in-law of these, we offer our heartiest congratulations. We are happy indeed to have them with us, and we hope they may be spared to come and go amongst us for many years.

Many of our kin are in the distant West, and we know they are with us in thought today. We wish to acknowledge their kindly greetings and to reciprocate their best wishes for the future.

We are proud to recall the fact that during the recent great war ten great-grandsons of this family saw active service overseas. Several of them bears cars won in the field of battle. One is still with the aviation corps at Archangel, Russia, and two made the supreme sacrifice: Cecil Young, of Alexander, Man., being killed in action at Vimy Ridge in April, 1917, and Burrit Bell, Smith Township, killed in action near Valenciennes on Nov. 4, 1918. To the parents of these boys we offer honor that the boys of our family went forward at the first call with the best blood of Canada, and to the mourners we would say, "Our hearts grieve as you grieve, yet with pride, because we know that these were worthy of Canada who died for her and we feel we must strive to be worthy of them."

And now, before closing, we must welcome the new comers to our family circle. We believe we are indebted to a young fellow by the name of Cupid for several of these in recent years, and our welcome is even more hearty to the recent additions brought to us by Mr. Stork. May these little ones grow up to love truth and to follow wisdom, for "Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace."

A woman's strength lies in her weakness.

MARRIED

WHITE — REID — On Saturday, Sept. 20, 1919, at Parkview Apartments, Murray street, by Rev. F. E. Malott, Margaret (Retta) and Harry E. White.

THE British are noted as great tea drinkers and are naturally good judges of tea.

So when we learn that over 70% of the tea used in Great Britain is Indian tea we can be sure that Indian tea is of the very best quality.

In Canada the preference for Indian tea has become just as strong, as evidenced by the success of Red Rose Tea which consists chiefly of ASSAMS—the richest and strongest of Indian teas.

Red Rose is always sold in sealed packages.

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea"

NATION-WIDE STRIKE OF THE AMERICAN STEEL WORKERS STARTED AT MIDNIGHT

Struggle Between Organized Labor and Employers is in Full Swing Today—Mounted Pennsylvania State Police and Volunteer Guards Are Patrolling the Streets of Pittsburg.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburg, Sept. 22. — The struggle between Organized Labor and the employers in the steel industry was in full swing today. In the Pittsburg and nearby districts many thousands of men obeyed the orders of their leaders and failed to report when the whistles blew for the day shifts to go to work. How many joined in the walkout, and with what degree of effectiveness the strike was initiated was not known definitely by either side in the contest. The early hours of the day found mill guards, borough and city police, mounted Pennsylvania State police, volunteer guards, deputy sheriffs, detectives and other guardians of the law on duty for any emergency.

No Figures Available.

Chicago, Sept. 22. — Numbers of workers in the plants of the United States Steel Corporation at Gary, South Chicago, Joliette and Indiana Harbor, all in the Chicago district, at midnight joined in the nation wide strike of steel workers called for this morning; but early today neither union representatives nor officials of the company were prepared to give any figures.

In Good Shape.

Pittsburg, Sept. 22. — "We got away in good shape at most of our plants in and about Pittsburg this morning," said a representative of the Carnegie Steel Co., when asked for a statement on the effect of the steel workers' strike, which went into effect today.

"We are agreeably surprised at the showing made," was the announcement by William S. Foster, secretary of the national committee for organizing the iron and steel workers, who is in charge of the Pittsburg district.

Conflicting Claims.

The preliminary skirmish in the great industrial struggle, which opened today between Labor unions and the United States Steel Corporation, which directly or indirectly affects half a million wage-earners, produced the usual conflicting claims by the generals on both sides, in great strategic centres of struggle

Thousands Walked Out.

In Chicago and Pittsburg districts many thousands of workers obeyed the strike order, but early reports stated that comparatively few plants had been compelled to close Smaller plants reported they were operating as usual. Elbert H. Gory, chairman of Board of Directors of the United States Steel Corporation, refused to make any comment. Secretary Foster of the Steel Workers' Union, issued a statement expressing satisfaction with the outlook and claiming that reports from outside the Pittsburg district showed that the shut-down was general, an important feature of the situation was an announcement by representatives of 35,000 workers employed by the Bethlehem Steel Co that there men would not now join the strike, pending an attempt to obtain a conference with the company officials.

Big Mills Close.

Chicago, Sept 22.—The steel mills at South Chicago of the Illinois Steel Co. closed this morning, only a few foremen remaining in to draw the fires in the furnaces.

95 Per Cent. Quit.

It was estimated by union officials that 95 per cent. of the four thousand men on the day shift in the plant failed to report for work. No official figures were given out by the company. At the Illinois Steel Co plant in Milwaukee 800 of the 1,800 day workers failed to report, say union officials.

Seamen Strike.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 22.—According to officials of the Lake Seamen's Union here, union sailors at this port this morning, quit several steel corporation freighters at the docks, refusing to work on the boats. No estimate of the number of men affected was given out.

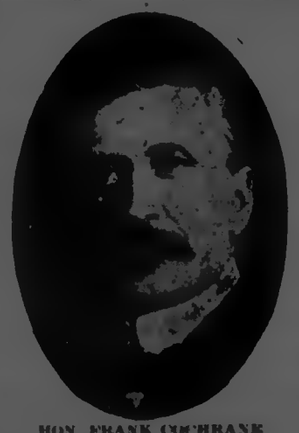
HONORABLE FRANK COCHRANE DEAD

FORMER MINISTER RAILWAYS AND CANALS PASSED AWAY IN OTTAWA THIS MORN.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 22 Hon Frank Cochrane, M.P. for Temiskaming, died at 3.50 o'clock this morning after a lingering illness The flag on Parliament buildings is half-masted owing to the death of the former cabinet minister.

Although a man of quiet habits who rarely spoke in Parliamtnt, Mr Cochrane was exceedingly popular with the members of parliament, and their regret because of his death is sincere In 1917 Mr. Cochrane's health was not of the best, and when



HON. FRANK COCHRANE

Sir Robert Borden was forming a Union Government he placed his resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister in order to make way for a Liberal Unionist. Sir Robert, however, anxious to retain his ripe judgment and advice, insisted on his remaining in the Cabinet without portfolio Since then, however, his health failed rapidly, and those who were most intimate with him say that the early death of his favorite son, who had served overseas, hastened his end. Since his retirement from the Cabinet, Mr. Cochrane was been chairman of the Government Railway Board.

The late Mr. Cochrane was born at Clarenceville, Que., in 1852, and he is survived by Mrs. Cochrane Before coming to Ottawa, Mr. Cochrane was prominently identified with Ontario politics, and a member of the Government of Sir James Whitney

The deceased Minister was educated in the Separate School at St Thomas, Que He was elected to the Ontario Legislature for East Nipissing by acclamation in a bye-election, May 30, 1908; re-elected for Sudbury June (1908; appointed Minister of Lands and Mines under the Whitney Administration May 30, 1905; sworn of the Privy Council for Canada and appointed Minister of Railways and Canals October 10 1917; elected for Nipissing by acclamation in a bye-election November 8, 1911 He was a consistent Conservative in politics and a Methodist by faith

EXTENDING ZONE OF OCCUPATION

TROOPS OF GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO PENETRATE INTO JUGO-SLAV TERRITORY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 22.—Troops under Gabriele D'Annunzio, the insurgent Italian commander at Fiume, have began extending their zone of occupation into Jugo-Slav territory, according to the Jugo-Slav delegation in Paris. They penetrated seven miles into Jugo-Slavia on Thursday, occupying the heights at Risniak dominating the surrounding country. The Jugo-Slavs did not clash with D'Annunzio's forces executing this movement, the delegation stated.

ADMIRAL KOLCHAK RESIGNS HIS TITLE

NO LONGER CHIEF RULER OF ALL RUSSIA—GEN. DENIKESE HIS SUCCESSOR.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 22.—Admiral Kolchak, head of the all-Russian government at Omsk, has informed the Allies that he resigns the title of chief ruler to Gen. Denekine, leader of the anti-Bolshevik forces in Southern Russia, according to a wireless despatch sent out by the soviet government at Moscow. The message admits that the Bolsheviki have abandoned Kursk after severe fighting against Gen. Denkine's troops

WHOLE WORLD IS UNDER THAT PARTIAL PARALYSIS CHARACTERISTIC OF PANIC

President Wilson Declares Trade Awaits America's Action on Peace Treaty—Answers Five Questions Put by Labor—League Great Hope of Ireland and Will Solve Chinese Tangle.

President Wilson made two set speeches at Oakland, California, one to the leading business men of San Francisco and another to a mixed audience. His audiences were friendly in both places. He arose late and a sightseeing trip of the city, arranged in advance for him, was ordered cancelled.

Because of the character of his audience the President laid stress on his argument that business will suffer unless the treaty should be immediately ratified. He said the whole world was at the present time "under the partial paralysis, that is characteristic of a panic." He declared that business men were fearful to invest money because they did not know whether or not it would be safe and he asserted that "we cannot arrange a single element of our business until we have peace and until we know whether we are to deal with a friendly or unfriendly world."

He repeated a portion of his address at Tacoma wherein he recited the statistics of the war, and wound up with this statement:

"Seven and one half million men dead—because we could not have arbitration and discussion."

Earlier in the day he met and answered five questions addressed to him by the Regional Executive Committee of the League to Enforce Peace. He said:

Great Britain could not outvote the United States in the league.

Foreign Governments could not under the covenant order American troops abroad

The league would have a powerful influence toward restoration of Shantung to China.

The United States would not be obligated by Article 10 to aid Great Britain in suppressing a revolt in Ireland

That under Article 11, there would be created a new forum for questions of self determination.

Mr Wilson's statement containing the questions and answers follows:

1.—Will you state the underlying consideration which dictated an awarding of six votes to the British Empire in the Assembly, and is it true that Great Britain will outvote us in the League of Nations and thereby control the league's action?

Answer—The consideration which led to assigning six votes to self-governing portions of the British Empire was that they have in effect, in all but foreign policies, become autonomous self-governing states, their policy in all but foreign affairs, being independent of the control of the British Government and in many respects dissimilar from it. But it is not true that the British Empire can outvote us in the League of Nations and therefore control the action of the League, because in every matter except the admission of new members in the league, no action can be taken without the concurrence of a unanimous vote of the representatives of the states which

HOW YOU ARE TO VOTE?

There appears to be a great deal of confusion as to the Temperance Referendum Act and many apparently intelligent persons are in doubt as to how to vote. This confusion is added to both by the ultra temperance advocates and the so-called Liberty League. One says vote no to all the questions and the other to vote yes and it is suggested that if this is not done there will be a spoiled ballot This is quite wrong, but it is necessary to vote yes or no to each question. If the voter thinks that the Temperance Act should be retained but amended so as to permit the sale of light beers through Government agencies he can vote no to the first question and yes to the second. If he thinks that light beer should be sold also in standard hotels, he can still vote no to the first question and yes to the second and third questions, or if he thinks that hotels should not be authorized to sell even light beer he can vote no to the third question instead of yes. If he thinks that in addition to light beer spirituous liquor should be sold by Government agencies, he can still vote no to the first fuestion, yes to the second, yes or no to the third and yes to the fourth

He must, however, vote either yes or no to all the suggestions or his ballot will not be counted

Persons who wish to make sure that there shall be no bars in hotels should vote no to the first and third questions no matter in what way they vote on the other questions and persons who think that bars should remain closed but that they should be allowed to purchase beer and spirituous liquor from Government agencies should vote no to the first and third questions and yes to the second and fourth If the majority of the voters vote yes to the first question the Ontario Temperance Act will be repealed and the Liquor License Act will be revived; that is the old system of licensed hotels with open bars will come in again

If the Ontario Temperance Act is not repealed, but a majority of the voters are in favor of the sale of Government agencies these are to be established by the Board of License Commissioners

THIRTY-FIFTH ANNUAL TRADES AND LABOR CONGRESS OF CANADA

Opened at Hamilton This Morning With Eight Hundred Delegates Present—Practically Every Organized Craft in Dominion Represented—Matters of Vital Importance To Be Discussed.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Hamilton, Sept. 22. — Welcomed by Sir William Hearst, premier of Ontario, Hon. G. D. Robertson, Minister of Labor, and Mayor G. C. Booker, of Hamilton, nearly eight hundred delegates, representing practically every organized craft in the Dominion, commenced the inaugural session of the thirty-fifth annual Trades and Labor Congress of Canada this morning.

Most Important in History.

All the delegates agree that this session will be the most important in the history of Canadian organized labor, as matters of vital importance to workingmen throughout the Dominion are on the program, and discussions are expected to be protracted. Probably the most important matters on the order paper are the eight-hour day, minimum wages, and the policy of the Congress on the one big union. Questions under consideration at the Industrial Conference will again be taken up by the labor delegates. It is expected that fifty women delegates will attend the sessions. Ben Tillett, M.P., is attending on behalf of the British Trades Union Congress.

Mayor Booker, in his address of welcome, called attention to the great questions the delegates would be called upon to consider, urging them to do their utmost to allay the spirit of unrest prevailing at the present time. During the course of his remarks the mayor referred to Samuel Gompers, and mention of the president of the A. F. of L. evoked cries of "No" from a few members. The storm of applause drowned the cries of those who protested, however.

Paying tribute to the part played by Organized Labor in the war, Sir William Hearst said he was confident that Canadians could develop a country which would be worthy of the blood shed by the manhood of the Dominion.

BALLOON BURSTS AT LINDSAY FAIR

BALLOONIST BONNETT HAD MIRACULOUS ESCAPE WHEN HE FELT 150 FEET.

INJURIES NOT VERY SERIOUS

WAS ABLE TO LEAVE LINDSAY AT NIGHT IN SPITE OF THE SHAKING UP.

Balloonist Bonnette, who made ascensions daily at the Exhibition in this city, had a miraculous escape from death in Lindsay on Saturday afternoon

Bonnette was sailing nicely in a quiet breeze between 100 and 150 feet from the ground late Saturday afternoon, when for some unaccountable reason, one side of his balloon split open and the gas bag fell heavily to the ground below Of course, on account of the altitude and suddenness of the accident Bonnette was unable to make use of his parachute and, trusting solely to Providence descended very rapidly and fell in a corn field not far distant from the Fair grounds.

The event caused much excitement among the populace of Lindsay, and wild rumors about the daring balloonist being killed and having his spine broken were quickly circulated, some even reaching this

THE BANK OF TORONTO

MAKES IMPORTANT PURCHASE OF PROPERTY IN PETERBORO.

It is announced that the Bank of Toronto has purchased the block at the southeast corner of George and Hunter street, in which their banking office has been located for many years. The property has a frontage on George street of 50 feet, with a depth on Hunter street of 75 feet, and is regarded as one of the best business corners in the city of Peterborough.

It is the intention of the bank to remodel and enlarge their banking office as soon as other leases on the property expire

The Bank of Toronto is the oldest Canadian bank having its head office in the Province of Ontario, and the branch at Peterborough was one of the first established, having been opened 63 years ago During this long period the bank has been intimated with the growth and development of the city and surrounding country, supplying a service which has greatly contributed to its present prosperity Their many customers and friends will be glad to learn that their present quarters, which they have long out-grown, are to be replaced by others in keeping with their position and business in the city

The bank now has a paid-up capital of $5,000,000 and reserves of $6,625,693, and, although it has branches throughout the entire width of the Dominion, and has of recent years expanded most rapidly in the West, its greatest strength is still in Ontario, where 79 of its 154 branches are located. Mr Thos F How is general manager of the bank and Mr F J H. Vanston manager of the Peterborough branch.

TRUE BILLS IN BIG U.S. SWINDLE PLOT

TWENTY-THREE OF FRENCH GANG ARE INDICTED FOR FRAUD.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Eight indictments charging twenty-three men with conspiracy to defraud investors, embezzlement and operation of a "con" game, were returned before Chief Justice Crowe in the Criminal Court Bonds were fixed in the sum of $10,000 for each indictment

Charles W. French, alleged leader of the gang of de luye swindlers, with four indictments against him, is being held under a $40,000 bond. In the case of George R. Kent, former cashier of the Bank of Commerce and Savings, four individual indictments were brought, in addition to four upon the general charges for which the others are being held. Bonds for these were fixed at $5,000, making Kent's total bond $60,000.

Attorney Henry A. Berger, counsel for the bank, who is aiding the state, was relieved this morning when one of the grand jurors handed him a bundle of notes, with a purported face value of $80,000, which had disappeared after the grand jury session last night. They were issued by the "Quaker Finance Company" one of the concerns floated by the swindlers, and were to be used as evidence.

"I was interested in the manner in which these were drawn and took them home to study them," said the juror, whose name was not revealed in explanation.

Berger Uncovers Evidence.

French and some of his companions were arrested recently at a conference The operations of the gang were exposed through the efforts of former Assistant State's Attorney Henry A. Berger, acting as private counsel for the Bank of Commerce and Savings, which was defrauded of $30,000 by George R. Kent formerly cashier of that institution. In his investigation Attorney Berger uncovered the evidence which yesterday brought about the indictment of those involved

Among those named in the true bills and the position held by each are:

Charles W. French, leader of the alleged gang

Alva E. Harsham, president of the American Transit Company.

Charles W. Donicke, agent for

NEW VETERANS' ASSOCIATION ORGANIZED IN TORONTO SATURDAY

Mass Meeting in Queens' Park Will Take Political Action to Secure Gratuity.

Toornto Sept' 21—A new veterans' association, bearing the name of the United Veterans' League was organized on Saturday afternoon in Queen's Park as a result of the mass meeting held under the auspices of the Gratuity League. The inauguration of the new association was attended by unique features, principal among these being the fact that this is the first orginization of its kind to be formed in the open.

The turn-out of supporters of the $2000 grant must indeed have been gratifying to the officials in charge of the meeting, for over 2500 persons met in the immediate vicinity of the grand stand in the rear of the parliament buildings. There was a sprinkling of women included in the assembly and a number of children A noticeable fact was that few badges of the Great War Veterans Association were in evidence. The majority of those present wore the solitary brass button, denoting service overseas although a number of G. A. C. buttons were worn. What few G. W. V. A. buttons there considerably at the close of the meetwere in the audience were diminished when the owners discarded them before signing their names to the new charter.

Only one veteran organization availed itself of the invitation sent out by the Gratuity League to delegate a representative to the meeting armed with its charter. W. J. Carmichael Dominion organizer of the Grand Army of Canada was appointed by that association to outline the points of his institution for the benefit of the gathering Two other societies—the Army and Navy Veteran and and the Veterans League—were represented by letters, which were read by J. Harry Flynn to the meeting. Both letters pleaded that the notice given them was too short to put the matter before their executive in order to decide on the question.

W. J. Carmichael on behalf of his association, stated that the G. A. C. was willing to abide by the decision of the mass. He declared that in the event of the other veteran organizations casting their charters in favor of the Dominion-wide organization, the Grand Army of Canada would go with them. He pointed out that the association had the welfare of the soldiers at heart which was apparent by the constitution

The original officers and executive of the Gratuity League were reappointed in their old positions without a dissenting voice. There was one addition, however Mayor Church was elected to the position of acting treasurer.

Referring to the non-appearance of a representative from the G. W. V. A. Mr. Flynn stated that if they had the right spirit they would throw into the ditch all they had as an association.

"When they say they will not have anything to do with the Gratuity League they will have nothing to do with the returned man generally" he declared.

Proposing that the new organization draw up a new constitution, Mr Flynn sugested that a clause be inserted to the effect that no matter could be decided upon without first obtaining a two-thirds vote of all the members.

NATIONALS WANT THEIR INDEPENDENCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cape Town, S. A., Sept. 22 —Gen Hertzog, speaking at the Nationalist meeting, replied to the appeal of Premier Smits for unity. Hertzog declared that the Nationalists desired eventual complete independence from Great Britain, and could not co-operate with Premier Smuts if it meant the abandonment of this ideal

NEW WORLD GOSPEL.

THE EYES of the whole world are focussed on the British Empire and the United States to so act in concord that a reversion of the old world to pre-war selfish and demoralizing social conditions shall not be possible. A brotherhood of man and of nations, in which honest labor shall be suitably rewarded and indolence suffer, is the keynote of both President Wilson's and Premier Lloyd George's recent speeches, a world reflection of that international brotherhood between the great Anglo-Saxon races generated by Hun brutality and disregard for the laws of God or man. The Germans fought for domination of super-man, the British and French for a new world regime under a super-brotherhood, and let us hope that this new ideal will bring forth fruit and multiply in the four corners of the earth.

Lloyd George, says the New York Commercial, has contributed a new gospel to the world; at least he has wrought into new form the gospel whereby the new world must live. The Premier, in his message to the people of Great Britain, displays a remarkably keen and sympathetic insight into the principles that underlie the relationships which must control society if it ever is to approach the point where charitableness, not selfishness, greed and envy, shall be the mainspring of men's actions. He pictures with short, vivid strokes of his pen the deplorable conditions under which the old world lived and toiled, revealing in naked outline the vicissitudes that were the rewards of the myriads whose golden labors made life worth living, despite its seeming hopelessness. By contrast he shows how ignorance and selfishness vaunted themselves in the prodigality of nature's wealth and permitted penury and wretchedness to come to multitudes of humble homes. Then, in prophetic vein, he pronounces the doom that must attend a renewal of "the lease of that world," saying, "We shall store up retribution for ourselves and our children."

Without circumlocution, but direct and in the conviction that there can be no gainsaying it, the Premier proclaims "the old world must and will come to an end." Its construction has weakened; it totters—nothing we do can support the structure much longer. Those who seek to maintain it will be overwhelmed and their households plunged in ruin. So "it should be the sublime duty of all, without thought of partizanship, to help in the building up of the new world, where honest labor shall have its just reward and indolence alone shall suffer want"

Here is a message, forceful, authoritative, from one who, like President Wilson, is great enough of soul to tread the ground where many fear to venture. Lloyd George and President Wilson see beyond the mere controversy between labor and capital, which in the minds of most is some vain discord to be brought into harmony; they strike at the root of societys greatest evil; they would have mankind live by the Golden Rule and cease to seek class advantage, whereby one element becomes the master, the other the slave. Underlying their doctrine is the desire to have that brotherhood displayed in keeping the things of the world war won for humanity that was displayed by the "millions of gallant young men" who "have fought for the new world," and the "hundreds of thousands" who "died to establish it." Lloyd George and Wilson call upon the new world humanity to work together in the same spirit in which was fought the battle to recreate the world—comradeship, all for one and one for all. The heroic deeds that made immortal the fields of France and Belgium and Italy are the earnest of no less heroic conduct in the performance of the world's work of peace if we labor together, the worker and employer seeing themselves as stewards over possessions to be used for the well being of each other, industry and capital united in the companionship of the new world's economy.

SUBMARINE RUTHLESSNESS.

GENERAL Ludendorff's frank account of the conversion of the German military and civil authorities to ruthless submarine warfare is an important contribution to history, says the Chicago Daily News. He does not attempt to shift to other shoulders the responsibility for the policy of murder by German submarines. The kaiser, as the supreme war lord, gave the final order, General Ludendorff reports, but, as a matter of fact, the kaiser "fell in" with the views expressed by the imperial chancellor, Field Marshal von Hindenburg, and his other advisers. Only some of the socialists in the Reichstag opposed to the end this extreme form of frightfulness.

The decision, too, was reached with full realization of the probability that the United States would be forced to enter the war because of the use of the piratical weapon in a piratical way. Ludendorff though he did not share the optimism of the naval staff, which hoped for quick results, thought it "safe to reckon" that unrestricted destruction by the submersible craft "would have a decisive effect within twelve months—that is, before America could throw her new formations into the scale."

A desperate gamble, assuredly. Ludendorff explains that "in the existing situation it was our plain military duty to the German nation to embark on this form of warfare," it being the only means left to secure a victorious end of the war.

Thus reasoned the junker mind. It did not occur to the kaiser's statesmen and fighting chiefs that, the wanton attack on civilization having failed, unrestricted slaughter at sea was not likely to improve Germany's chances, and that a just and honorable offer of peace was the sane solution of the problem which then confronted them. Justice and freedom for other nations as well as for Germany was a conception alien to the arrogant junkers. The peace offers they inspired were insincere and unacceptable. Piracy was tried, and it contributed to the unexampled defeat and humiliation of a predatory, militarized, immoral empire.

COMING OVER TO GET HUSBANDS.

A NEW YORK despatch says five thousand English women are coming to America to get husbands. It is to be hoped the itinerary of these husband-seeking demoiselles will not include Canada. If it does, we say, with all our hearts, don't come! What with Canadian soldiers returning with British, and in some cases French, brides, and the high cost of living, the bulk of Canadian girls have all but given up the task of husband-seeking as a forlorn hope, and will not take kindly to entering into competition with girls from "over there."

REMARKABLE EPISODE.

THE DEPARTURE of General Pershing from France marked the practical close of a remarkable episode in history, the entry of America into the ranks of the great military powers. The United States declared war on April 6, 1917, and by the armistice she had over two million men in the field in France, one of the most remarkable organizing achievements of the war. By an act of self-denial, which will remain one of the most striking incidents of the great struggle, the American troops were brigaded up with British and French units in order that they might become effective at the earliest possible date. How effective they were is shown by their roll of casualties, which reached a total of 236,000. General Pershing had the satisfaction of consolidating under his command a homogeneous American force before the end. He returns to America having earned the respect and gratitude of all his companions in arms.

SHORTAGE OF COAL.

WILLIAM P HELM, assistant to the vice-president of the American National Coal Association, gives some startling figures as to the world shortage of coal for this winter, which he places at 62,463,000 tons. He says that the entire world, excepting the United States, will want coal as never before, and quotes the following post-war requirements beyond their own productions by countries looking to the United States for coal: Canada, 16,953,000 tons; Germany, 48,300,000; China, 3,135,000; France, 17,000,000; Belgium 12,000,000; the Netherlands, 8,000,000; Portugal, 1,223,000; Gibraltar, 361,000; Spain, 3,226,000; Norway, 2,391,000; Denmark, 3,434,000; Sweden, 5,181,000; Switzerland, 1,722,000; Italy, 12,017,000; Malta, 1,186,000; Austria-Hungary, including Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slovakia, 13,782,000; Greece, 767,000; Bulgaria, 51,000; Roumania, 301,000, and Russia, 8,804,000 tons. Africa, in addition, will require 18,330,000 tons over and above what she will produce, and Asiatic countries will require 1,347,000 tons. The total coal requirements of the world next winter have been placed by this authority at 179,511,000 tons, of which 97,723,000 tons can be supplied by countries other than the United States. This would leave 81,788,000 tons to be furnished by the United States, and it is estimated that there will be furnished 19,325,000 tons, leaving a shortage in the world's coal bin of 62,463,000 tons, a tonnage sufficient to supply the New England States for nearly three years.

Translated into other terms, it would require 1,249,000 cars of fifty tons capacity each, to meet the shortage, or 25 trains of fifty cars each. Twelve thousand five hundred vessels of 5,000 tons capacity each would be necessary to carry the cargo across the ocean in one trip. More than sixty thousand men would have to dig coal at top speed for a year to produce the tonnage.

In this connection the world is advised that no attempt will be made to supply the deficiency in full. As much coal as can be transported with existing facilities, however, without stinting American consumers will be carried abroad. Exclusive of the tonnage sent to Canada (which depends wholly on the United States for her needs above her own production), it is estimated that about 7,000,000 tons will be shipped abroad, little more than ten per cent. of requirements.

The foregoing does not promise any improvement in Canada in regard to coal this year over conditions which prevailed last winter, and the strictest economy is urged on all. And as to price, there seems no doubt that the cost of anthracite coal to Canadian consumers will hinge on the supply and demand foreshadowed above.

Canada today is in the main dependent upon the United States for her fuel supply, and the United States is in no sense dependent on the Canadian market when she cannot even fill the demands upon her by European states. Consequently, although within easy access to the American supply, even Ontario may pay this winter such a price for coal as never before—a price more or less controlled by the world shortage, irrespective of our proximity to the mines and cost of our transportation, for it has ever been so, and so it will continue until the cost of production and cost of consumption are equably adjusted by legislation in some approved form.

NO ONE SATISFIED.

NO ONE IS satisfied, not even the trades unions themselves, with the performance of the Labor party in the House of Parliament of Great Britain, and one of the most obvious reasons for its comparative failure is the elimination at the last election of the small group of non-laboring intellectuals who had served it well in the past, and the failure of many new recruits of the same type to secure election. If the Labor party is to become a real political party capable of taking office, it must include within its ranks, and number among its leaders, men of experience and knowledge in world affairs as well as the organizers of trades unions themselves.

CHALLENGE TO THE OLD WORLD.

(Henry George.)

I propose to beg no question, to shrink from no conclusion, but to follow truth wherever it may lead. Upon us is the responsibility of seeking the law, for in the very heart of our civilization today women faint and little children moan. But what that law may prove to be is not our affair. If the conclusions that we reach run counter to our prejudices, let us not flinch. If they challenge institutions that have long been deemed wise and natural, let us not turn back.

NO "BEST" MONTH

Time of Birth Has Little to Do With Genius.

Statistics Show That Nature Practically Plays No Favorites In Her Production of the Gifted Ones of the Earth.

Astrologers believe that the planets "reigning" at the time of birth govern us throughout life, and that, from a literary point of view certain months are more favorable than others in which to be born.

Taking the hundred best English writers since the day of Chaucer, no less than forty-eight were born in the four months February, May, August and November.

In February were born Charles Dickens, Pepys the diarist, and Thomas Moore, while of more modern note and fame are George Meredith, Israel Zangwill, Anthony Hope Hawkins, Ainsworth and Wilkie Collins.

Pope and Addison were born both in May, as also were Browning, Tennyson, Moore, Bulwer Lytton, Thomas Hood, Jerome K. Jerome and Sir James M. Barrie.

August seems to be the birthmonth of poets, for in that month were born Dryden, Herrick, Scott, Southey and Tennyson.

Apparently November is an unlucky month for literary people, for among those who were born in November are Thomas Chatterton, who, in the depths of want and poverty, committed suicide at eighteen; William Cowper, who suffered from melancholia and hypochondriasis, and finally died insane; Oliver Goldsmith, continually in prison for debt; John Bunyan, who spent 12 years in prison thereby giving us "Pilgrim's Progress"; Swift, subject to fits of passion and ill humor, died insane; Robert Louis Stevenson suffered from almost continual ill-health, and died at forty-four.

So much for the "favored months." Of the others, January saw the birth of Robbie Burns, Byron and Lewis Carrol, author of "Alice in Wonderland," who was also a famous mathematician.

March was the birthmonth of Smollett and Steele, as also of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

In April was born the greatest genius the English language has known, William Shakespeare, while among others born in this month were Wordsworth, Keble, Heber, Swinburne and Herbert. Charlotte Bronte and Anthony Trollope were also born in this month.

June is not a very good month, Charles Reade and Charles Kingsley being the only two writers.

July gave us Thackeray and George Bernard Shaw, and those interested in astrology may find a resemblance between the two satirists.

September and October were both poor months, Mrs. Hemans and H. G. Wells being born in September and Coleridge, Keats and Sheridan in October.

Finally Milton, Gray and Matthew Arnold were born in December, as were also Jane Austin and Carlyle.

So there is hope for most people as far as birthmonths are concerned.

Danish Dairying.

In view of the fact that the people of the United Kingdom have accustomed themselves to eating margarine instead of butter during the war, Danish dairymen expect that the butter exports to the United Kingdom in the future will be only a fraction of what they were prior to the war. At the present moment the production of butter is down to 16,000 cwts. (112 lbs.) weekly as compared with 33,636 cwts. weekly before the war.

One result of the foregoing circumstances is that the Federation of Danish Dairies has turned its attention to the export of new milk to the neighboring countries lying to the northeast, east, and south of Denmark. During the last five or six years the sale of cream in Denmark has undergone a peaceable revolution through the introduction of homogenized-sterilized cream in bottles. The cream is passed through a machine which homogenizes it—i.e., breaks the fat globules in the milk into atomic fragments that are so small that they no longer float to the surface but become an integral part of the milk. The homogenized cream is then bottled and sterilized at a high temperature for fifteen minutes in an autoclave. Cream treated in this manner keeps for an unlimited period.

Viscount Grey Has Taken An Important New Post And Everybody Approves

THE appointment of Viscount Grey to be Ambassador at Washington will be regarded throughout the British Dominions as an event of far-reaching international importance. Since the resignation and death of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice the British Embassy has been virtually vacant, for the interregnum though brilliant feature of the position by Earl Reading had to be temporary only. Meantime Mr. Balfour was also Lord Chief Justice and could not be permanently away from his judicial office.

Lord Grey was Foreign Secretary for eleven momentous years. Never before has a British Foreign Secretary so completely gained the confidence of the United States as has the man who stood within the White House with President Wilson when the world's destination was being shaped. Because Lord Grey was a supporter of Mr. Lloyd George and the two are of touch, Mr. Lloyd George himself is to retire with the appointment. Grey's appointment with the approval of all parties in Britain, Liberal, Labor and Tory, and has won applause all political and personal predilections.

In the most powerful times the British Foreign Office is enough to break the strongest man. Lord Grey entered the place in 1905 with a reputation for solidity based on long and close study and thought, but he left the office a man of tense and wrinkled countenance, broken in health. He had no rest then, and the first great tragedy of his life came when his wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, was killed outright in an outdoor accident. From that time onward Lord Grey became a recluse, fulfilling his public duties but otherwise at home only to his pet squirrels and other friends of the forest. But already the clouds were closing in, on the horizon loomed larger and larger the German menace. Grey fought the war cloud bravely till it burst. When he retired, his nerves were shaken. His sight was dimmed. He had such difficulty in taking food that grave fears were entertained. However, save for his eyes, he is now happily himself again. The American people cannot fail, by their hospitable sympathy, to help a statesman who at this terrible time has in part sacrificed God's richest gift of vision, like many a soldier, to the common cause.

Born in 1862, Grey is fifty-seven years old, which for a British statesman is the prime. His school is Winchester, smaller than Eton but as famous. At Oxford his college was Balliol. Balliol under the worldly wise mastership of Jowett—and he began his career as private secretary to his cousin, who afterward became Earl of Cromer, the organizer of modern Egypt.

Grey was destined to be much more than a private secretary. He had a fair fortune, an estate and family, in days when family still counted. Also he was Gladstone's most favored young man. What Gladstone said is often misquoted, but it was, to be quite accurate, "Ah, Grey—there you have the Parliamentary manner." It is not eloquent. The sentences are conversational and sometimes ragged. He often repeats a phrase; to gain time. But the quality of his style is repose. Of all the public men I have known and watched, I should say that no one better illustrated the principle—character tells. Grey has had to outcome prejudice. When Rosebery and his Liberal League opposed Bannerman, Grey stood in with them, and only joined Bannerman's Cabinet because of the persuasions of a friend, Arthur Ackland. He supported the South African War, and at first he did not at all like Lloyd George's famous "Pedro" land clauses. In the Parliament of 1906, with its overwhelming political continent, I have seen him, over and over again, allay raging opposition by the sheer force of a cool, steady eye and obvious sincerity. He seemed capable of error but never of a mean motive. Labor feared his Russian Entente, but even Labor discovered that he was at heart a democratic person—curiously enough, more democratic in the Cabinet than on the platform, where applause was to be won. Usually with out statesmen, it is the other way.

Against the pretensions of the pure he was adamant. For Women's Suffrage he fought harder, perhaps, than any of them, however militant they might claim to be. And if he adhered a peerage to his baronetcy it was, as in the case of Viscount Bryce, because he could not help it. He was too busy to watch over a constituency. Yet he had to stay in Parliament. A seat in the House of Lords was the only solution. They pressed on him an earldom, but he would only accept the lesser rank. Yet so eminent had been his services that even as Sir Edward Grey, a commoner, they made him a Knight of the Garter, an honor reserved for kings and dukes and other heads of great houses, except in the one case of Palmerston. No one more utterly against the right to legislate because you happen to be your father's son than the British Ambassador. His family has, of course, played a big part in British history. Earl Grey, who passed the Reform Bill of 1832, belonged to it, as did the later Earl Grey who was Governor General of Canada. But the ambassador is one who, while himself belonging to the governing classes, recognizes that the masses have now ascended the throne of power.

Viscount Grey has tested the old diplomacy at every point, and, to his infinite personal sorrow and grief, has seen it collapse in blood and tears. In the Europe which exploded five years ago he had become by admission of the Austrian Ambassador in London himself, the most trusted figure. The Lichnowsky memorandum shows what the German Ambassador at St. James thought about Lord Grey. To emerge from the Old World—to enter the New World—to serve under one's political opponents, Balfour and Cecil—indeed, Cecil was actually Grey's subordinate—all this is a severe test. Grey may "put it over"—or he may not—but I am certain that no man ever resumed his career under a deeper sense of responsibility and that no man will ever work harder to promote happiness and friendship and to prevent fresh hatreds arising which might threaten the peace of mankind.—N. Y. World

VISCOUNT GREY.

Really True.

An Indianapolis seventh grade was studying the gender of nouns. As a final review the teacher asked the pupil to give a few definitions. Masculine gender was defined and then came the request for a definition of the feminine. Alice, whose mother is a rather noted feminist, recited: "Feminine gender is the gender that opposes masculine."

Boots Waterproof.

To make boots waterproof mix equal parts of mutton fat, beeswax and sweet oil together in a small pan, heat over stove until melted, then after the mixture has cooled a little apply it to the boots plentifully, particularly about the seams and edge of soles, and that will really render them perfectly waterproof.

Cleaning Bottles.

When the inside of a bottle contains some deposit which cannot be removed by mere rinsing it will be found that a teaspoonful of ordinary silver sand, together with a little water, if well shaken up in the bottle, will get rid of it. Scraps of paper and tea leaves can be used with water for the same purpose.

Insects Costlier Than Fires.

Insects cause the destruction of more timber that would otherwise be available for building purposes than do forest fires, according to investigations made by the bureau of entomology at Washington.—People's Home Journal.

Hickory Best Fuel Wood.

Hickory of the nonresinous woods is said to have the highest fuel value per unit volume of wood, and has other advantages. It burns evenly and holds the heat. The oaks come next, followed by beech, birch and maple.

STRENGTH FOR YOUNG MOTHERS

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restores Health and Strength.

Lansing, Mich.—"After the birth of my child I was not able to stand on my feet. I was so weak I could not get up. I suffered such pains in my back I could not walk, or hardly take care of my baby. One of my neighbors recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it, got used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I got better right away and was soon a new woman and could work hard and I can recommend these remedies to other young mothers who are weak and ailing as I was."—Mrs. ORA O. BOWER, 611 S. Homer Street, Lansing, Mich.

Women who are in Mrs. Bowers' condition should not continue to suffer from weakness and pain but profit from her experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For suggestions in regard to your condition write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Their call is their 40 years' experience at your service.

SEEKS TO INDICT BIG PACKERS

U. S. Attorney-General Says American People Will Compel Conviction

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 19—Evidence that will "warrant and sustain the indictment of the combination of packers known as the big five" will be presented to a grand jury this week, United States Attorney-General A. Mitchell Palmer announced today at a conference of state and federal officials, called by Gov. Smith to consider the cost of living problem.

"There never was before any government agency," said Mr. Palmer, "so ample a collection of data bearing upon the activities of this giant combine as there is today. When it is laid before a jury, the wrath of the American people will compel a verdict of conviction. The story will amaze America."

Retaining Youthfulness

A man who believes that environment saves thousands of lives said to me recently, "Oh, yes, every man is influenced by his environment. I always associate with men who are young, full of enthusiasm, determined to succeed, and who feel that there is no difficulty that is too great for them to surmount. It keeps me youthful. It prolongs my life. Whenever I am in their presence I feel a tremendous amount of enthusiasm, a wonderful zest for living."—Fern Howard.

Canning.

The French were the first people to preserve fruits and vegetables. This was away back, in 1810. The French government offered a prize for the best method of storing foods during the winter months, and among the solutions was the canning process. America invented the fruit jar and brought the canning industry to be one of the largest and most important in the world, running into billions of dollars annually.

Fewer Accidents Now, and Why.

War conditions, by bringing large numbers of new and unskilled workers into industry, had in general the effect of increasing considerably the number of industrial accidents, both actually and relatively to the number of persons engaged in certain industries. Information recently received by the inspection and investigation service, department of labor, indicates, however, that in general the number of such accidents has now returned to approximately normal figures. In a comparatively short time before the entrance of America into the war, the effect of workmen's compensation laws and safety work had reduced the number of industrial accidents almost 50 per cent. The temporary increase due to the influx of war workers has now vanished. Scientific American.

Lost Diamond Mine?

A fabulous fortune awaits the man who discovers the lost diamond mine of Arkansas.

There are indisputable indications that such a mine exists, according to a statement by Capt. Frederick C. Packer, an English diamond mining expert who has twice come to this country from Kimberly, South Africa, in search of the lost mine.

Due to the peculiarity of the natural process by which diamonds were formed in the dim ages of the past, Captain Packer said, the indications of a diamond field may be found a long distance from the field. These indications have been found in a certain section of Arkansas, but the mine has not been discovered. It may be near the Oklahoma line, he asserts.

French West Indian Islands.

Martinique is only one of the French West Indies. Its population of 185,000 slightly exceeds that of Guadeloupe, the second island of importance in the group. Besides Guadeloupe there are four other islands belonging to France in the West Indies, all closely connected with the mother country, and in all of which the population is 95 per cent black or colored.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyrighted, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"All the morning papers, gents," proclaimed the boy. "Get the Reuton Star. All about the bribery."

He held up the paper. It's huge black headlines looked dull and old and soggy. But the story they told was new and live and startling.

"The Mayor Trapped," shrilled the headlines. "Attempt to Pass Big Bribe at Baldpate Inn Foiled by Star Reporter. Hayden of the Suburban Commits Suicide to Avoid Disgrace."

"Give me a paper, boy," said the mayor. "Yes—a Star." His voice was even, his face unmoved. He took the sheet and studied it, with an easy smile. Clinging in fear to his side, Max read too. At length Mr. Cargan spoke, looking up at Magee.

"So," he remarked; "so—reporters, eh—you and your lady friend? Reporters for this lying sheet—the Star?"

Mr. Magee smiled up from his own copy of the paper.

"Not I," he answered, "but my lady friend—yes. It seems she was just that. A Star reporter you can call her and tell no lie, Mr. Mayor."

It was a good story—the story which the mayor, Max, the professor and Magee read with varying emotions there in the smoking car. The girl had served her employers well, and Mr. Magee, as he read, felt a thrill of pride in her. Evidently the employers had felt that same thrill. For in the captions under the pictures, in the headlines and in a first page editorial, none of which the girl had written, the Star spoke admiringly of its woman reporter who had done a man's work—who had gone to Baldpate inn and had brought back a gigantic bribe fund "alone and unaided."

"Indeed?" smiled Mr. Magee to himself.

In the editorial on that first page the triumphant cry of the Star arose to shatter its fellows in the heavens. At last, said the editor, the long campaign which his paper alone of all the Reuton papers had waged against a corrupt city administration was brought to a successful close. The victory was won. How had this been accomplished? Into the Star office had come rumors a few days back of the proposed payment of a big bribe at the inn on Baldpate mountain. The paper had decided that one of its representatives must be on the ground. It had debated long whom to send. Miss Evelyn Rhodes, its well known special writer, had got the tip in question; she had pleaded to go to the inn. The editor, considering her sex, had sternly refused. Then gradually he had been brought to see the wisdom of sending a girl rather than a man. The sex of the former would put the guilty parties under surveillance off guard. So Miss Rhodes was dispatched to the inn. Here was her story. It convicted Cargan beyond a doubt. The very money offered as a bribe was now in the hands of the Star editor and would be turned over to Prosecutor Drayton at his request. All this under the disquieting title, "Prison Stripes For the Mayor."

The girl's story told how, with one companion, she had gone to Upper Asquewun Falls. There was no mention of the station waiting room nor of the tears shed therein on a certain evening, Mr. Magee noted. She had reached the inn on the morning of the day when the combination was to be phoned. Bland was already there. Shortly after came the mayor and Max.

"You got to get me out of this," Magee heard Max pleading over Cargan's shoulder.

"Keep still!" replied the mayor roughly. He was reading his copy of the Star with keen interest now.

"I've done your dirty work for years," whined Max. "Who puts on the rubber shoes and sneaks up dark alleys hunting votes among the garbage, while you do the Old Glory stunt on Main street? I do. You got to get me out of this. It may mean jail. I couldn't stand that. I'd die."

A horrible parody of a man's real fear was in his face. The mayor shook himself as though he would be rid forever of the coward hanging on his arm.

"Hush up, can't you?" he said. "I'll see you through."

"You got to," Lon Max wailed.

Miss Rhodes' story went on to tell how Hayden refused to phone the combination; how the mayor and Max dynamited the safe and secured the precious package, only to lose it in another moment to a still different contingent at the inn; how Hayden had come, of his suicide when he found that his actions were in danger of exposure—"a bitter smile for Kendrick in that" reflected Magee—and how finally, through a strange series of accidents, the money came into the hands of the writer for the Star. These accidents were not given in detail.

"An amusing feature of the whole affair," said Miss Evelyn Rhodes, "was the presence at the inn of Mr. William Hallowell Magee, the New York writer of light fiction, who had come there to escape the distractions of a great city, and to work in the solitude, and who immediately on his arrival became involved in the surprising drama of Baldpate."

"I'm an amusing feature," reflected Magee.

"Mr. Magee," continued Miss Rhodes, "will doubtless be one of the state's chief witnesses when the case against Cargan comes to trial, as will also Professor Thaddeus Bolton, holder of the Crandall chair of comparative literature at Reuton university, and David Kendrick, formerly of the Suburban, but who retired six years ago to take up his residence abroad. The latter two went to the inn to represent Prosecutor Drayton and made every effort in their power to secure the package of money from the reporter for the Star, not knowing her connection with the affair."

"Well, Mr. Magee?" asked Professor Bolton, laying down the paper which he had been perusing at a distance of about an inch from his nose.

"Once again, professor," laughed Magee, "reporters have entered your life."

The old man sighed.

"You got to get me out of this," Max was still telling the mayor.

"For God's sake," cried Cargan, "shut up and let me think!" He sat for a moment staring at one place, his face still lacking all emotion, but his eyes a trifle narrower than before. "You haven't got me yet!" he cried, standing up. "By the eternal, I'll fight to the last ditch, and I'll win. I'll show Drayton he can't play this game on me. I'll show the Star. That dirty sheet has hounded me for years. I'll put it out of business. And I'll send the reformers howling into the alleys, sick of the fuss they started themselves."

"Perhaps," said Professor Bolton, "but only after the fight of your life, Cargan."

"I'm ready for it!" cried Cargan. "I ain't down and out yet. But to think a woman—a little bit of a girl I could have put in my pocket—it's all a big joke. I'll beat them. I'll show them. The game's far from played out. I'll win, and if I don't"—

He crumbled suddenly into his seat, his eyes on that unpleasant line about "Prison Stripes For the Mayor."

"If I don't," he stammered pitifully, "well, they sent him to an island at the end. The reformers got Napoleon at the last. I won't be alone in that."

At this unexpected sight of weakness in his hero, Mr. Max set up a renewed babble of fear at his side. The train was in the Reuton suburbs now. At a neat little station it slowed down to a stop and a florid policeman entered the smoking car. Cargan looked up.

"Hello, Dan," he said. His voice was lifeless; the oldtime ring was gone.

The policeman removed his helmet and shifted it nervously.

"I thought I'd tell you, Mr. Cargan," he said. "I thought I'd warn you. You'd better get off here. There's a big crowd in the station at Reuton. They're waiting for you, sir; they've heard you're on this train. This lying newspaper, Mr. Cargan, it's been telling tales—I guess you know about that. There's a big mob. You better get off here, sir, and go downtown on a car."

If the mighty Cargan had looked limp and beaten for a moment he looked that way no more. He stood up and his head seemed almost to touch the roof of the car. Over that big patrolman he towered; his eyes were cold and hard again; his lips curved in the smile of the master.

"And why," he bellowed, "should I get off here? Tell me that, Dan."

"Well, sir," replied the embarrassed copper, "they're ugly. There's no telling what they might do. It's a bad mob. This newspaper has stirred 'em up."

"Ugly, are they?" sneered Cargan. "Ever seen the bunch I would go out of my way for, Dan?"

"I meant it, all right, sir," said Dan—"as a friend to a man who's been a friend to me. No, I never saw you afraid of any bunch yet, but this"—

"This," replied Cargan, "is the same old bunch—the same lily livered crowd that I've seen in the streets since I laid the first paving stone under 'em myself—no, sir. Afraid of them? H—! I'd walk through an asphalt hill as scared as I would through that mob. Thanks for telling me, Dan, but Jim Cargan won't be in the mollycoddle class for a century or two yet."

"Yes, sir," said the patrolman admiringly. He turned out of the car, and the mayor turned to find Lon Max pale and fearful by his side.

"What ails you now?" he asked.

"I'm afraid," cried Max. "Did you hear what he said? A mob! I saw a mob once. Never again for me!" He tried to smile to pass it off as a pleasant jest, but he had to wet his lips with his tongue before he could go on. "Come on, Jim. Get off here. Don't be a fool."

The train began to move.

"Get off yourself, you coward!" sneered Cargan. "Oh, I know you! It doesn't take much to make your stomach shrink. Get off!"

Max eagerly seized his hat and bag. "I will if you don't mind," he said. "See you later at Charlie's." And in a flash of tawdry attire he was gone.

The mayor of Reuton no longer sat limp in his seat. That brief moment of seeming surrender was put behind forever. He walked the aisle of the car, fire in his eyes, battle in his heart.

"So they're waiting for me, eh?" he said aloud. "Waiting for Jim Cargan. Now, ain't it nice of them to come and meet their mayor?"

CHAPTER XXV.

The Mayor Welcomed Home.

MR. MAGEE and the professor went into the day coach for their baggage. Mrs. Norton motioned to the former.

"Well," she said, "you know now, I suppose. And it didn't do you no harm to wait. I sure am glad this to do is all over, and that child is safe. And I hope you'll remember what I said. It ain't no work for a woman, nohow, what with the shooting and the late hours."

"Your words," said Mr. Magee, "are engraved on my heart." He proceeded to gather her baggage with his own and was thus engaged when Kendrick came up. The shadow of his discovery in the smoking car an hour before still haunted his sunken eyes, but his lips were half smiling with the new joy of living that had come to him.

"Mr. Magee," he began, "I hardly need mention that the terrible thing which happened—in there—is between you and me—and the man who's dead. No one must know. Least of all, the girl who is to become my wife—it would embitter her whole life—as it has mine."

"Don't say that," Magee pleaded. "You will forget in time, I'm sure. And you may trust me—I had forgotten already." And indeed he had, on the instant when his eyes fell upon the Reuton Star.

Miss Thornhill approached, her dark smiling eyes on Magee. Kendrick looked at her proudly and spoke suddenly, determinedly:

"You're right, I will forget. She shall help me."

A shadow had fallen upon the train—the shadow of the huge Reuton station. In the half light on the platform Mr. Magee encountered the mayor of Reuton. Above the lessening roar of the train there sounded ahead of them the voices of men in turmoil and riot. Mr. Cargan turned upon Magee a face as placid and dispassionate as that of one who enters an apple orchard in May.

"The boys," he smiled grimly, "welcoming me home."

Then the train came to a stop, and Mr. Magee looked down into a great array of faces and heard for the first time the low, unceasing rumble of an angry mob. Afterward he marveled at that constant guttural roar, how it went on and on, humming like a tune, never stopping, disconnected quite from the occasional shrill or heavy voices that rang out in distinguishable words. The mayor looked coolly down into those upturned faces, he listened a moment to the rumble of a thousand throats; then he took off his derby with satiric politeness.

"Glad to see one and all!" he cried.

And now above the mutterings angry words could be heard. "That's him!" "That's $200,000 Cargan!" "How's the weather on Baldpate?" and other sarcastic flings about tar and feathers.

A squad of policemen who had entered the car from the rear forced their way out on to the platform.

"Want us to see you through the crowd, Mr. Cargan?" the lieutenant asked.

New hoots and cries ascended to the station rafters. "Who pays the police?" "We do." "Who owns 'em?" "Cargan." Thus question and answer were bandied back and forth. Again a voice demanded in strident tones the ignominious tar and feathers.

Jim Cargan had not risen from the slums to be master of his town without a keen sense of the theatric. He ordered the police back into the car. "And stay there!" he demanded. The lieutenant demurred. One look from the mayor sent him scurrying. Mr. Cargan took from his pocket a big cigar and calmly lighted it.

"Some of them guys out there," he remarked to Magee, "belong to the Sunday school crowd. Pretty actions for them, pillers of the church howling like beasts."

And still, like that of beasts, the mutter of the mob went on, now in an undertone, now louder, and still that voice that first had plead for tar and feathers plead still for feathers and tar. And here a group preferred the rope.

And toward them, with the bland smile of a child on his great face, his cigar tilted at one angle, his derby at another, the mayor of Reuton walked [illegible]

Reproducing the Talmud.

One of the circumstances due to the war is that it has been found necessary to reproduce the plates for printing the Hebrew Talmud, originally produced in the town of Wilna, Russia. When this city was captured by Germany the electrotypes of the Talmud, it is reported, were used for ammunition. To reset the work in Hebrew would take years with an ordinary outfit.

It was found necessary that the plates should be made by photo-engraving, and this work is now being done in Montreal under the auspices of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada.

The Talmud contains 9,000 pages, 8 by 14, and it is divided into 18 volumes. The first volume is finished, and the second is in print now. It is estimated that it will take about two years before the work is completed.

Army Animals Bought Abroad.

Nearly all of the animals used by the United States expeditionary forces in overseas service were taken from this country. More than twice as many were bought abroad. The total number of animals purchased overseas to January 11, 1919, is 152,836. Purchases of horses in France amounted to 109,848; in Spain, 1,581; and in Great Britain, 11,808. The value of purchases in France was $43,122,094; in Spain $580,100; and Great Britain $5,314,711, or a total value of $49,025,905 for 123,277 horses purchased overseas. The total number of mules purchased overseas amounted to 20,159, with a value of $11,115,847. There were 9,341 mules, valued at $2,895,928 purchased in France; 12,941 mules with a value of $5,619,156, purchased in Spain; and 6,777 mules, valued at $2,600,763, purchased in Great Britain.

Special Naval Uniforms.

Uniforms having distinctive insignia have been designed by the shipping board for the young apprentices now in training at the various school ships. An embroidered anchor under the national shield, worked into the cloth of the blouse pocket, and two broad white stripes on collar and cuff, instead of three narrow ones, as worn by the navy, will constitute the insignia by which one may discriminate between the men of the merchant marine and resembling those worn by the regular men of the navy.

A very small bone, only one square millimeter—.0155 square inch—in diameter, will hold 33 pounds in suspension without breaking, while a piece of the best oak of the same thickness will hold up only 22 pounds.

Watch for Airquakes.

An English astronomer of prominence has advanced the theory that there are airquakes, entirely independent of earthquakes, that are caused by the explosion of meteors in the atmosphere.

$5,000.00 CHALLENGE

THE CANADA PERMANENT TRUST COMPANY — TORONTO STREET — TORONTO, ONT.

No. 402 Toronto, September 16th, 1919.

Receipt is hereby acknowledged from the ONTARIO BREWERS' ASSOCIATION of the sum of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS deposited with us under a Challange agreement made this day to the ONTARIO REFERENDUM COMMITTEE to prove that Beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight is intoxicating.

A. E. Hewins
Manager, Ontario Branch.

TO THE REFERENDUM COMMITTEE

The Ontario Brewers' Association can no longer disregard the attempts of the Ontario Referendum Committee to mislead the people of this Province in the forthcoming Referendum.

In its campaign literature the Referendum Committee has corrupted the statutory ballot as set out below, and its advertising positively asserts that the light beer to be voted on is intoxicating.

The Referendum Committee is either misinformed or is deliberately misguiding the people for a purpose.

The purpose is to make the voters believe that they are voting for or against intoxicating beer.

Examine carefully the two ballots reproduced below.

GOVERNMENT STATUTORY BALLOT PAPER	REFERENDUM COMMITTEE'S DISTORTION
Question 2. ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	2. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Government Agencies?
Question 3. ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in Standard Hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favor such sale and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	3. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Standard Hotels?
Question 4. ARE you in favor of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	4. ARE you in favor of the sale of all kinds of spirituous and malt liquor in Government agencies?

The Government Ballot clearly shows that the public is only to vote for or against the sale of beer containing not more than 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight.

Beer Containing 2.51 per cent. Alcohol by Weight is Non-intoxicating

To establish that the 2.51 per cent. beer to be voted on is not intoxicating, the Ontario Brewers' Association have deposited $5,000 with the Canada Permanent Trust Company, and they hereby challenge the Ontario Referendum Committee to deposit an equal amount with the same Trust Company to prove that beer containing 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight is intoxicating, or admit that their literature deceiving the electorate.

Upon the investigation, the losers are to forfeit their deposit to a charity or charities to be named by the Investigating Board. The investigation is to take place before a nominee of the Ontario Referendum Committee a nominee of the Ontario Brewers' Association, and the third nominee to be agreed on by the two persons so chosen -- and if they fail to agree, to be named by the Lieutenant Govenor of Ontario.

This Challenge to be answered immediately by the Ontario Referendum Committee.

RED TRIANGLE FUND CAMPAIGN.

The committee in charge of the Y. M. C. A. Red Triangle Fund, met to further consider plans for the coming campaign. The campaign will be held on September 30th to October 1st. The original dates of May 6-9 when the campaign was held throughout Canada, were cancelled in Peterborough in order that the Great War Veterans might have a clear field for their canvass, for the new rooms.

The next meeting of the campaign workers will be held at the Y. M. C. A. on Wednesday evening at 6:30 to 8, when lunch will be served.

Details of the campaign will be published in the newspapers, including what is being asked of Peterboro and how the money will be expended this year.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken Gray, Faded Hair With Sage Tea

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. It's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.

RACING CAR PASSES STAND IN A BLAZE

LOUIS CHEVROLET'S CAR CATCHES FIRE WHILE GOING TWO MILES A MINUTE.

New York, Sept. 22.—Twenty-five thousand people saw Louis Chevrolet fight death for thirty breath-taking seconds at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway yesterday while racing at two miles a minute in a blazing car. For one mile alongside the crowded grandstand the burning car careened at breakneck speed, with Chevrolet and his mechanic, Kenneth Goodson, fighting desperately to bring it to a stop.

The accident occurred just as Chevrolet, leading his brother Gaston, completed the 110th mile of the 150-mile race. Turning into the northwest banked curve, the car suddenly burst into flames. Into the home stretch in front of the stand the blazing car raced, with two others close behind. The flames in a sheet stretched out back of the car fully ten feet.

As the burning car ran over the finish line Chevrolet could be seen fighting desperately from his difficult position to steer it into the concrete guard that surrounds the infield. Finally, he succeeded in grinding his wheels along this small wall just as he reached the next turn. Then both men jumped. Both were badly burned about the arms, legs and feet.

It was a day of thrills. Earlier in the afternoon Ralph Mulford narrowly escaped death when part of the steering gear of his car broke during the finishing sprint of a ten mile race. At the time Mulford was making 120 miles an hour.

The car swerved around on the dangerous curve, dashed into the infield in a shower of dirt, and then suddenly rushed up the incline again and crashed into the fence. Mulford and his mechanic had a miraculous escape from death.

Gaston Chevrolet won the 150-mile race and established a new world's record at an average speed of 109 miles an hour.

WORLD'S SERIES OPEN AT CINCINNATI OCT. 1

Cincinnati, Sept. 22.—Cincinnati won the toss for the opening game of the world's series, at a meeting of the National Baseball Commission here today.

The first two games will be played in Cincinnati, the next three in the American League city winning the pennant of that league. Then two in Cincinnati, if necessary, followed by one in the American League city, the place for the ninth game, if necessary, to be decided by lot. The first game is scheduled for Wednesday, October 1.

EVERY CRIPPLE NEEDS HIS CRUTCH

Crippled limbs need crutches; crippled eyes need glasses. The need is as urgent in one case as in the other, yet many people force their eyes to go along without help when it is badly needed. As well expect weak eyes to give perfect service as an injured limb to carry you. Let Dr. Fowler take care of the weak eyes, and they will give cheerful service.

BELLEVILLE LOSE TO OSLERS NINE

FIRST GAME OF SERIES LOST BY CENTRAL ONTARIO CHAMPS ON HOME GROUNDS.

The Belleville Central Ontario League champions suffered a defeat at the hands of the Oslers team, city champions of Toronto, on Saturday by the close score of 3 to 2. This makes it necessary for Belleville to beat the Toronto boys in Toronto next Saturday to stay in the running. The Winners of the Belleville-Osler series will play the winners of the Hamilton-Guelph series for the amateur championship of Ontario.

Saturday's game was a hard one for the Grand Trunk's to lose as they played sensational ball in all except the first inning when the Toronto champions scored all their 3 runs.

Potts leading off for Osler singled to centre. Donkin beat out a bunt. Tugher sacrificed and Willy walked, filling the bases. Buchanan forced Potts at the plate but Gallagher forced in a run when he was hit with a pitched ball. Newton hit safely through Goyer scoring Willy and Buchanan but Gallagher was nipped trying to reach third.

The Grand Trunks tried desperately to even things up in the fourth but came one short of the mark. Gallagher forced Ross' grounder and the runner stole second. Mills came through with a nice double to right that scored Ross. Gerout fanned. Mills reached third on Nugent's error. Symons missed three but before Morden also fanned Mills scored the second run of the inning on a wild pitch.

After that Goyer, the Grand Trunk's long left-hander, held the Oslers in check while Spring easily disposed of the Bay of Quinte aggregation.

Lengthy Program.

A lengthy program of public and semi-public functions awaited His Royal Highness, who is to remain in the city until Tuesday afternoon.

Some revisions have been made in the Prince's Ontario itinerary. He will arrive as follows: Hamilton, October 18; Niagara Falls, 19 and 20; Brantford, 20th; Guelph and Stratford, 21st; Woodstock, Chatham and London, 22nd; Windsor, 23rd; Galt, 24th; Kingston, 25th; Brockville, 27th.

MEN HAD HEADS CLUBBED

Several Shots Fired by Crowd and Police in Big Strike.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburg, Pa. Sept. 22. Several men had their heads clubbed and two arrests were made today in the Borough of Clairton when Pennsylvania State Police had another brush with crowds that refused to disperse. Several shots were fired by each side.

Dr. Forbes Godfrey received the Conservative nomination in West York.

PROV. VOTERS LIST MORE THAN DOUBLED

OFFICIAL FIGURES SHOW GREAT INCREASE OVER 1914 DUE TO ADDITION OF WOMEN.

Politicians in all parts of the Province have expressed tremendous curiosity in the numbers to be added to the voters' list when the enumerations have been completed. The official lists, after most of the appeals have been heard show that in most constituencies the number has doubled while in Toronto reports say that the list has more than trebled. The Toronto list for the city alone excluding the part contained in the York ridings has now reached the huge number of 281,300, while the whole province now totals 1,611,759.

The number on the lists in the Peterborough constituencies has not quite doubled since the enumerations for the 1914 elections, but the constituencies in the Western part of the province in most parts have considerably more than doubled owing to the addition of women and returned soldiers under age.

The following is a comparison of the lists for the Peterborough and adjacent constituencies:

	No. in 1919	No. in 1914
Peterboro, East	7,583	4,437
Peterboro, West	10,600	6,811
Victoria, North	8,430	4,714
Victoria, South	12,000	5,400
Durham, East	7,800	4,027
Durham, West	7,544	3,850
Hastings, East	9,500	8,743
Hastings, North	10,000	5,289
Hastings, West	14,000	5,506

NOT ALLOW ITALIAN TROOPS IN FIUME

INTERNATIONALIZE DOCKS AND RAILWAYS IS PROJECT OF SUPREME COUNCIL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 22. There were indications today that the supreme council might agree upon a settlement of the Dalmatian question on the basis of a formal making of Fiume Italian, but naturally that is not allowing Italy to keep troops there, and internationalizing the docks and railways, thus safeguarding the Juko-Slavian and Central European interests.

NELLY M. TURNER AT GEORGE ST.

Appeals for Missionary Recruits From Among Methodist People.

Young People's Day at George Street Methodist Church yesterday was in every way a great success. Miss Nelly M. Turner, one of the church's greatest woman speakers addressed both services. She made searching appeals for recruits for the mission fields, both home and foreign, wher millions were remaining in ignorance of the bread of life while it was lying on the ground wasted at home. Miss Turner's appeals are almost irresistible and her earnestness was felt by the exceptionally large congregations that assembled to hear her. The young people of George Street Church are to be congratulated upon obtaining the services of Miss Turner for their services, and should she return to this city at any time large audiences are assured to hear her message.

A "STRONG" GERMAN GRACE.

Pastor Vorwerk's Paraphrase of Lord's Prayer Holds Record

Time was when the hosts of German clergymen, anointed ministers of God, were mobilized to do duty in the intellectual poison gas department of the Imperial German army, says the New York Sun. Their task was the task to make the German people forget the Nazarene teachings, to keep the flames of bloodthirst burning, and to administer communions of hatred. There was the celebrated Pastor Vorwerk, whose paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer holds easily the world record for blasphemy through the ages:

"Though the warrior's bread be scanty, do Thou work daily death and tenfold woe unto the enemy. Forgive in merciful long suffering each bullet and each blow which reaches its mark. Lead us not into the temptation of letting our wrath be too tame in carrying out Thy divine judgment. Deliver us and our arms from the infernal enemy and his servants on earth. Thine is the kingdom, the German land; may we by aid of Thy steel-clad hand, achieve the power and the glory."

But where are the snows of yesterday year? On November 11, 1918, Gott was demobilized. His lieutenant on earth is to-day sawing firewood at Amerongen, and Pastor Vorwerk and his colleagues are probably pounding to the best of their ability that they never said a word. And in the dead of the militant pastors we find a German admiral. Dick by name, returning to the writing of prayers. According to the German papers this warrior has composed a new grace before meals or shall we call it meatchsatz? as follows:

"Dear Lord, we pray Thee let a strong Germany arise again. Fill us with moral force, to work for the Fatherland. Give success to German work and grant that we regain our empire."

"O quae mutatio rerum!"

O what changement of things!

Salting the Baby.

The strange custom of salting new-born babies is still practiced in certain regions of Europe and Asia. The method varies with the differing nationalities of the peoples employing it. The Armenians of Russia cover the entire skin of the infant with very fine salt. This is left on the baby for three hours or more, when it is washed off with warm water. A mountain tribe of Asia Minor are even more peculiar in this regard than the Armenians, for they are alleged to keep their newborn babies covered with salt for a period of twenty-four hours. The modern Greeks also sprinkle their babies with salt. The mothers imagine that this practice brings health and strength to their offspring and serves to keep away the evil spirits as well.

A Dandy Dish.

What has been considered by Oriental epicures as the daintiest dish in China, the birds nest, is the product of the sea swallow, which constructs his nest of a gelatinous substance taken from sea moss. The Chinese method of preparing the nests for the table is to soak the and boil them in milk until they are very tender. Then they are placed in clear soup and are ready for use. On his trip to China, Gen. Grant was much feted, and one of the dishes set before him was [illegible]

THEATRICAL

FIFTH AVENUE'S CHEERS FLUSTER SHY TOM MOORE

GOLDWYN STAR IS WARMLY GREETED BY AN ADMIRING THRONG WHILE HE ACTS FOR SCENE.

Tom Moore, in the garb of a chauffeur and with the pose of the typical driver for a matron of society, created a stir in the Fifth Avenue New York, shopping district while he was being photographed in a scene for his newest Goldwyn Picture, "Thirty a Week," from the play by Thompson Buchanan, which comes to the Grand today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Cast as Dan Murray, chauffeur for the Andrews Wrights, Tom Moore is required frequently to drive Barbara Wright, their daughter, to the shopping centre. With the usual care in the selection of its casts, Goldwyn chose Tallulah Bankhead, granddaughter of United States Senator John H. Bankhead, as leading woman for Tom Moore. She is Barbara.

Tom Moore, whose smiling countenance is known wherever motion pictures are, was quickly recognized, despite his chauffeur's regalia. Before long the throng grew in numbers and not only obstructed traffic on the avenue but made scene-taking impossible. Harry Beaumont, the director, and two traffic policemen brought a semblance of order and the Goldwyn cameraman was permitted to resume operations.

Three pretty and keen-witted Thrift Stamp salesgirls made hay while Tom Moore's sunny smile beamed. With every Tom Moore smile came exhortations from the star to purchase the stamps that mean so much to the boys fighting for world freedom on the other side. Finally Miss Bankhead emerged from a shop and she, too, became an object of admiration.

Miss Bankhead also urged large and frequent purchases of Thrift Stamps. With the scene completed the blushing star drove off, happy to get away from all the excitement but not half as pleased as the traffic officers with the return to normal conditions on Fifth Avenue.

"JACK CANUCK IN BERLIN"

PRIZE CALIFORNIA BEAUTIES AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE FIRST WEEK IN OCTOBER

"Sing ho, the merry-maiden"—she's here from far-off California, a bevy of her in fact. The public that has seen her splash about with graceful abandon in Mack Sennett's comedies may well be surprised at the presence at the Grand Thursday and Friday, Oct 2 and 3, of Sennett's farfamed bathing beauties. By special permission of the comedy king, the girls of shapely perfection, bathing suit marvels and all are here on a limited tour of the principal cities, with a truly imposing retinue of chaperones.

The mermaids made famous by Sennett's two-reelers come to give piquancy and vital interest to the local premiere of the comedy king's most ambitious motion picture undertaking—five reels of satire and hilarity, entitled "Jack Canuck in Berlin," with all the Sennett farceurs assembled in one cast, and German royal bombast and egotism as the marks of their shafts.

This double attraction will set a new standard for motion picture presentation here and the other large eastern cities where it will be possible in turn. The tour of the nereids is said to be as much of a surprise to them as to the public. Hitherto, this ensemble of physical radiance has been kept in the California studio for the jealous eye of the camera alone. The producer's interest in his most ambitious comedy effort caused him to yield to importunities to add this fillip to its exhibition.

Sol L. Lesser of San Francisco, the largest individual distributor of states-right films in the country, who has bought the American and Canadian rights to "Jack Canuck in Berlin," brought the innovation about by his persuasions for a brief suspension of the studio rule that has heretofore kept the girls in seclusion.

"Jack Canuck" is said to be the biggest laugh Sennett has ever been responsible for.

Most Famous Characters in Literature Visualized With Charming Effect in a Beautiful Story Abounding With Humor, Sentiment and Charm—To Be Shown at the Allen Theatre on Monday and Tuesday Only.

Living in a comfortable home in Concord, Mass., the members of the March family are bound together by ties of amity and love. The period is towards the close of the Civil war and Mr. March is serving his country at the front as chaplain of a Massachusetts regiment. Mrs. March, who is idolized by her daughters, Jo, Meg, Beth and Amy, is affectionately called "Marmee" by them. Jo is of a literary turn of mind and she writes a play which she produces before a small though appreciative audience. Jo, who plays the hero in her production, is loved by both Laurie and Prof. Baer, but she prefers the latter, whereupon Laurie discovers that he really loves Amy. John Brooke loves Meg, while Beth, who is in ill health ,has no sweetheart, but is loved by all alike.

One night Mrs. March receives news that her husband is lying dangerously ill in a hospital in Washington. She is greatly distressed and without funds to make the trip She appeals to Aunt March, a crabbed old woman of wealth, and believing the appeal will be in vain, Jo sells her luxuriant hair to a wig maker for $25 and returns in triumph to her mother with the money. But meanwhile, Aunt March has relented and not only given Mrs March $25, but a check for $75 with which to defray the expenses of her journey to Washington.

Jo and her mother art shocked at the uselessness of this sublime sacrifice, but after "Marmee" goes to Washington and fetches her husband home, Jo forgets the loss of her hair in her work. She writes stories now for "The Spread Eagle," or rather submits her manuscripts to the editor. One day, the Marches and Prof Baer read a story of remarkable power in "The Spread Eagle" and they are wondering who could have written it when Jo enters with a check for $50 sent her by the editor in payment of her story. Jo is congratulated by all present, and Prof Baer's love for her is redoubled, though thus far he has not made any avowal of affection for her.

Time flies and following the wedding of Brooke and Meg, Beth's condition grows grave. When twins are born to Meg, little Beth, who is slowly passing away, begs to see the babes and she fondles them with pathetic pleasure. A few days later she breathes her last, and the household is in mourning for its lost flower. Laurie confides to Jo that he loves Amy and is about to ask her to be his wife. While he is talking to her, Prof. Baer approaches, his purpose being to make his long deferred avowal of love to Jo. The girl is so overjoyed when Laurie tells her of his love for Amy, that she kisses him and bids him God-speed.

Convinced that his love is unreciprocated, Prof. Baer sadly informs Jo that he is about to accept an offer to teach at a famous university and when she expresses her sorrow at this determination the truth is finally revealed—that she loves him alone. He takes her in his arms and that night all gather at the old fireside, happy in each other's love.

"MICKEY" AT THE GRAND SOON

When a son gwriter with an international reputation writes and dedicates a song to a motion picture production and then to find out that his song has swept the country, that the sales and popularity of the song are phenomenal must be very gratifying. Bands playing it, all makes of phonograph records adopting it, soda fountains naming special ice cream concoctions and florists naming flowers on it, proves that "Mickey" must be a great motion picture. "Mickey" has been enjoying record breaking attendances in all the large cities throughout the United States and Canada, especially the Grand Opera House, Toronto, four months, a run which has never been known for a motion picture.

It is better to be everything to somebody than something to everybody.

Richest English Duke Divorced

No tears were shed when the British court gave the Duchess of Westminster a divorce the other day. The retracting pair had been at the courts for longer than five years, beseeching for a legal partition. Miss Gertie Millar of the Gaiety, the Duke of Alba and a number of other persons of both genders had long been tired of nominations in legal filings and illegal gossip. The Duke of Westminster must have been soul weary of playing the family man and injured husband by the time the thing was finally at an end, and his duchess quite as worn out with posturing the hurt and unforgiving wife. But the matching and unmatching of the richest duke in all Britain and the beautiful Sheelah Cornwallis-West is an interesting yarn, full of such episodes as the preachermen ever rail about and their flocks go right on enjoying to the uttermost.

In 1900 the first Duke of Westminster died and left his titles and huge estate to his grandson, a fair young blade, then just approaching the estate of manhood, as it is defined in the majority law. This boy, previously known as the Viscount Belgrave, found himself not only a duke, but one of the richest noblemen alive. He owned and still owns about 30,600 acres in England, a large block of this great property being fine locations in the heart of London. His income is estimated at $5 a minute; again at $3,500 a day; and officially, at more than $15,000,000 a year. On the basis of this last figure, the duke must be worth about $300,000,000. That splendid old place, Eaton Hall, is his, and so are half a dozen other magnificent country estates, all in addition to his income-bringing property.

Naturally this young fellow was the great catch of that day. In 1901, before the Boer War broke out, it became known that Sheelah West, youngest daughter of Col. and Mrs. George Cornwallis-West and sister of the Princess of Pless, was the young duke's choice. She was and is a beauty, and the daughter and sister of beauties.

Oddly enough, there was opposition to the match from the duke's family. They did not object to the girl — indeed, they considered her highly eligible. But the young duke was indeed young — too youngly young for so inclusive a step as marriage. He was packed off to the Boer War to consider. But he was engaged to Sheelah West. Mamma Cornwallis-West, the celebrated and capable woman, had seen to it. She was to see to other details, not all so pleasant.

Young Westminster got to South Africa and there he had time for a famous escapade with a Mrs. Thomas Atherton, wife of a British colonel and a woman who bore a great reputation as a charmer.

Hugh Richard Grosvenor, otherwise the second Duke of Westminster, and Constance Edwina Cornwallis-West, otherwise the beautiful Sheelah, were married — after the duke had made a settlement with Mrs. Atherton.

For some years all went well. Three children came, two girls who survive, and a boy, for whom King Edward stood godfather and who died some years ago.

For about ten years the Westminsters seemed happy together. Then things began to happen. The duke was seen with a variety of stage women. Gossip clutched his high and opulent name and would not let loose. Gertie Millar, the first magnitude luminary in the London musical comedy galaxy, suffered no dimming by the connection of her name with that of his grace. Nor did other footlight beauties nowhere near so well known. How true were the constant stories told of the young duke, who shall say? But one thing was certain. There was an obvious estrangement between the duke and his very handsome wife. It grew with the seasons.

The duchess suddenly jumped into activities strange to her. She was soon immersed in the life of the gayer set of London. A string of admirers followed her from place to place. No woman in Europe was more vivacious, and because of her great name and wealth her most casual contacts were elevated into serious affairs. Still, there is no denying her flirtations. Now it was one man of aloof position that was at this beautiful woman's feet, now another. The rich and mature Duke of Alba followed her from one country to another. King Alfonso was said to have succumbed. There were others in multitude.

The explanation of the duchess' manner of life current in London society was that she was trying to bring her husband back to her by arousing his jealousy. This may have been the fact. In any event it was the duchess' side that King George and Queen Mary took, and now it is to the duchess that the courts have awarded the decree.

Frogs as Barometers.

Certain animals, according to a London naturalist, appear to act as live barometers. And in proof of this he says that while frogs remain yellow nothing but fine weather may be expected, but should their coats begin to assume a brown hue it is a sign of coming bad weather.

GETTING RID OF SLUMS.

Newly-appointed Minister of Health at Work In London.

Extensive schemes for the demolition of slum areas and the rehousing of the working classes are to be taken in hand energetically by the new British Health Ministry.

"We intend to get the houses and to clear out the slums," said an official of the Ministry recently, "but before the slums can be destroyed, it is essential that new houses should be provided for the inhabitants, and it is well to keep in mind the existing difficulties with regard to labor and material.

"The Ministry are aware that a very large number of soldiers married during the war. Owing to the great interest shown in the housing question by the men who are still in the army of occupation, the authorities are sending out lecturers to France to explain the Government's intentions on the subject.

"One of these lecturers, who has just returned from the continent, said that he had been inundated with queries as to the possibilities which exist for the purchase of small houses, and he formed the opinion that the majority of demobilized soldiers hoped to become property owners on a small scale."

Among the schemes with which the Ministry are about to deal, are the following:

Southwark—The rehousing of 4,300 persons of the working class. Dwellings for 620 persons have already been erected on one section of the area, and another section has been cleared.

Shoreditch—The rehousing of 5,500 persons by the purchase of old houses, which are to be demolished and rebuilt.

Bermondsey—The rehousing of some 1,500 people in block dwellings.

Hammersmith — The reconstruction of two areas.

Fulham—The demolition and rebuilding of a number of houses.

Hampstead — The reconstruction of nine areas, comprising no fewer than 75 properties.

At Tottenham it is proposed to develop certain lands on the lines of a garden city, and at Old Oaklane and Norbury 910 new houses are to be taken in hand.

An interesting experiment is to be made at Hammersmith, where, by arrangement with the Ministry, 18 cottages will be erected on designs which won the prizes in the competition promoted by the Royal Institute of British Architects. When the work is completed, one cottage of each type will be left unoccupied, so that the details of the method of construction may be easily examined.

Rival to Telephone.

An invention of great commercial possibilities, which may equal in importance the telephone, is the hot wire microphone, and it was the subject of a claim by the inventor, Major Tucker, before the Royal Commission of Awards to Inventors sitting in London, England.

Mr. Romer, for the claimant, said the award of £4,000 was made in March on the undertaking that the patent be handed back to the inventor. The award had not been paid, and a letter had been received from the Treasury to say that the Government desired to reassign the patent absolutely to the patentee.

Claimant desired to have the patent for his own use. Experiments were constantly proceeding, and the invention was one of world-wide importance. Therefore, the patentee was not anxious to get rid of any of his prospective rights.

It was used by a great many people, and had been captured by the enemy.

Mr. Trevor Watson, for the Treasury, said its probable use by the post office was mentioned as one of its commercial possibilities.

An arrangement was made, on the lines of a suggestion by the chairman, that the patent should be assigned to Major Tucker with a license to the crown to use it as they thought fit. Major Tucker will, therefore, have the commercial use of it, but the state will have the use as far as the post office is concerned. The chairman expressed the hope that the £4,000 would be paid very promptly by the Treasury.

Reading by Ear.

A new invention for the blind enables them to read with their ears. It is a machine called an octophone, by means of which flashes of light from the letters as they are printed cause certain sounds, easily distinguishable by the initiated. The soundmary with the shapes of the letters, and very high resistance telephones transmit these to the ears of the blind person, "reading" with highly satisfactory results.

COLLINS LEADS IN BASE-STEALING

CELEBRATES 14TH ANNIVERSARY BY JUMPING INTO LEAD IN AMERICAN LEAGUE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Eddie Collins, second baseman of the Chicago White Sox, celebrated his fourteenth year in major league baseball by stepping into the lead of American League in base stealing with thirty-one pilfers to his credit.

Collins has also moved up from tenth to sixth place in batting, with an average of .323. Cobb still leads the batting averages with .375, followed by Veach with .348, Sysler Jackson, Ruth and Collins in order. Babe Ruth still leads in runs scored, total bases and home runs.

Stolen Bases.

In the National League, Cravath of Philadelphia with .336 is five points ahead of Thorpe of Boston; Cutshaw, of Pittsburg, with 37 stolen bases is far in the lead in that department.

Pacific Blockade.

"Pacific blockade" is a term invented by Hautefeuille, the French writer on international maritime law, to describe a blockade exercised by a great power for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on a weaker state without actual war. The pacific blockade has apparently established itself as a legitimate means of coercing a weak power to observe its international obligations without resorting to war for that purpose. It is a modern development and has usually been the act of several powers acting in concert. It was first employed in 1827, when the combined fleets of Great Britain, France and Russia blockaded a portion of the Turkish coast. More recent instances of its exercise were the blockade of Crete by the powers in 1897, the blockade of Venezuelan ports by Great Britain, Germany and Italy in 1902 and of Turkish ports by the powers in 1905.

The Bargee.

"American soldiers in London," said Gen. Samuel A. Ansell, "take a great deal of interest in the bargees who row enormous canal boats up and down the Thames.

"A soldier stood on the Blackfriars bridge one day watching a bargee row his canal boat, or barge. It was an enormous barge; half a dozen oarsmen could hardly have managed it, but the lone bargee wielded his oar undismayed, and the barge approached the soldier on the bridge at the rate of about an inch a minute.

"The soldier watched the barge a long time, and, when the bridge was at last reached, he took the cigarette from his mouth and shouted down to the plucky oarsman:

"'Well, so long, old timer! Don't forget to bring us a parrot back with you!'"

What Is Biggest Woodcock?

What is said to be the heaviest woodcock was one shot by Arthur Duane near Whittaker's, L. I., about thirty years ago. The woodcock was mounted by Bell, the leading taxidermist of the day, but unfortunately it was later on destroyed by moths.

This woodcock was weighed on a druggist's scales at Southampton and weighed exactly 14 ounces. There are several witnesses living who can testify as to the weight. The naturalists give the average weight of woodcock as ranging from five to nine ounces.

THEY HEARD DRAKE'S DRUM.

Devonshire Sailors Believe They Heard Admiral's Summons.

"If the Dons sight Devon, I'll quit the port of heaven, an' drum them up the Channel as we drummed them long ago."

Every Englishman knows the prophecy of Drake's drum as Sir Henry Newbolt sets it forth in his West Country song, and this is the tale, told by Mr. Arthur Machen in the Outlook, of how Devon men heard the great admiral's drum on November 21, 1918, the day of the surrender of the German fleet.

"One of the ships was the Royal Oak, chiefly manned by sailors of Devonshire. She was flying on that day a magnificent silk ensign made for her by Devonshire ladies. On her bridge, 60 feet above the top deck, was a group of officers: Admiral Grant, Capt Maclachlan of the Royal Oak, the commander, and others. It was soon after nine o'clock in the morning when the German fleet appeared, looming through the mist. Admiral Grant saw them, and waited; he could scarcely believe, he says, that they would not instantly open fire.

"Then the drum began to beat on the Royal Oak. The sound was unmistakable; it was that of a small drum, being beaten 'in rolls.' At first the officers on the bridge paid little attention, if any, to the sound, so intent were they on the approaching enemy. But when it became evident that the Germans were not to show fight, Admiral Grant turned to the captain of the Royal Oak, and remarked on the beating of the drum. The captain said that he heard it, but could not understand it, since the ship was cleared for action, and every man on board was at his battle-station. The commander also heard, but could not understand, and sent messengers all over the ship to investigate. Twice the messengers were sent about the ship—about all the decks. They reported that every man was at his station. Yet the drums continued to beat. Then the commander himself made a special tour of investigation through the Royal Oak. He, too, found that every man was at his station.

"All the while the British fleet was closing round the German fleet, coming to anchor in a square about it, so that the German ships were hemmed in. And all the while that this was being done, the noise of the drum was heard at intervals, beating in rolls. All who heard it are convinced that it was no sound of flapping sails or any such accident. The ear of the naval officers is attuned to all the noises of his ship in fair weather and in foul; it makes no mistakes. All who heard knew that they heard the rolling of a drum.

"At about two o'clock in the afternoon the German fleet was enclosed and helpless, and the British ships dropped anchor, some fifteen miles off the Firth of Forth. The utter, irrevocable ruin and disgrace of the German navy was consummated. And at that moment the drum stopped beating and was no more heard.

"But those who had heard it, admiral, captain, commander, other officers and men of all ratings, held then and now one belief as to that rolling music. They believe that the sound they heard was that of 'Drake's Drum'; the audible manifestation of the spirit of the great sea captain, present at this hour of the tremendous triumph of Britain on the seas. This is the firm belief of them all."

"Dancing Mad" In London.

There is such a dearth of ballrooms in London at the present that a "demobilization" dance organized by a large Government department had to be abandoned.

"There never has been such a boom in dancing," said W. Knightsmith, a dancing master with forty years' experience, to a correspondent. "Everyone is organising dances now, and there is nowhere to hold them, as the Government is using nearly all the large halls for war purposes. The great secret of a dance popularity at the moment is that nearly all the new dances can be danced by those getting on in years. A grey-haired man can do the 'two-step,' the 'fox trot' and the 'jazz' without undue exertion, but the waltz would tire him in ten minutes. The old beau is cutting out the younger man, and is thoroughly enjoying himself. All the dancing schools are full up, for everyone is anxious to know the new steps. The new dances and the ever-favorite waltz make up the ball programs to-day. The old dances, such as the lancers, are not placed in west end programs, although you still find them in those at the 'shilling hops,' which are still popular."

Where Pigeons Flock.

The pigeons of London are one of the sights to which the attention of visitors is always drawn, says the Christian Science Monitor. St. Paul's churchyard is a great place of gathering, and here the birds flock down for the more lavish midday meal spread out for their benefit, now that rations are less vigorously controlled. They feed out of the hands of their benefactors, perch on their shoulders, and flap and glitter in the sunshine as they fly up and down. Pigeons seem to belong to certain places. Admiralty Arch is another favorite resort, but all over the city the birds have small colonies, and crowds of faithful friends. In Venice and in Florence the pigeons are as much a part of the picture as the greatest buildings, a finishing touch, as it were, with which nobody can dispense.

Famous Old Hospital.

Bedlam is a famous old hospital for the treatment of the insane, now situated in the Lambeth road, London. It has been used ever since the year 1547, when the Monastery of St. Mary of Bethlehem was granted to the citizens of London for the purpose. Bedlam is a popular corruption of "Bethlehem," and the word is used for any madhouse or scene of uproar.

Avoid Brooding.

It is a salutary thing to regret past errors and sincerely resolve not to fall into them again, but it is a foolish and most dangerous thing to brood over mistakes we have made, sins we have committed. Brooding cannot possibly lead to healthy-minded action. Its tendency, rather is to develop a state of mind that may pass over into insanity. Yet many people indulge in this dangerous luxury of brooding. Particularly is this likely to be the case with people to whom life has not been as kind as it might have been.

Briefly Answered.

The English manner of today, of what are called the classes, is the growth of only a century or so, John Galsworthy writes in the Yale Review. There was probably nothing at all like it in the days of Elizabeth or even of Charles II. The English manner was still racy when the inhabitants of Virginia, as we are told, sent over to ask that there might be dispatched to them some hierarchical assistance for the good of their souls, and were answered "D—n your souls, grow tobacco."

"Safety First" Tea Kettle.

A new tea kettle is supplied with an extra opening in the top through which it may be filled without the inconvenience and danger of being scalded by the steam generated when cold water is poured into the hot kettle. The second opening is a small one in front of the bail and is protected by a hinged swing cover, which may be operated by the thumb while the kettle is being held by the bail under the faucet.

Art in Coins.

To the general student of art and history the greatest interest of coins arises from the fact that they form the earliest portrait gallery of royal personages. The oldest authentic portraits of English kings are those of Edward IV and Richard III.

BUT HE WENT WITH SPEED

That Was About All Witness Cared to Testify as to the Gait of Defendant.

The trial was in the Marion circuit court, on appeal from the police court, where the defendant had been guilty of violating a city ordinance prohibiting the throwing of rubbish in the streets, relates the Indianapolis News. The charge had been preferred by a neighbor, who filed his affidavit setting forth that the defendant had willfully, unlawfully and maliciously thrown certain particles of glass into the street in front of affiant's residence.

During the hearing of testimony in the county court the defendant's lawyer, with all sails set, let loose his best line of cross-examination of the complaining neighbor.

"You say, Mr. Witness," the lawyer snarled, "that you saw this defendant throw some glass in front of your house and then run back to his front door—you mean to tell this court that he ran or just simply walked fast?"

"I guess I know when I see a man run," the witness half answered.

"I say, did he run or just walk fast?" the attorney thundered.

"Judge, your honor," the witness excitedly replied, as he turned and faced the judge, "This here same lawyer made me a liar in police court. He might for all I know gone sixty miles an hour. I ain't no judge of human nature."

Had Had an "Explain."

Kenneth and his cousin were especially fond of playing in the barn, and when told by his sister to be careful and to play only where there was no danger of being hurt Kenneth said, with a grownup air, "Oh, yes, we'll be careful, 'cause daddy just gave us an explain all about that."

Favored by Nature.

The largest tongue in the world in proportion to its owner's size is that owned by the North Queensland hawk-moth, which sports a length of six and a half inches, although there is a long-horn beetle a little higher up, in New Guinea, which has horns measuring 17 inches.

October.

October is so called from being the eighth in the year, according to the old Latin calendar. It was styled "wine month" by our Saxon ancestors. The festival of the Rosary is celebrated Oct. 1 in honor of the Virgin, who is especially invoked in the devotions for success, believed to have been obtained through her intercession in the battle of Lepanto, in 1571, when the Turks were defeated.

Speakin' of Boys.

"Yes," said the almost-philosopher, "there's a heap of difference in the attitude parents take in raisin' boys. Some folks are content to bring 'em up to be good men for the boys' own sakes. Others selfishly harp about wantin' the boys to be a credit to their parents. This may be all right, but it seems to me the only thing the old folks can borrow on that kind of credit is trouble."

Armageddon.

"Palestine's great fertile plain appealed to the strategists of the ancient world as an ideal battle ground. Here Gideon triumphed over the Midianites and the Philistines over Saul. The frequent wars between Assyria and Egypt were fought out on the field of Armageddon. The name has become figurative in modern usage.

MILK WILL BE SOLD AT 12c THIS WINTER

GOVERNMENT SETS PRICE OF MILK AND CREAM AT PRICE ON SEPT. 14.

Mr. W. F. O'Connor made an order recently to the effect that milk producers and vendors must not raise the prices of milk and cream higher than they were on Sept. 14.

This means that Peterborough consumers will obtain their milk during the winter months for 12c a quart, and also means that the milk vendors of the city will not receive more than 12c a quart during the winter months.

It is generally asserted here that the producers will probably refuse to supply milk at that price. Last winter the price of milk did not rise above that of the summer months. The reason for this was that the vendors decided to leave the price constant, and what they would lose during the winter months they could gain on the reduced summer price. But the farmers fooled them by not lowering the price during the summer months, and now the government fools them by not allowing a raise in the price for this winter. This means that the local vendors are working on a very close margin, and the government order means a great deal to them. Undoubtedly the farmers will raise a storm of protest over this set price for milk, but if they refuse to sell their milk at present prices Peterborough will go "milk dry," because the vendors can allow them nothing on their present narrow margin.

If it is impossible for the farmers to produce the milk at this price the government will have to relent of its position. If not, then the farmers will have to take the price and the consumers will receive milk again this winter for 12c a quart.

SEE A CLEAR WAY TO JEWISH STATE

ZIONISTS DELEGATES CONVINCED CHICAGO CONVENTION ACHIEVED PURPOSE.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—The delegates to the Zionists' convention are going home convinced that they have cleared the way for the establishing of the Jewish state in Palestine as soon as the Turkish treaty is made a matter of public history. The year 1920 will witness an unprecedented Jewish renaissance in the United States Jewish literature, Hebrew music and all forms of Semitic culture will be revived as a part of Zionist propaganda. In addition to the cultural work undertaken by the convention for the next year numerous committees have been appointed for the purpose of lining up American-Jewish financial interests and co-ordinating the various Jewish organizations in the country.

Today's session in the Auditorium theatre revealed that the Zionists are confronted by a number of difficulties within the ranks of the Jews themselves in putting over their famous ideal of a Jewish homeland. Three or four rival organizations exist who have to date refused to submerge themselves under the Zionist banner. Also there is a strong feeling among orthodox rabbis that Zionism is a weaning from religion to politics. An equally strong anti-Zionist feeling also exists among the followers of the "reformed" Jewish faith. These argue that America is the best field for the development of the Jew and Americanism should be his highest ideal.

"All these tendencies will have to be neutralized or removed before Zionism can achieve its goal," said the chairman of the organization committee, Nathan Kaplan, today. "Our work in America during the next year will be to bring the Jew together, not as immigrants for Palestine but as well wishers of the Zion ideal." Election of officers will close the twenty-second annual convention tonight.

LEFT FOR OWEN SOUND

Mr. J. F. P. Bernie has left this city to take up his residence in Owen Sound, with the best wishes of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

He graduated in arts from Victoria University in 1911 and attended Osgoode Hall for the following three years, being called to the bar in 1914. He was an honor man from both institutions.

Mr. Bernie practiced law for one year at Wadena, Sask., and later in September, 1915, came to Peterborough where he was associated in business with R. R. Hall.

Enlisted with Royal Canadian Horse Artillery in January, 1916, went overseas in September, 1916, and was wounded April 1, 1918. Returned home to Canada October 31, 1918. Left Peterborough September 19, 1919, to be junior partner in the firm of Wright and Telford, Owen Sound.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

FAIRBAIRN—GRANT

The marriage took place in St. Thomas' Church, Huron street, Toronto on Saturday afternoon, Rev. R. Mills Fairbairn Ottawa, officiating of Lila Bloomfield daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Fairbairn, to Capt. Reginald John Grant, late R.A.F. son of the late Mr. John Grant and of Mrs. Grant Woodville. The church was beautifully decorated with masses of vari-colored asters and palms. The organist played the wedding music and during the signing of the register, Miss Rachelle Copeland played the violin most exquisitely. The lovely bride who was brought in and given away by her father wore a lovely and becoming gown of draped ivory duchess satin lined with pink the skirt was draped and the court train was lined with tiny frills of pink georgette crepe and edged with ivory ostrich, the corsage was embroidered with pearls with long point in front. The tulle veil was edged with seed pearls and arranged with a small wreath of orange blossoms to show the bride's exquisite hair. She carried a shower bouquet of orphelia roses and sonia and wore the groom's present a gold watch bracelet and a very handsome brooch set with a large black pearl the gift of a friend. Her matron of honor, Mrs. L. B. Rorke wore a French gown of bisque crepe and a black velvet hat, carried Orphelia roses and wore the groom's gift an onyx and diamond pin. The bridesmaids were Miss Frances Carveth and Miss Vivian Galbraith (Newcastle) who were dressed alike in crepe frocks one wearing blue and the other pink, with black velvet hats carrying pink Killarney roses and wearing the groom's gift a gold bracelet. The best man was Capt. were Mr. Harold Allen and Mr. W. Rees. The groom's present were to the best man gold sleeve links and to the ushers scarf pins.

After the ceremony Mrs. Fairbairn held a reception at the spacious house in Charles street west, when she looked handsome in a gown of grey crepe de chine with tunic and panels of capucine crepe de chine brocaded with grey velvet, a hat of grey velvet and plumes and corsage bouquet of orchids. The whole house was most artistically decorated with asters of every brilliant hue which were most effective against the ivory woodwork and over the mantels. After the toasts and speeches, Capt. and Mrs. Grant drove away in their own motor to spend the honeymoon in the Adirondacks the bride travelling in a smart tailor made suit of blue serge and a blue tam-o-shanter with silver braid. On their return they will live in the Westminster Bloor street. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbairn entertained the wedding party at dinner and afterwards gave a box party at the Royal Alexandra, and supper at the King Edward after the performance. The bride, who is a great favorite received a great many presents and the groom several presentations from the staff of the Russell Motor Co. and Mr. T. A. Russell.

ROOTES—BRIDGETT

On Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, Florence, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Rootes, to Mr. Frank Bridgett, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bridgett, of Earls Barton, England.

The wedding was performed by Rev. R. B. Grobb, at All Saints' church, in the presence of a large number of friends. The bride wore navy blue, with a beaver hat of grey and grey maribeaux ruff to match.

The bride was given away by her father and the young couple were unattended.

After the ceremony, the wedding party proceeded to the home of the bride, where a dainty wedding repast was served.

The happy couple will reside in Peterborough, and have the best wishes of their many friends and acquaintances.

DR. GODFREY AGAIN FOR WEST YORK

WAS THE UNANIMOUS NOMINEE AT LIBERAL-CONSERVATIVE CONVETION SATURDAY.

Weston Ont. Sept. 21—At a largely attended convention of the West York Liberal-Conservative Association, held in the town hall here this afternoon Dr Forbes Godfrey M. L. A. was unanimously endorsed as the party's candidate in the next provincial elections.

In acknowledging the nomination Dr. Godfrey said this was the fifth consecutive time he had received it. Hon. Dr. Cody also spoke.

Dr. Godfrey's nomination was moved by Thomas Griffith and no sooner had it been put forward than somebody moved that nominations then close, which the meeting enthusiastically approved. The hall was filled with a gathering of between 250 and 300 easily half of whom were ladies.

In the course of his remarks Dr. Godfrey eulogized the record of the Queen's Park, saying that in all the electoral contests since it came into power not one single election protest had there been in the courts of the province. They fought the fight years ago and put out the rotten government of the day. The speaker then alluded to the question of unrest and remarked that when they heard some blatherskite of an agitator with long hair and red eyes telling them that the country was going to perdition they should not believe him. The candidate then referred to his stewardship in the legislature. He stated the first subject he spoke on in the House was consumptive sanitaria $88 000. He also spoke of his efforts to check diptheria and give the same protection to the poor man's child as the rich man's. He kept hammering away at the Hon W. J. Hanna until now they had free complete anti-toxin in the province. Dr. Godfrey stated in his opinion there would probably be within a month another outbreak of "flu." He had spoken to the health department about a certain vaccine as a preventative at the Industrial School at Mimico during the last epidemic and said in ten days the entire province of Ontario would have that vaccine distributed free.

OBITUARY

JAMES J. DUFFUS

The death occurred this morning about 4.45 o'clock of James J. Duffus aged 79, at his home, 269 Romaine street.

Deceased was born in Cobourg, Ontario, in the year 1840 and leaves to mourn his loss his wife and five sons, ex-Mayor Jos. J. Duffus, Michael J., William A., Herbert J. and Egbert L., all of this city, one daughter, Mrs. Basil Cook, of Port Hope, and one sister, Mrs. Woods, of Tacoma, Washington territory, U. S. A.

The late Mr. Duffus was the third son of a family of seven. The late Rev. C. J. Duffus, of Kingston, was a brother.

Mr. James Duffus was married on February 25, 1873, to Maria Galvin, daughter of Michael Galvin, Smith Township, of which union there was born the children, six of whom survive him.

The late Mr. Duffus' father was a native of Keith Banffshire, Scotland, and first settled at Cobourg. When he was three years of age the family moved to the homestead, three miles out on the Keene road, known as the Cherry Valley Farm, where he lived until about five years ago when he retired to this city where he has resided ever since.

He was one of the oldest, best known and most highly respected residents of this county and was always respected for his sterling qualities. He was a faithful attendant at Sacred Heart Church.

He was a staunch Liberal and although of a retiring disposition never acesed to take an active interest in municipal, provincial and dominion affairs. He was frequently offered high honors but always declined preferring close attention to business and family affairs.

The funeral will take place from his residence, 269 Romaine street, on Wednesday morning, Sept. 24, at 9 o'clock to the Sacred Heart Church. Interment in St. Peter's cemetery.

THE LILY FRIENDSHIP

(By Leona.)

"Somewhere is one who holds your words as dear,
Who trusts in you as in no other friend;
Who thinks you true though you may not be near,
Who loyally will all your acts defend."

In the garden of every heart there is one bloom which stands out from the others by reason of its surpassing beauty. It is tall and graceful, with curving wings of crystalline whiteness and a heart of purest gold. Sometimes, when swayed by a gentle breath of emotion, it scatters sweet incense 'round. It is a plant o' the very tenderest species—a blossom that will respond readily to thoughtful care and die with the least chill of misusage or neglect. This is the "Lily of Friendship" and it can transform any heart wherein it grows into a haven of sunlight, a garden of bliss and peace.

But there are a great many pests which thrive on the substance of the plant. Contemptible parasites which draw their life from its very roots and so rob it of all strength and loveliness. The most deadly of these creatures is suspicion—mistrust. This enemy will worm its stealthy way into your garden and will blast the most beautiful friendship that ever existed with one bite. Other pests are, though not so poisonous which, if allowed entrance, will prey upon the life of the precious lily until it gradually shrivels up into a mere semblance of its former self. These are indifference, neglect, thoughtlessness and the thousand little prickly thorns that gnaw at the very heart of the flower.

Oh, what innumerable desecrations have been committed against that sacred title "friend"! How that name has been abused—has been dragged in the dust of a self seeking world, until stripped of all its meaning—robbed of all its charming suggestiveness. It echoes on thousands of lips today a mere hollow sound. A people whose sense of the infinite value of such things has become paralyzed play upon this sentiment—appropriate the relationship as a means to promote their own petty interests in a way that is appalling—a way that makes skeptics of the most credulous. When that friend you trusted is proved false; when that one you thought you knew to be true as steel only to be disillusioned, then you grew mistrustful.

Perhaps it was the sunny day friend. In the bright noon of success, when your way was strewn with gems of joy and gilded rays of prosperity lit your path, he was there. He favored you with his most gracious smile while he basked in the light of your select circle. Then when the night of trouble darkened down and you turned to your friend for solace and support—you were alone. Or perhaps it was that one who made such a profession of loyalty to your face and slung his little barbed shafts at you when off your guard. Or it may have been that one whose friendship you honestly believed to be pure and disinterested, until you discovered the motive that lay behind it. And so your trusted friend was "out for himself." Or it may have been any one of the posing thousands that caused you to turn from the world with sadness and a doubting heart.

And so, that deadly germ—the germ of mistrust—entered your garden. But do not let it live, for it will prey upon that lovely bloom that is the sunshine of your days. And remember, if you can find one friend—just one—in all this wide world, who is above the clatter of gold, who is "with you" in sunlight and shade, then be glad for you have found a treasure more precious than all the wealth beneath the waves of the ocean.

are members of the council, so that in all matters of action, the affirmative vote of the United States is necessary and equivalent to the unanimous vote of the representatives of the several parts of the British Empire. The united votes of the several parts of the British Empire cannot offset or overcome the vote of the United States.

2.—Is it true that under the League of Nations foreign countries can order the sending of American troops to foreign countries?

Answer—It is not. The right of Congress to determine such matters is in no wise impaired.

3.—What effect will the League of Nations have in either forwarding or hindering the final restoration of Shantung to China? What effect will the League of Nations have in preventing further spoliation of China and the abrogation of all such special privilege now enjoyed in China by foreign countries?

Answer—The League of Nations will have a very powerful effect in forwarding the final restoration of Shantung to China and no other instrumentality or action can be substituted which could bring that result about. The authority of the League will under article X be constantly directed toward safeguarding the territorial integrity and political independence of China.

It will, therefore, absolutely prevent the further spoliation of China, promote the restoration in China of the several privileges now long enjoyed by foreign countries and assure China of the completion of the process by which Shantung will presently be returned to her in full sovereignty. In the past there has been no tribunal which could be resorted to for any of these purposes.

4.—Is there anything in the League of Nations covenant or the peace treaty which directly or indirectly in any manner imposes on the United States any obligations, moral or otherwise, of the slightest character to support England in any way in case of revolt in Ireland.

Answer—There is not. The only guarantee contained in the covenant is against external aggression, and those who framed the covenant were scrupulously careful in no way to interfere with what they regarded as the sacred rights of self determination.

5.—What effect, if any, will the League of Nations covenant have in either hindering or furthering the cause of Irish freedom?

Answer.—It was not possible for the Peace Conference to act with regard to the self-determination of any territories except those which had belonged to the defeated empires, but in the covenant of the League of Nations it has set up for the first time in Article 11 a forum to which all claims of self-determination which are likely to disturb the peace of the world or the good understanding between nations upon which the peace of the world depends can be brought.

CITY WILL ELIMINATE DANGER SPOT ON M'DONNEL STREET WEST

Pipe Drain Ditch and Create a Road Where One Should Have Been Long Ago—Adjacent Townships Again Threaten Injunction Re Sewage Disposal

Mr. Edgar Worth, managing director of Canadian Woollens, Limited, wrote City Council last evening, saying that McDonnel street, after it leaves the bridge before passing their factory becomes just a single road, and very dangerous to traffic. He asked that the road be widened to its full width. Also that Cambridge street, north of McDonnel, be opened up as the Bonner-Worth factory comes right up to this street, from which an entrance to the offices is needed.

The street railway runs up McDonnel street, and the south side of the track after leaving the bridge, up to the Monaghan Road, is nothing but a grass-grown ditch impossible to traffic. This leaves but half a road at this point, too narrow for a street car and two motors to pass in safety, and a couple of accidents have occurred there. Hence the company's request for Council's action.

In connection with the foregoing Canadian Woollens, Limited, pointed out that there is a tremendous amount of traffic along McDonnel street, where the street cars come down at a very high rate of speed. A few weeks ago the driver of one of the company's trucks in crossing over the tracks at the bridge to get on the right side of the road was run into by a street car and did considerable damage. The street car company are now suing Canadian Woollens, Limited.

The city engineer reported that to pipe drain this ditch referred to and put the road south side of the track in shape for traffic, would cost $350.

On motion of Ald. Turner and Taylor, the city engineer was instructed to proceed with this work to open Cambridge street north of McDonnel street

To Lower Culvert.

J. J. Howden asked for a culvert lowered on Otonabee street to afford satisfactory drainage to his property.

Ald. Turner and Taylor moved that this work be done under the city engineer's supervision. Carried.

Granolithic Sidewalks.

A bylaw to authorize the construction of a granolithic sidewalk on the east side of Water street to a point 96 ft. north of King street, to a point 217 ft. north of King street, and on the west side of Elias avenue from Charlotte to King street, passed its several readings.

This work will be done by day labor under the city engineer's supervision.

Sewage Disposal.

On behalf of the Townships of Otonabee, North and South Monaghan and those corporations of Boards of Health, E. A. Peck gave notice of his application for a new order from the Railway and Municipal Board to restrain the city from emptying its sewage into the Otonabee River, and to enforce immediate steps to secure a sewage disposal plant. This went to the Board of Works

Ald. Phelan hoped to make a report of progress in this connection to the Board of Works this week.

An Old Question.

J. Ronco, Donegal street, complained again of damage to his property by the overflow of Downie street creek.

The Mayor: "All the ratepayers affected by this creek should enter an action against Mr. Dumble."

His Worship explained that Council had hoped to have had by now some definite action agreed on between Mr. Dumble and the city for removing the blockage of this creek said to be on the former's property. But Mr. Dumble had been out of town for a week and subsequently very busy. The matter will be looked into at once.

Paving George Street.

Bylaw to authorize the construction of an asphaltic pavement on George street, from the C.P.R. to Rink street, and on George street, from Rink to Romaine street, passed its three readings.

This measure was merely passed in preparation for the work which will not be undertaken until next year, so far as can be seen at present.

Road Commissioner.

A bylaw to appoint Harry Phelan a commissioner for the County of Peterborough under the Ontario Highways Act. Carried.

Another Hydrant.

Ald. Morrison and Crowe moved that a hydrant be installed at the corner of Eaglebrn and Charles street, East City. This carried.

Sub Fire Station.

On motion of Alderman Phelan, the Mayor and Chairman Ald. Morrison were authorized to make all arrangements for a temporary fire station in East City. The idea is for stabling and apparatus room and convenient board for firemen until a permanent station is secured.

Those Present.

There were present: Mayor Duncan, Aldermen Morrison, Crowe, J. J. Turner, Edgar, A. A. McIntyre, Taylor and Phelan.

FOUR BANDITS WHO FIGURED IN OCEAN LIMITED TRAIN ROBBERY ROUNDED UP

Men Who Rifled Canadian National Mail of $71,000 are Captured—Alleged Hold Up Was Plot Carried Out by Railway Conductor—Missing Money Not Located

Quebec, Sept. 23.—After five days of incessant work the police effected four arrests in the City of Quebec today, and believe they have captured the bandits who figured in the hold-up and rifling of the mail car on the Ocean Limited train between Lewis and Montmagny on the morning of Thursday, September 18. The men arrested are George Topping, a freight conductor on the Canadian National Railways, and J. Bernardin and T. Proteau. Proteau, a former garage owner, are the men who, disguised with masks and carrying revolvers, entered the mail car, and after binding the hands and feet of the five mail clerks, ransacked the mail and got away with $71,000 in five and ten-dollar notes. The other two men arrested, who are held as material witnesses, are George Lavesseur, a brother-in-law of Topping's, and Napoleon Boulanger, of Levis.

While the police have not yet located the missing money, they hope to be able to do so in a very short time, and in the meantime they have the masks used by the bandits when they made their haul.

The First Arrests.

The first arrests made last night were those of George Levasseur and Napoleon Boulanger, the former a mechanic in the employ of the Gosselin firm at Levis, while the latter was also a resident of Levis. Both were arrested in Quebec, the former in St. Joseph Street, and the latter as he was entering the Quebec Post Office. It is understood that they are merely held as witnesses in the case. When the police had secured statements from these men, they immediately set out and arrested Topping and Proteau. All the other arrests were made by Canadian National Railway Police, assisted by the Dominion Police.

The two principals who did the actual hold-up are alleged to be, George Topping, transcontinental railway conductor, who runs between Chaudiers and Monk, and a man called J. Bernardin T. Proteau. They got off the train at Montmagny after the hold-up. They had an automobile owned by a man named Blais, of this city, who knew nothing of the use to which his car was being put. The car was taken down to the meeting place by George Lavasseur, the owner of a garage, in Ste. Helen Street, who was later in the employ of the Gosselin firm, at Levis, and Napoleon Boulanger, another employ of the same firm. These two men with the car met Topping and Proteau between the two bridges just east of the I.C.R. station at Montmagny. Instead of taking the main highway, they took the back range road and their car broke down about a mile and a half east of St. Peirre de Montmagny.

When this happened, Topping and Proteau, with a satchel, doubtless containing the money, took to the fields, while Levasseur and Boulanger looked up assistance.

They finally got a man from St. Pierre to tow the car to that place and they were driven into Levis in a vehicle, arriving there about 8 o'clock on Thursday morning.

The First Clue.

It was discovered during the night following the hold-up that the automobile had broken down, and though the stories told by Levasseur and Boulanger were plausible, they were never really believed, and this morning Inspector Green secured admissions from Boulanger first, which were taken down under oath. Later in the day Levasseur was taken out of his employer's car on St. Joseph Street and brought to the office of the post office inspector where his story as previously related was confronted with the admissions made by Boulanger, when he also made admissions of his own which implicated Topping and Proteau. Warrants were then sworn out by Inspector Green for the holding of Boulanger and Levasseur as material witnesses and they were turned over to the police, while warrants for the arrest of Topping and Proteau were immediately issued.

Topping, who is recognized as the leader of the hold-up, was seen at Berthieren-Bas on Sunday, where he had a drink with a man named Collard of St. Pierre, Montmagny. Part of a rope with which the railway mail clerks were tied by the bandits was also secured from the automobile, which is still at St. Pierre, Montmagny.

It is not definitely known how Topping and Proteau reached Quebec, but one story runs that after hiding their booty, they walked all the way and only reached this city on Friday.

PIER FOUNDATION IS SATISFACTORY

EXCAVATED TO THE DEPTH ORDERED BY CHAIRMAN OF RAILWAY BOARD.

THREE FEET BELOW BLUE CLAY

PRESSURE PER SQUARE FOOT WORKS OUT AT 7,850 LBS. OR 3.6 TONS.

H. W. Middlemist, chairman of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, reported by letter to the City Council last night that he had examined the foundation for the new Hunter street bridge pier east of the river, next but one to the river. This excavation had been previously inspected by Mr. Barber and himself on the 28th inst., and the contractor ordered to carry it deeper.

"When I saw it on September 10," wrote Mr. Middlemist, "this had been done and the excavation was then in hard blue clay with some water seeping through the side at the north and between the clay and the soft material above it. The depth of the clay was tested by means of an iron rod driven into it for a depth of five feet when it would go no further. We, therefore, concluded this layer of clay lay on rock and as the excavation had been carried down three feet below the top of the clay it was decided to approve the foundation, limiting the pressure to not over four tons per square foot, and the contractor was ordered to drain off the water before concreting. The actual dimensions of the footing were 13 ft. wide by 45 ft. long, making 585 square feet—the footing in this case being carried right across the full length. The load on it is 4,300,000 lbs., consequently the pressure per square foot would work out at 7,350 lbs. or 3.6 tons per square foot. This was entirely satisfactory to me and also to Mr. Christie, who represented Mr. Barber."

TRIBUTE TO HON. FRANK COCHRANE

PREMIER DECLARES HIS DEATH A SEVERE LOSS TO THE COUNTRY.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 23.—Sir Robert Borden yesterday made the following appreciative reference to the late Hon. Frank Cochrane.

"Hon. Frank Cochran's death is deeply and sincerely mourned by all his colleagues and by no one more than by myself. He became one of my colleagues when the Government was formed in October, 1917, and I was impressed from the first by his conspicuous ability, his strong character, his great capacity for administration, and especially by his earnest and unwavering devotion to public duty. In his administration of the Intercolonial Railway he had an eye single to the public interest, regardless of all minor considerations.

"During the past two or three years the disorder to which he eventually succumbed prevented him from taking so active a part in the affairs of the country as his colleagues would have wished. Nevertheless even under the strain of ill-health he took a keen interest in the work of administration, and when his health permitted he was constant in his attendance at meetings of council. His death is a severe loss not only to his family and to his great circle of warm personal friends, but to his country as a whole. He leaves behind him an honorable and distinguished record in Canadian life."

It is probable that the Dominion Government will be represented by Dr. Reid, Minister of Railways and Canals, at the funeral.

SEVEN MEN SHOT, ONE STABBED, IN STRIKE RIOTS AT NEWCSATLE, PA.

One of the Injured Will Likely Die—Both Employers and Labor Leaders Claim Advantage in Nation-Wide Steel Strike—Carnegie Steel Co's Plant Attacked

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Pittsburg, Sept. 23.—The second day of the steel strike in Pittsburgh district was ushered in with both employers and Union leaders, claiming advantage for their respective sides. Representatives of the companies announce that they are in better shape today to continue operation of these plants which did not close Monday while the Union leaders declare that the strike is spreading and will cripple additional mills before night.

Statements at Variance.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—The second day of the nation-wide strike in the steel industry found all plants in the Chicago district shut down, except the independent mills at Hammond, Ind.

Statements of industrial and Labor heads still were at variance regarding the percentage of workmen who had answered the strike call. Labor leaders asserted today that more than 75 per cent. of workers in this district have left their work, while company officials said the number who failed to report at mills was not more than 20 per cent. of a total of nearly 9,000 men employed in the district.

Seven Men Shot.

Newcastle, Pa., Sept. 23.—With state constabulary, 150 deputy sheriffs and scores of policemen patrolling the streets about the steel plants here, the situation following serious riots last night was slightly improved early today. Nine persons, two women and seven men were shot last night, in addition to the stabbing of one policeman and the injuring of another with a club in an attack on the plant of the Carnegie Steel Co. Three of the injured likely will die, it is said.

RED SOVIETISM RAISED ITS HEAD AT TRADES AND LABOR CONGRESS

George Armstrong, Winnipeg Striker Out on Bail Attempts to Create Diversion at Hamilton.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Hamilton, Sept. 23.—Red soviet-ism reared its hold at the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress this morning, but was side-tracked to the Resolutions Committee by the efforts of an overwhelming majority of Congress.

A Winnipeg Leader.

George Armstrong, one of the Winnipeg strike leaders, charged with sedition, and now out on bail, caused the diversion by introducing a resolution favoring the Soviet form of Government, calling for the immediate withdrawal of troops from Russia, and refusal to furnish aid or finance reactionary governments. Armstrong said he wished to make a few observations, but President Thomas Moore said that the subject matter was not under discussion.

Was in Jail.

One delegate moved that the resolution be placed on file, but an amendment sent it to the Resolutions Committee. One delegate questioned the time of forwarding the resolution. Armstrong immediately retorted: "I could not forward it before, I was in jail until ten days ago." Vociferous applause followed this statement. Armstrong said Labor organizations of France, Britain and Italy had all considered this matter, and the Dominion Congress should give it a fair trial.

Resolutions regarding a $2,000 gratuity for soldiers, and another expressing favor of direct action and the industrial form of organization are also before Congress today.

ELECTION WRITS EXPECTED SOON

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, who is here, declared last night that the writs for the Ontario general election will be issued today.

"There is no announcement to make," was the reply given by Premier Hearst's office, when inquiry was made about the election. There seems no longer any doubt, however, that the election will be held the same day as the referendum—October 20.

THEFT OF $240,000 ARRESTS MADE

TWO BROTHERS SAID TO BE IMPLICATED—GOOD LUCQ FOR CHICAGO POLICE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Three men, one of them Jno. Wejda, clerk in the Chicago post office, who is said to have planned the robbery, and two brothers named Phillips, were arrested here early today charged with stealing $240,000 of a shipment of $415,000 last Thursday from the Federal Reserve Bank here to the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana at Whiting, Ind. Of the stolen funds, $93,630 was recovered; the remainder, according to an alleged confession of two of the men, was abandoned at the outskirts of Chicago, when an automobile in which they were returning from Whiting broke down.

A Piece of Luck.

A "piece of police luck" is pointed to as responsible for the arrest of these men. Chicago city detectives unearthed the postal robbery when two of the men, Leo and Walter Phillips, brothers, were arrested in connection with the robbery of a saloon in which approximately $500 was obtained. Prior to these arrests no announcement of the big holdup had been made.

Irwin Quebec, a young boy at James Bay Junction, near Parry Soudn, was shot and fatally wounded by his brother, who didn't know it was loaded.

Summer time in the U. S. is to be discontinued at 2 o.m. on the last Sunday of October.

TO INVESTIGATE STRIKE

Strikers and Employers to Meet Senate Labor Committee.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Sept. 23.—An investigation of the steel strike by the Senate Labor Committee was ordered today by the Senate. Senator Kenyon said it was proposed to call leaders representing both employees and employers to Washington in an effort to determine the cause of the strike.

DISCUSSED AMENDMENTS

Govt. Caucus Considers Continuance War-Time Prohibition Restrictions.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—The Government caucus today discussed various prohibition amendments, including the possibility of obtaining war-time restrictions for one year, but in the absence of Premier Borden through illness nothing was done definitely.

UNIONIST CAUCUS TODAY MAY HAVE FAR-REACHING CONSEQUENCES

Is the Result of Some Unrest Among Rank and File, Says The Ottawa Journal

"A caucus of the Unionist party summoned for today, may have far-reaching political consequences. The caucus, although not so stated officially, has been called for the purpose of considering the present status and prospective future of the Union party. It is the result of some unrest among the rank and file as to the precise character of the party's creed, policies and platform. Ever since last session there has been an increasing undercurrent of restlessness as to the party's political whereabouts and destination. Old line Conservatives who saw the Government lean more and more toward a policy of lower tariffs become fearful over the national policy, old line Liberals who deserted Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but saw a growing numerical superiority of Conservatives in the ministry, began to wonder whether they were merely minority stockholders in the new political concern. The whole position was vague, and even the Prime Minister's return from Paris, which was expected to result in a new declaration of policy failed to produce either leading or light."

WAR VETERANS WILL NOW ASK FOR GRATUITY TO WIDOWS AND MOTHERS

Largely Attended Meeting Last Night Endorses Provincial and Dominion Action.

At the general meeting of the Great War Veterans last night, the increase in the war gratuity and the action of the Government in connection with this matter was discussed. It was explained that the Dominion conference of the G. W. V. A. had appointed a committee to meet a committee from the Cabinet to discuss the question of an increased gratuity. The extent of the increase was left solely in the hands of the joint committee, who would have the power and the opportunity to look into the matter from all standpoints. This was the request which Sir Robert Borden had refused, it was explained.

President Staunton understood that recently the special committee on war gratuity and soldiers' re-establishment had asked the Government for more power to discuss the matter with the committee of the G.W.V.A. If this is granted the situation will most likely be cleared up.

How About Widows?

Secretary Whatley stated that he felt that the Veterans were omitting a very important and essential feature in their requests. He had never seen where the widows and mothers of the fallen comrades had been considered. He pleaded with the local branch to go on record as strongly emphasizing the point and asking the Government to grant a gratuity to widows and mothers also. "That is the paramount duty of the G.W.V.A. Let us see that the widows and the mothers are attended to first, and then we who are living may ask for more consideration," declared Mr. Whatley.

Comrade Muir felt that in some ways an injustice was being done in the demands of the G. W. V. A. If they were asking for a $2000 gratuity for all returned soldiers, those who had seen years of service in France placed in the same category with those Cook tourists who had donned a suit of khaki and gone over to the Old Country practically on a visit to their parents, then he was opposed to it. "Stick to the widows and orphans and the disabled men; after they are attended to it will be time for us to ask for a little more gratuity."

A resolution was passed "that this branch of the G. W. V. A. go on record as endorsing the action taken by the Provincial and Dominion commands, and request them to look after the widows, mothers and orphans first."

General Business.

Besides the gratuity question a considerable amount of general business was dealt with at last night's meeting.

Comrade Layfield pointed out that the Y. M. C. A. had postponed their Red Triangle fund campaign because

OVER 800 APPEALS GRANTED IN CITY

GREATEST FAIRNESS SHOWN BY ALL PARTIES IN COMPLETING VOTERS' LISTS.

Great fairness has been shown by all parties in connection with the voters' list appeals. Over 800 appeals have been granted in the city alone with practically no refusals. There have been no attempts to get any names on the list who are not entitled to vote by any of the parties, but an exceptional interest has been displayed throughout. Many attending personally to get their names or who never before took any real interest in matters of this kind.

Those responsible for the completion of the lists have gone out of their way to make absolutely certain that every one entitled to it has a vote, and if the lists are not yet complete there is no one to blame except those interested in getting the parties on who have been left off.

The county appeals are now being heard and equal opportunities are

THE EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

THE NATIONAL Conference on Education, which is to be held in Winnipeg October 20-22, aims at the establishment of an unofficial bureau of the ablest educational experts for dissemination of the best educational methods and ideals in the interests of the whole people. At this conference an examination of the problem of education in the light of Canada's needs will be the outstanding feature, with a view to establishing education in our schools on lines which will make for a prosperous, Christian and intelligent democracy. This conference aims at a movement for a broader and more constructive citizenship education, without which the purposes of national reconstruction will be ineffective as a whole. President Cullen, Acadia University, Wolfville, N. S., says: "The conference's object is the evolution of a national ethical conscience," and this is an ideal which should appeal to every Canadian who believes, as all should, in a great world-leading future for his race—industrially, educationally, and in national character.

HUNDRED PER CENT. INCREASE.

WHETHER THE DAYS of the profiteer are numbered or not is a story yet to be told. Investigations into prices for food now claim public attention and approval but there are many lines of commodities in which prices are still jumping by leaps and bounds, and one is unexpectedly confronted by increases on trivial things in unexpected quarters. For instance, a lead pencil in the last two weeks has climbed in selling valuation by just one hundred per cent. Ten cents for a pencil looks like offering a promising field for investigation, as do prices on many small requirements for every day use. It does seem as though high prices have become a disease engendered by the war, and a thousand times harder to eradicate than was the German war fever and lust for world power of forty years' building.

A hundred per cent increase on a small article like a lead pencil ten months after Armistice is not very heartening to a public who looked for substantial decreases after the war, and let us hope that the Government's probe into price will be, now that it has started, comprehensive and inclusive of everything the consumer needs, for the cost of living in Canada is rapidly making this fair Dominion the so-called "brightest jewel in the british crown," prohibitive to the average man.

SOLDIER LAND SETTLEMENT.

THE SOLDIER Land Settlement Board is doing a great work for the soldiers. A report on the loans made up to July 26 shows that something tangible is being done, says the Brandon Weekly Sun. Just how tangible is shown by the statement that up to that time 6,620 loans had been made aggregating $21,011,000. This works out at an average of about $3500 per loan. (The latest figures up to August 30 show 10,293 loans amounting to $30,906,130, an average of $3002. The number of applications for qualification certificates in the same period is 31,915, of which 23,936 have been approved.) It indicates that the borrowings of soldier-farmers are being limited to essentials. The conditions of lending are stringent though not niggardly. They are a guarantee of the wise use to which the money is being put.

Of the 25,722 applications for land made to July 26 19,558 have been approved, says the Moosejaw Daily News. Some of these applicants do not seek to borrow money; they have sufficient to finance themselves, for the present at least. Some of the others know so little about farming that they are taking the training the Board provides as a preliminary. The Soldier Land Settlement Board takes the logical position of the industry in which they seek to engage, otherwise they could not but fail, even though unlimited money were placed at their disposal. Therefore, they require that every successful applicant must possess qualifications as a farmer. The interest that is taken in the scheme is evident from the fact that nearly twenty-six thousand men applied for land and nearly twenty thousand applications have been approved. The Board is empowered to make loans to a soldier-settler up to $7500, on land, buildings and stock, but evidently in few cases this amount is loaned. The Board properly appreciates that even if an applicant has considerable capital, a mortgage of this amount is a heavy handicap, and the restriction of the loans to moderate sums is a good augury of success for the borrowers.

Not all the soldiers are going on the new land. Many have made applications for loans with which to make payments on improved farms, so that it is impossible to estimate how much land will be brought under cultivation by the operations of the Soldier Land Settlement scheme. However, the total area under cultivation in Canada is only forty million acres, so that it is a certainty that this will be appreciably augmented by the soldier settlement.

After the census of the men overseas had been taken and it became apparent that possibly 70,000 of them would decide to go farming, the placing of a $7500 maximum on the loans made it appear as if a stupendous sum would be required to finance the undertaking. If the amount loaned up to July 26 is $21,000,000, with the crop season too far advanced for any but preparatory work for 1920, the outlook is now for a very greatly reduced outlay if original plans had been adhered to.

The announcement that arrangements had been completed by the Board for the inclusion of imperial soldiers or sailors or others of the British Army not resident in Canada, widens the scope very greatly. The inclusion of these men, providing they have special qualifications or take special training, may require an even greater expenditure than was ever anticipated. It will, however, bring to Canada many splendid men. There is plenty of room and a warm welcome for all.

If the Soldier Settlement Board continues to exercise the same care and economy through to the end, Canada is likely to have the distinction of the best soldiers' settlement system in the world.

PROHIBITION AND SCRIPTURE.

THE FOLLOWING excerpts are from an article by Frank Anderson, M.A. (Oxon), in Saturday Night, in reply to an article in the same paper, quoting some passages from the Bible that would seem to favor drink. He says:

"Not one of the Scripture passages adduced is of sufficient force to show that our Lord or His apostles would uphold the present day colossal engine of human demoralization represented by the liquor traffic.

"Can teetotalism or prohibition be justified by Scripture? Emphatically, yes! Now let me ask:

1. "Can a Christian man consistently manufacture or sell liquor? Does not Christ tell us that it were well for a man if a mill-stone were hanged about his neck and he were thrown into the sea rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble'? (Luke 17:2 R.V.) Is not the man who runs the distillery, the brewery, the saloon, putting a stumbling block in the way of right living before every man or woman who is tempted by his wares? Is this a Christian thing to do?

2. "Can a Christian man consistently take liquor as a beverage? What of St. Paul's precept and example? 'If meat maketh my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore, that I make not my brother to stumble.' (I. Cor. 8:13, R.V.) The principle is clear: the Christian man is expected to surrender his liberty, when the misuse of liberty by a weaker brother, emboldened by his example, leads to ruin.

"Further, Christ seems to have overlooked the two passages which tell us expressly that 'Drunkards shall not inherit the Kingdom of God.' (I. Cor 6:10; Gal. 5:21.) Will a priest of the Anglican Church tolerate the saloon keeper who sells his son that which may (even by the remotest chance) contribute to his exclusion from the Kingdom of God?

"Doctors are telling us that alcohol is a potent stimulus to sexual vice, and sexual vice begets that hideous monster, venereal disease. 'Eliminate alcohol,' they say, 'and you will largely eliminate venereal disease.' Is it quite impossible, then, that a man whom drink has led to vice, and who through vice has contracted this disease, may marry my pure daughter, and hand down my name, through no fault of mine, to posterity as the grandfather of some defectives and feeble-minded who have to be shut up at public expense in asylums? Of course, some people will break the law and have to adopt sneaky ways to do it, but so does the burglar; yet there is no suggestion to repeal the laws against stealing; the thief dare not steal $1.00 from my son but the liquor seller may with impunity steal all his moral fibre, which is more precious than rubies!

"While provincial prohibition is good, Dominion prohibiton would be infinitely preferable. The benefits gained from these laws are almost incalculable, and the very thought of going back to the old system is out of the question."

DEMOCRATIZE INDUSTRY.

(The Public, New York.)

The attempt to preserve a democratic form of government and an autocratic form of industry side by side is blamed for the present industrial unrest in this country by Dr. Roy W. Sellers, professor in the University of Michigan.

SUGAR PROFITEERING.

(The Public, New York.)

One of the first concrete results of the campaign against profiteering being conducted in New York City was announced by Arthur Williams, Federal food administrator, who said the manager of the United Sugar Company had admitted selling sugar at 14 cents a pound wholesale when the fair price was 9½ cents. The company agreed to refund the excess profit.

ELECTRIFYING WHEAT.

(Toronto Globe.)

An interesting experiment on the effect of electrifying wheat before sowing it has been carried on since last November in Kent England. The wheat which was so treated showed a marked difference, according to the London Times, being much the more vigorous in growth and habit, and promising, so far as the experts present were able to judge, a yield of at least twenty per cent. higher than that of the untreated plot. There were evident signs of rust, too, in the untreated crop, and it was a significant fact that the other plot was, at any rate at the present stage, entirely free from this disease. Nothing is said, however, about the relative costs.

BLOW AT IRISH AGITATORS.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

Because Mayor Hylan of New York in his capacity as representative of a great American city has associated himself with some act of official courtesy in connection with the Prince of Wales, he has been denounced by the editor of the Gaelic American, and accused of lacking sympathy with the hopes and aspirations of the Irish people. Mayor Hylan's reply to the editor contains the following sentences: "My sympathies with Ireland are fully as deep and as great as yours. The fact that I have not made my living exploiting them is not necessarily a test of my sincerity."

It is a sore touch. It may not cause the editor of the Gaelic American to think; but it should have that effect on others. There would be much more hope for a satisfactory solution of the Irish problem were it not that so many professional Irishmen find it profitable to exploit their "sympathies."

BOTHA'S WISE SUCCESSOR.

(Ottawa Journal.)

General Smuts' firm stand against the Nationalists and Separatists of South Africa, reported in cable despatches over the week-end, must be reassuring to the whole Empire. The Nationalist party is stronger in South Africa than is generally supposed. Botha's commanding figure and his genius for conciliation were able to tip the scales in favor of unity and common sense, but the power of Hertzog was not to be despised, and there was some fear that the passing of the great Boer general and statesman troublous times would result. General Smuts, however, has taken early opportunity of stating that he stands for the policy of his noted predecessor, and his assurance will be hailed with satisfaction by every friend of peace and concord within the British Commonwealth.

SHUT DOOR ON WAR

Many years ago Bayard Taylor, writing at Leipzig, Germany, said:

"The battle of Leipsic, which occurred in October, 1813, was one of the most bloody and hard fought battles which history records. The combined forces of the Austrians, Prussians, Russians and Swedes amounted to 300,000, while those of Napoleon ranked at 190,000 men. The battle raged four days, and the meeting of half a million men in deadly conflict was accompanied by the thunder of 1,600 cannon. After the battle the vast plain was strewn with upward of 50,000 dead.

"It is difficult to conceive such slaughter while looking at the quiet landscape. It seemed more like a legend of the past ages, when ignorance and passion led men to murder and destroy, than an event which the last half century witnessed. For the sake of humanity it is to be hoped that the world will never see such another."

It is needless to give here a comparison to show how little was this battle, seen from the appaling eminence of the huge and horrible battles of the world war lately closed.

The world, in its ignorance of those days, or in the selfishness and ambitions of its European masters, left the door open for more war. The evil spirit of war has hovered over every home in Europe since. Its boyes and men have been prepared and held subject to call any day to another bloody conflict.

It seems to me that President Wilson is trying to shut the door of war, so that our boys and men shall not be sleeping always on their arms, subject to call to an even more atrocious conflict, a more savage struggle for selfish ambition, than the latest one. And it seems to me that the senators who are opposing the president are maneuvring to leave the door open.

The world has changed since 1813. The printing press and the public school and the steady growth of Christian civilization have changed the masses—the people who must do the fighting. The people now are saying to the senators, and all others whom it may concern: "Beware of any act which will cause it to be said that the lives of the boys who died for peace were wasted."

In fact, President Wilson is laying the foundation for a big "take notice" club, as big as the country, that will warn the senate not to trifle with the feelings of a nation which yielded to war only on presentation of the highest purposes. O. L. COLBURN.

HAS NEW IDEA IN SCULPTURE

Tennessee Girl Uses Dried Apples to Fashion Her Models of the Human Form Divine.

Down in Knoxville, Tenn., lives Miss Isabel Million, who has created a new and distinct art. To be brief, she has developed dried apple sculpture with remarkable results.

For years Miss Million has been interested in the various types of mountaineers who come down to her father's store to trade. Having artistic ability, she tried a good many times to model their quaint and weather-beaten faces by the conventional methods of sculpture, but the results did not satisfy her. One evening, while cutting apples to dry them for the future, she picked up a piece of partially dried apple and noted its striking resemblance to the wrinkled face of the usual elderly mountaineer, whom she was endeavoring to portray.

Taking up a sharp knife, she did a little cutting so as to fashion the wrinkled apple into a human face. The outcome was most successful; she saw possibilities in this newly discovered art; and she set to work experimenting in dried apple sculpture. Little by little she became quite expert in making dolls whose heads are simply dried apples, cleverly cut before they are dried.

Miss Million has found a satisfactory preservative with which she varnishes the dried apple heads when they have reached the desired state of dryness. The costumes and accessories are carefully copied from life; indeed, Miss Million always has some particular person in mind when she evolves a little doll with a dried apple face.

Only That Difference.

As I was going shopping I met a charming little fellow, who spoke to me quite politely. In further conversation I inquired his name. "Oh," he answered with easy assurance, "it's just the same as my daddy's, only it's got 'Jr.' on the end of it."—Chicago Tribune.

LEARNING TO BE A CIVILIAN

Discharged British Soldier Testifies That He Finds New Feeling Out of Uniform.

Is the glamor of uniform wearing off?

After three years of service clothes I have just spent my first days in civilian attire. Surprising to tell, I believe I have met with more civility out of uniform than in it, "R. G." writes in the continental edition of the London Mail.

Two possible solutions of this remarkable attitude occur to me. The first is that most officers appear to be rather stern and stand-offish in uniform. The other solution, and perhaps an equally probable one, is that the public is getting tired of seeing so many officers going about aimlessly with apparently nothing much to do except to spend money and kill time.

Naturally, I suppose, when I first went out in "civvies" I had the ingrained inclination to salute all superior officers I met and to prepare to take salutes from the ranks. It took me the best part of a day to overcome this impulse.

The "sir" habit was very strong, too. On my first morning as a civilian I had to see a colonel at the war office on business—business in which our standing was at least equal—and I immediately "sirred" him, of course. Force of habit, pure and simple.

Again there is the matter of running after an omnibus or across the road—in uniform one tries to make a point of not doing these things. Now, however, when "example" has not longer to be considered, I find it practically impossible to chase an omnibus or flee from an oncoming taxicab. The instinct is against doing so.

Apparently it is just as necessary to relearn how to be a civilian as it once was to learn how to be a soldier.

SKILLFUL PIECE OF WORK

Novel Feat of Engineering Recently Put to the Credit of American Bridge Builders.

Not long ago it was discovered that the piers of the combined highway and railroad bridge across the Missouri river at St. Joseph, Mo., were in bad condition and it would be necessary to build new piers. At first it was proposed to build the new piers on the downstream side of the old bridge and shift the bridge laterally to the new position, in this way maintaining traffic over the old bridge while the new construction was going on. But the war department required the installation of a larger draw-span in the bridge and so it was decided to build the new piers between the old piers. After they were completed, the fixed spans of the bridge were moved shoreward endwise, so that they rested on the new piers. A temporary span was constructed to fill the gap thus occasioned, so that traffic was closed over the bridge for less than ten hours. Then work was begun upon the new swing span, which was built as a cantilever in open position. To permit of this, a portion of the old swing span had to be cut away and a temporary lift-span was put in to take care of river traffic. Thus the bridge was reconstructed without changing its alignment.

Undeveloped Country.

Lake St. John, at the head of the picturesque Saguenay river, has been brought to the notice of the Royal Society of Arts by Prof. J. C. McLennan as one of the best undeveloped power sources in North America. It has an area of about 350 square miles, drains a basin of 30,000 square miles, and is 315 feet above sea level. Three easily developed power sites are capable of yielding a total of 1,000,000 horse power at tidewater, and many sites for docks and industrial plants are available on the river.

When Boston Was in Trouble.

In 1774, on the 1st of June, the Boston port bill went into operation. At noon the harbor was closed against all vessels and business was suspended. In a 20 days' notice the citizens of Boston were deprived of their means of gaining a living. Indignation ran high throughout the colonies, contributions were raised in other cities for their relief, and the people of Marblehead offered the Boston merchants the use of their wharves.

Our Book of Doom.

A doomsday book of a new sort has been produced by the alien property custodian. It approximates 500 pages and sets out the names of the enemy concerns that have been found in the United States. The custodian thinks his efforts have been without real cost to the country, since he brought to light for the treasury to collect more than $800,000 in income taxes which were being evaded. Besides the custodian turned some of the German concerns to war work and had them produce $30,000,000 worth of supplies.

The custodian's new book, says Nation's Business, contains a deal of comfort for Americans who have claims against Germany and who have been wondering if they will have to wait for payment until Germany makes up her mind about the variety of government she likes best. The state department has hinted that American claimants may get immediate reimbursement from the funds the custodian has collected.

Hubby's Blunder.

He resided in the suburbs, and when he accidentally met an old friend in the city who persuaded him to remain in town for the evening he went to the telegraph office and wired his wife as follows:

"Missed the 5:30 train. Don't keep dinner waiting. Shall be home late."

It was very, very late when he did arrive home, and his wife met him at the door.

"Did you get my message?" he said, beaming down at her.

"Yes," she said, very quietly, "but I would like you to explain why you sent a message at 4:28 telling me you had missed the 5:30 train."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Phonograph in the Hebrides.

Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, who has done so much to create interest in Hebridean songs, took a phonograph to the islands, says a writer in Daily Chronicle. This was in order to secure the absolute accuracy of the weird music which is traditional in the Hebrides. The people were so excited by the novelty of singing into the phonograph that they could hardly wait for the record to be played, and then they were amazed at the fidelity with which it rendered the songs and all the trivial sounds of onlookers.

Microbes in Our Clothes.

Apropos of the liability of demobilized soldiers to contract colds as soon as they get into "civies" a correspondent suggests that probably the civilian clothes are the cause, whether they be warmer than the uniforms or not. Sir Ernest Shackleton had something to say about this matter on his return from the antarctic. Notwithstanding the intensely low temperatures and almost incessant blizzards experienced, colds were quite unknown until a bale of clothing brought from England was opened. The next day there was an epidemic of colds in the party, and Sir Ernest's explanation was that the trouble was caused by microbes that had been hibernating, as it were, in the closely packed clothing.

Longest British Strike.

The longest strike which Britain has experienced was that which broke out at Lord Penrhyn's slate quarries at Bethesda in October, 1900, and lasted until November, 1903. During these three years more than one and one-half million dollars was lost in wages alone; and whereas at the beginning Britain imported no slate, at the end ships were taking more than 1,200 tons of foreign slate a week to British markets.

Seven Keys TO Baldpate

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

The clerk became mad. demant. But Cargan stepped forward boldly. Now he reached the leaders of the mob. He pushed his way in among them, smiling, but determined. They closed in on him. A little man got firmly in his path. He took the little man by the shoulders and stood him aside with some friendly word. And now he was past ten rows or more of them on his way through, and the crowd began to scurry away. They scampered like ants, clawing at one another's backs to make a path.

And so finally, between two rows of them, the mayor of Ilenton went his way triumphantly. Somewhere, on the edge of the crowd, an admiring voice spoke. "Hello, Jim!" The mayor waved his hand. The rumble of their voices ceased at last. Jim Cargan was still master of the city.

"Say what you will," remarked Mr. Magee to the professor as they stood together on the platform of the car, "there goes a man."

He did not wait to hear the professor's answer, for he saw the girl of the Upper Asquewan station standing on a baggage truck far to the left of the mob wave to him over their heads. Eagerly he fought his way to her side. It was a hard fight. The crowd would not part for him as it had parted for the man who owned the city.

"Hello, Mr. Holdup Man!" The girl seized Mr Magee's proffered hand and leaped down from the truck to his side.

"Bless the gods of the mountains," said Magee; "they have given me back my accomplice, safe and sound!"

"They were black, lonesome gods," she replied, "and they kept whispering fearful things in my ear I couldn't understand. I'm glad they didn't keep me."

"So am I." The crowd surged about them. Many in it smiled and spoke admiringly to the girl. "It's great to be acquainted with the heroine of the hour," Mr Magee continued. "I congratulate you. You have overthrown an empire of graft, it seems."

"Alone and unaided," she quoted, smiling mockingly up into his face.

"Absolutely alone and entirely unaided," said Billy Magee. "I'll swear to that in court."

As Mr Magee and the girl turned they beheld the hermit of Baldpate staring with undisguised exultation at the tall buildings of Ilenton.

"Why, it's Mr Peters!" the girl cried.

"Yes," replied Magee. "His prediction has come true. We and our excitement proved too much for him. He's going back to Brooklyn and to her."

"I'm so glad!" she cried. She stretched out her hand to the hermit. He took it, somewhat embarrassed.

"Glad to see you," he said. "You certainly appear to have stirred things up, miss. But women are good at that. I've always said"—

"Mr. Magee tells me you're going back, after all?" she broke in.

"Yes," returned Peters. "I knew it. I told you so. It was all right in the summer, when the lands played and the warm wind was hermiting on the mountain too. But in the fall it's always been hard, and I've heard the white lights calling, calling why, I've even heard her heard Ellen. This fall you came, and there was something doing on Baldpate—and I knew that when you went I'd just naturally have to go too. So—I'm going."

"Splendid!" commented the girl.

"It'll be somewhat delicate," continued the hermit, "bursting in on Ellen after all these years. As I told Mr. Magee I wish I had an inaugural address or something like that."

"I have it," responded Evelyn Rhodes. "I'll write a story about you for tomorrow morning's paper—all about how the Christmas spirit has overcome the hermit of Baldpate and how he's going back to his wife with his heart filled with love for her. It is filled, isn't it?"

"Well, yes," agreed Mr. Peters. "I reckon you might call it that."

"And then you can send her a copy of the paper and follow it up in person."

"A good idea," commented Billy Magee.

"At first glance, yes," studied Peters; "but, on the other hand, it would be the death knell of my postcard business, and I'm calculating to go back to Baldpate next summer and take it up again. No, I'm afraid I can't let it be generally known that I've quit living in a shack on the mountain for love of somebody or other."

"One more," smiled Magee, "big business muzzles the press."

"Not that I ain't obliged to you for the offer," added the hermit.

"Miss—er—Miss Rhodes and I will see you again," predicted Mr. Magee, "next summer at Baldpate inn."

The hermit looked at the girl, who turned her face away.

"I hope it'll turn out that way, I'm sure," he said. "I'll let you have a reduction on all postcards, just for old times' sake. Now, I must find out about the New York trains."

He melted into the crowd, an odd figure still, his garb in a fashion long forgotten, his clumsily backed hair brushing the collar of his ancient coat. Magee and the girl found the check room and, after he had been relieved of the burden of his baggage, set out up the main street of Ilenton. It was a typical up state town, deep in the throes of the holiday season. The windows of the stores were green with holly. The faces of the passers by reflected the excitements of Christmas and of the upheaval in civic politics which were upon them almost together.

"Tell me," said the girl, "are you glad at the way it has turned out? Are you glad I was no lady Captain Kidd?"

"It has all turned out—or is about to turn out—beautifully," Mr Magee answered. "You may remember that on the veranda of Baldpate inn I spoke of one summer hotel flirtation that was going to prove more than that. Let me"—

Her laugh interrupted.

"You don't even know my name."

"What's the matter with Evelyn Rhodes?" suggested Magee.

"Nothing. It's a perfectly good name. But it isn't mine. I just write under it."

"I prefer Mary, anyhow," smiled Billy Magee. "She called you that. It's Mary."

"Mary what?"

"You have no idea," said he, "how immaterial that is."

They came upon a throng blocking the sidewalk in front of a tall building of stone. The eyes of the throng were on bulletins. It muttered much as they had muttered who gathered in the station.

"The office of the Star," explained the girl. "The crowd is looking for new excitement. Do you know, for two whole hours this morning we had on exhibition in the window a certain package—a package of money!"

"I think," smiled Magee, "I've seen it somewhere."

"I think you have. Drayton came and took it from us as soon as he heard. But it was the very best proof we could have offered the people. They like to see for themselves. It's a passion with them. We've done for Cargan forever."

"Cargan says he will fight."

"Of course he will," she replied. "But this will prove Napoleon's Waterloo. Whether or not he is sent to prison—and perhaps he can escape that; he's very clever—his power in Ilenton is broken. He can't possibly win at the next election. It comes very soon. I'm so glad! For years our editor has been fighting corruption, in the face of terrible odds and temptations. I'm so glad it's over now—and the Star has won!"

"Through you," said Magee softly.

"With some one—to help," she smiled. "I must go upstairs now and find out what new task is set for me."

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Usual Thing.

MR. MAGEE postponed the protest on the tip of his tongue, and, climbing the gloomy stairs that newspapers always affect, they came into the city room of the Star. Though the paper had been long on the street, the excitement of the greatest coup of years still lingered in the place. Magee saw the deferential smiles that greeted the girl and watched her as she made her way to the city editor's desk. In a moment she was back at his side.

"I've got my assignment," she smiled ruefully. They descended to the street. "It's wonderful," she went on, "how curt a city editor can be with any one who pulls off a good story. The job I've got now reminds me of the experience of an old New York reporter who used to work on the Star."

With difficulty they threaded their way through the crowd and moved along beside the green decked windows.

"He was the first man sent out by his paper on Park row on the Spanish war assignment," she went on, "and he behaved rather brilliantly, I believe. Well, he came back after the fight was over, all puffed up and important, and they told him the city editor wanted him. 'They're going to send me to the Philippines,' he told me he thought as he went into the presence. When the city editor ordered him to rush down to a two alarm fire in Houston street he nearly collapsed. I know how he felt. I feel that way now."

"What was it, a one alarm fire?" asked Magee.

"No," she replied, "a sweet little story about the Christmas toys. I've done it to death every Christmas for three years. Oh, well, I can do it again. But it'll have to wait until after Mrs. Norton's lunch."

She led him into a street where every house was like its neighbor, even to the "Rooms" sign in the windows, and up the steps of one she could have recognized only by counting from the corner. They entered the murky and stereotyped atmosphere of a boarding house hallway, with its inevitable hatrack and the uncollected letters of the homeless on a table. Mrs. Norton came broadly forth to meet them.

A LIFETIME OF SUFFERING

Prevented by "Fruit-a-tives" The Wonderful Fruit Medicine

58 Maisonneuve St., Hull, Que.

"In my opinion, no other medicine is so good as 'Fruit-a-tives' for Indigestion and Constipation.

For years, I suffered with these dreaded diseases, trying all kinds of treatments until I was told I was incurable.

One day a friend told me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. To my surprise, I found this medicine gave immediate relief, and in a short time I was all right again".

DONAT LALONDE

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"Well, Mr. Magee, she said, "I'm awfully glad you've come. I'm busy on that lunch now. Dearie, show him into the parlor to wait."

Mr. Magee was shown in. That rooming house parlor seemed to moan dismally as it received him.

On an easel was the sad portrait of a gentleman, undoubtedly the late lamented Norton. His uninteresting nose appeared to be turned up at the constant odor of cookery in which it dwelt.

Mr. Magee stared round the room and smiled. Was the romance of reality never to resemble the romance of his dreams? Where were the dim lights, where the distant waltz, where the magic of moonlight amid which he was some day to have told a beautiful girl of his love? Hardly in Mrs. Norton's parlor.

She came and stood in the doorway. Flatless, coatless, smiling, she flooded the place with her beauty. Mr. Magee looked at the flabby angels on the wall, expecting them to hide their faces in shame. But no! They still rode brazenly their unstable clouds.

"Come in!" he cried. "Don't leave me alone here again, please. And, tell me, is this the gentleman who took the contract for making Mrs. Norton happy?"

"I—I can't come in," she said, blushing. She seemed to wish to avoid him. "Yes, that is Mr. Norton." She came nearer the easel and smiled at the late lamented's tonsorial crown. "I must leave you—just a moment"—

"You're never going to leave me again," he cried. "Don't you know that? I thought you knew. You're mine. I love you. I love you. It's all I can say, my dearest. Look at me—look at me, please."

"It has happened so quickly," she murmured. "Things can't be true when they—happen so quickly."

"A woman's logic," said Mr. Magee. "It has happened. My beautiful girl! Look at me."

And then—she looked. Trembling, flushed, half frightened, half exultant, she lifted her eyes to his.

"My little girl!" he cried down at her.

A moment longer she held off and then limply she surrendered. And Billy Magee held her close in his arms.

"Take care of me," she whispered. "I—I love you so!" Her arm went timidly about his shoulders. "Do you want to know my name? It's Mary"—

Mary what? The answer was seemingly of no importance, for Mr. Ma-

"Take care of me," she whispered. "I—I love you so!"

gee's lips were on hers, crushing the word at its birth.

So they stood, amid Mrs. Norton's gloomy objects of art. And presently she asked:

"How about the book, dear?"

But Mr. Magee had forgot.

"What book?" he asked.

"The novel you went to Baldpate to write. Don't you remember, dearest—no melodrama, no wild chase, no—love?"

"Why"— Mr. Magee paused for a moment in the joy of his discovery. Then he came back to the greater joy in his arms.

"Why, darling," he explained gently, "this is it."

THE END.

AN ENEMY OF MANKIND

A Subtle Foe to Deal With

The subtle, unsuspected enemy, which, taking hold on the kidneys, saps them of their strength and vitality, rendering them inactive and unable to remove the poisons and waste substances from the blood, should immediately be dealt with. All who suffer from backache, pains in the sides, sciatica, rheumatism, neuralgia, constant headaches, constipation, that helpless feeling of lassitude; stiff, swollen joints, hands and ankles, sore muscles, sleeplessness, floating specks before the eyes, irritability, should at once begin treating the kidneys with Gin Pills, which are by far the most effective remedy for diseases of this vital organ.

The first sign of pain in the back or side is warning enough. Do not delay. Once the kidneys and bladder get out of order, most serious, and often fatal consequences are likely to follow in quick sequence. Get a box of Gin Pills today, and correct the derangement before it is too late. At all druggists or dealers, 50c. Money refunded if not satisfied. Free sample on request.

STATION AGENT FORCED TO QUIT

"ALL THE BOYS AT THIS END OF THIS LINE TALKING ABOUT MY RECOVERY," HE SAYS.

"When the boys come by and see me back on the job looking like my old self they always holler at me to know what has brought about the wonderful change, and I always shout back, Tanlac," said A. E. Rawley, the popular telegraph operator at Welsford station on the Canadian Pacific Railroad and living at Westfield Beach, New Brunswick, in relating this remarkable experience with the medicine rently.

"My recovery has not only surprised me," continued Mr. Rowley, "but all the boys on this end of the line are talking about it. Pulling through what I have suffered back into health and strength seems more like work of a miracle than of medicine, for I had despaired of living much longer.

"My health suddenly gave way four years ago following a severe attack of grippe, which set led in my stomach. My food would sour causing gas and such a pressure through my chest that I could scarcely breathe. Sharp pains would suddenly strike me in the chest, keeping me in agony for hours, and at night I would have to get up and walk the floor to keep from smothering. One day, about a year after my trouble started, I began vomiting and kept it up almost incessantly for four days and I thought sure my life would end there. I had to be carried to a hospital for treatment after which I felt in fair condition for a few weeks and then another attack came on me with great pains in my stomach and intestines which would last for hours.

"At first these spells came about once a month, then twice a month and then every week and got me down to where I just couldn't work at all. In fact, I lost fifty pounds in weight and had to give up my position as station agent and do nothing but try to find relief. Then I went to another hospital for treatment, then another, making three in all, and tried every medicine I knew of or that was suggested to me, but kept getting worse. I had no idea I could live much longer, and, of course, had little hope of ever getting any better.

"My case was like that of the drowning man, reaching out for a straw—desperate—and although I had no faith in Tanlac to help me when I saw it advertised I grabbed at it as my last resort. I had tried three hospitals and everything in the way of medicines so I couldn't have much faith in Tanlac, but, it's a fact, before my first bottle was done I notice a difference in my feelings. It was not long then until the gas stopped forming on my stomach, I had a good appetite, and could eat most anything without it hurting me. Now to put it all in a few words as possible, I have gotten back twenty pounds of my lost weight. I am now working regularly every day and am still picking up both in weight and strength right along. I attribute my recovery to nothing but Tanlac. To me it is the most wonderful medicine in the world and I will praise it as long as I live."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Admiralty's Humor.

The British admiralty has a sense of humor, and occasionally displays it in official documents.

An old sea captain wrote to the department complaining, more in sorrow than in anger, of the way in which his ship had been dazzle-painted: "First you make me look like a parrot, and then you make me look like a haystack, and I don't want to look like either." He got back the official reply:

"We don't want you to look like either a parrot or a haystack, but we do want you to look like as if your stern was where your head ought to be."

Mines Threaten Shipping.

Naval authorities say it will be several years before the waters of Europe are entirely free of floating mines. Many of the German mines destroyed by allied trawlers were found to have been moored by ropes. When the rope rotted the mines broke from their anchorages and drifted in many cases to the main line of steam travel.

The Way to say "No"

Mark Your Ballot with an X after Each Question under the word "No."

		YES	NO
1	Are you in favour of the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act?		X
2	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government agencies and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X
3	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one-hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in standard hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favour such sale and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X
4	Are you in favour of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government agencies and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X

Above is an exact reproduction of the Referendum ballot, showing the correct way to Vote in order to sustain the Ontario Temperance Act as it stands.

Everybody should study the four questions and realize, exactly what they mean. Do not be misled by the insidious demand for "light" beer.

The beer of the ballot is 118% stronger than the Ontario Temperance Act now allows, and over five times as strong as the limit allowed for beer defined as non-intoxicating in Great Britain and the United States.

Must Answer Each Question

1. Unless you vote on every question your ballot is spoiled.
2. You must mark your answer to each question with an "X" only. Anything else would spoil your ballot.
3. Unless a majority vote "No" on question 1 the bars will be restored and the sale of all kinds of intoxicants permitted.
4. Unless a majority vote "No" on questions 2, 3 and 4 the Ontario Temperance Act will become almost worthless.
5. The only SAFE course is to mark your ballot as shown above.

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

No repeal; No government beer shops; No beer saloons; No government whiskey shops.—Four X's, each under the word "No."

Dear Sir Herbert,

I am pleased to be the holder of a Canadian War Savings Certificate. I am delighted to find that in Canada you have War Savings Stamps on sale, similar to those we have in England.

I wish the War Savings Campaign every success.

I remain
yours sincerely

Fair Warning.

Bob's brother, seeking revenge, had put grass in his sister's slippers after they had been cleaned. Later in the afternoon Bob discovered the mischief and as his sister was about to put on the slippers he came swiftly running toward her, crying out as he did so: "Don't put them on. There's a bird's nest inside and you'll kill the young ones!"

Plea for Tolerance.

The only atmosphere in which strong, manly controversy, which is one of the noblest activities of the earth, can truly live and flourish is the atmosphere of tolerance—an atmosphere whose elements are respect for personal qualities and trust in the power of truth.—Phillips Brooks.

Inkless Pen.

To make a pen that will write without ink, get a small quantity of violet aniline from a drug store, and some gum arabic. Dissolve a little of the gum in warm water, and mix with the violet aniline until a paste is formed. Apply it to the inside hollow of a new pen nib, just above the split. To write with the inkless pen it is only necessary to dip it in water. Shake away the drops, but do not wipe the pen. After a few moments it will be possible to write quite well.

Prospects of Palestine.

Palestine has never had a well-defined boundary except the sea on its west, but it is understood to be about 10,000 miles in extent. Much of this area is too dry and rocky for tillage; large parts are too dry even for cattle or sheep.

Cuba's Neglected Resources.

Though an agricultural state, there are important branches of agriculture that are all but wanting in Cuba. Thus cereals are not raised on a large scale, the hay crop is unimportant and large quantities of flour, potatoes, meats, beans, canned goods, apples and other agricultural products are imported. Though many cattle are raised on the island, the dairy industry is as yet undeveloped, and much milk, butter and cheese are brought from the United States and other countries. The rural population largely engaged on the great sugar plantations is essentially different from an agricultural state of the United States.

Right on the Job.

"Uncle Sam is no bully, but he can take care of himself."

"Eh?"

"When they chucked rocks at his ping hat they soon found him in a trench helmet."

Smoking a Cause of Cancer.

Cancer of the mouth in civilized countries has been greatly reduced by good dentistry. Eighty-five per cent of the cancers of the lip occur in smokers. Formerly clay pipes, which became very hot, were much used, and there has been a notable reduction in the number of cancers of the lip since the clay pipe has gone out of fashion. Smoking, however, is the cause of most cancer of the lip, the tongue and the floor of the mouth.—Maj. W. J. Mayo, War Department Lectures.

Rum Made in Philadelphia.

Rum distilled from molasses was among Philadelphia's principal manufactures before the revolution. Dr. Benjamin Rush wrote to "Mad Anthony" Wayne after the capture of Stony Point: "Our street rang with nothing but your name. You are remembered constantly next to our good and great Washington, over our claret and Madeira." Both were much in demand at the city's typical entertainments of the stranger.

The Busy Queen Bee.

The queen bee will lay from 2,000 to 3,000 eggs daily in the season. The queen bee always heads the bees when they issue to swarm.

Field Marshal's Pay.

A field marshal never retires, but remains on the active list and draws full pay till the day of his death.

Taking No Chances.

Two mothers, one with a five-year-old girl and the other with a seven-year-old boy, set out for a walk. For convenience it was suggested that the children walk together and ahead. So of the boy: "I will if they won't call it marry."

Just Like Willie.

Teacher: "Some rivers are sluggish in their course. What do I mean by a river being sluggish?" Willie: "It means that it likes to stick to its bed."

of the Veterans' campaign and had swung in and helped the Veterans. Now that the "Y." was about to launch a campaign he felt the Veterans were called upon to offer a team of six men to the, "Y." for canvassing during their Red Triangle movement. A team of six membres quickly volunteered and will do all they can to help along the Y.M.C.A. campaign.

Memorial Services.

An invitation was received and accepted to attend in a body at St. Andrew's Church on October 5 at the unveiling of a memorial tablet to the fallen heroes of that church. Another invitation was accepted from Knox Church to attend a service there on November 15 at the unveiling of a memorial window in honor of their soldier dead.

Athletic Activities.

The rules and regulations of the Athletic Club were read, and after some discussion adopted without amendement. This club will control all sports and expenditures for sport in connection with the Association. Their object is to promote good clean amusement among the members so as to assist in keeping them together. In the case of any G.W.V.A. team desiring to use players that are not eligible for membership in the association, such players may become honorary members, and in return for such services will be granted the use of the club room during the season in which they are playing.

Better Sport Needed.

Comrade Drummond, fight promoter, made a speech requesting the Association to do everything it can to help along sport in the city. "Peterborough is known as the poorest sporting town from coast to coast, barring none," declared Drummond.

Comrade Jones offered to do all in his power to help the Veterans prepare a boxing smoker, in which only local amateurs should take part. He thought there was good material in the city if it could only be brought out. He offered his services for three nights a week to train and teach all who want to learn how to box, and prepare them for a big smoker he would like to see put on in the near future.

Social Committee.

A social committee, consisting of Comrades Primeau, Dalladay and Allan was appointed to look after the social activities of the association. They will promote concerts dances and smokers during the ensuing season.

A financial report was ready, indicating that the activities of the building committee had virtually ended, and after all accounts had been passed there is left a deficit of $2000.

Letters were received from Mr. G. A. Gillespie and Mr. G. N. Gordon, pledging themselves for $100 yearly for five years to the Veterans, provided the latter can get three other citizens to follow suit.

After all accounts had been paid on the Maxwell car draw, $626.68 had been added to the treasury. The members expressed their appreciation to Secretary Whatley for his successful efforts in connection with this draw

After the meeting last night the comrades assembled outside their rooms and formally presented Mr C. C. Porter with his new Maxwell car. Mr. Porter is certainly to be congratulated on his lucky draw by which he receives a $1500 car for a $1 ticket.

W.C.T.U. TO MEET

The regular monthly meeting of the W.C.T.U. will be held in the Green Room of the Y.W.C.A. on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Kendry, vice-chairman of the Referendum Committe, of Peterborough, will give an address. A cordial invitation is extended to all ladies who are interested.

The German troops in the Baltic region intend to remain in Letvia all winter, making their headquarters at Mitau.

$240,000 FOR NEW PUBLIC SCHOOL

BYLAW TO BORROW THIS SUM PASSED BY CITY COUNCIL LAST NIGHT

ARE PLANS TOO ELABORATE?

IS QUESTION RAISED BY ALD. J. J. TURNER ON COMPLAINTS BY CITIZENS.

A bylaw to provide for the borrowing of $240,000 for the erection of a new public school in the south ward passed its three readings in Council last evening, according to statute.

Ald. Turner asked if any complaints had been made to other members of Council as to cost of this proposed new building. Ratepayers had asked him were the plans not too elaborate for actual requirements, and if a plainer and less costly building would not afford the accommodation needed. Personally, he wondered were there not room for such complaint. The East and West Ward schools were not nearly so elaborate in design as that for the proposed new building, and even allowing for extra costs in construction now and when they were built, he thought it might be a question worth considering, would it not be possible to so plan this new school as to provide the same number of rooms at a cost say of $100,000 or $125,000.

The Mayor had heard no complaints

Ald. Edgar said he had read Mr. G. N. Gordon's opposition in the press, and one citizen, who was well able to afford his assessment for this school, had complained to him as to its estimated cost. In Alderman Edgar's opinion the Board of Education's plans were appropriate to the needs: South Ward is growing rapidly, and 15 rooms of the school will be called into requisition just as soon as the school is ready, which does not leave any too much room for future requirements

Ald. Turner did not wish to be misunderstood. The number of rooms in the school or accommodation provided for had not been complained of to him; but the question raised if the same accommodation could not be arranged for on a less elaborate plan, and thus save expense.

The bylaw passed for the amount asked - $240,000.

The City Football League Executive last night drafted its schedules for the intermediate and junior series

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

WE EAT TOO MUCH MEAT WHICH CLOGS KIDNEYS, THEN THE BACK HURTS

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

DON'T JUMP TO CONCLUSIONS

What is the difference between remedy and cure? Any disease which is liable to recur cannot be indefinitely cured. You may dispel the germs from the system—but that is simply fighting it.

A man suffers for years with Rheumatism. After trying numerous treatments—with out success, he takes Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules, and is restored to perfect health again.

A year or so later Rheumatic symptoms appear again. What does he immediately conclude? That it is his old trouble returned; that the medicine he took had only a temporary effect; that he will never again be well. This impression is the one we wish to eradicate—because it is entirely false. Whenever Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules are given a fair trial they remedy Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuritis, Neuralgia, or any of their kindred diseases.

T.R.C.'s won't make you immune from the above diseases. They will remedy them and drive them from your system, but whenever you feel an attack coming on, start using T.R.C.'s again.

Ask your Druggist or write us for our new booklet, it is interesting and costs you nothing (Templeton 142 King West, Toronto) We send T.R.C.'s anywhere on receipt of $1.25.

BURGLAR'S BUSY AT LINDSAY TOWN

MADE QUITE A HAUL FROM LADIES' READY-TO-WEAR STORE.

Lindsay, Sept. 23.—Some time during Sunday night or early this morning a sneak forced an entrance into the uptown C.P.R. ticket office. The prowler entered a window at the rear by removing a pane of glass. It was money he was after, as he pried open the two tills getting 19 cents in one and 25 cents in the other. A consignement of liquor was in the express office, but the thief failed to see it. Mr. Matchett, C.P.R. agent took special precautions to guard the company's property and had the rear door barricaded so that it was impossible to gain entrance.

Td. C. Armstrong's clothing store was also visited, and probably by the same party with accomplices. One of the windows at the rear was pried off and a pane of glass removed. Two overcoats were taken, and the prowlers wanted nothing but the best as two expensive coats were taken. One of the thieves carried an umbrella. It was placed against a table where the water dripped to the floor

The stock was disturbed somewhat but Mr. Armstrong has discovered nothing missing but the two coats

Mr Armstrong has made a more thorough examination, and finds that the burglars made quite a haul, as the following articles are missing:

2 green waist seam overcoats, sizes 36 and 37, fall weight; 2 brown double-breasted waist seam suits, plash pockets, trimmed with braid, sizes 36 and 37; 2 wool sweater coats, navy trimmed with white, navy trimmed with grey, size 36; about thirty soft white collars, size 14-12, names Kes-Macy, Gayley and Kent; 1 dozen silk fourin-hand ties, 2 caps, 1 tweed hat, fedora shape, black and white speckled; 12 pair holeproof men's hose silk, brown, navy and gunmetal; 3 pairs ladies' holeproof silk hose, black, brown and gunmetal; 6 pairs Boston garters; 2 pairs Arrow garters; 6 handkerchiefs, 3 dozen lever cuff buttons, 9 pairs pullpart cuff buttons, 3 1-2 dozen tie clips, pearl and enamel, 4 Waldemar dress watch chains, gold filled; 1 dozen gold chain cuff links, 6 pairs wire arm bands; 12 soft collar pins, 8 bull-dog safety tie holders, 4 soft-cuff shirts, sizes 14 1-2; 4 watch fobs, gold filled, 6 black bat wing ties; 10 pair gold cuff links, 1 tan leather automobile top coat with belt, mole lining and collar fawn collar.

Mr. Armstrong estimates his loss at between $300 and $400. The police are of the opinion that the theft was the work of local parties. Others hold to the belief that the thieves were outsiders.

Robert Garrison.....Jack Mulhall
Danny Abbott.....Hugh Fay
Jack Arnold.....Joseph Kilgour
Gloria Morning.....Effie Conley
Sam Arnold.....Jack Miller, Jr.
William Z. Williams....Harry Todd
Polar Tenor.....Fred. H. Warren

The Story.

If Mary Worthington had not decided to visit New York from her home in the West to take possession of the estate left her by her father, none of this would ever have happened. But she did, and Mark Arnold, the crafty executor, in order to hide from her his double dealings enlists the aid of his nephew, Sam Arnold, and an equally unscrupulous lawyer named Williams in camouflaging his thefts. It is their plan to force Mary to sign an authorization which Mark Arnold has drawn up and in which he had inserted the loophole through which he may escape with the thousands he has already lost by mismanagement.

"The Purple Pagoda" company has struggled along for a whole week on Broadway, and the producers are for taking it off on Saturday night, if Danny Abbott, the press agent who went to college cannot dope out something to give it a new lease of life. So Danny conspires with a friend, Robert Garrison, to kidnap the star Gloria Morning, as she arrives home from the theatre Saturday evening. They expect to advertise the abduction of the star, recover her and bring her back, and then hang out the SRO.

Gloria, however, refuses to be kidnapped. She has her own reasons, so when Mary Worthington decides to escape from the upstairs room where Arnold has locked her, and to flee to her only friend, Gloria. It is Mary who is enveloped in the strong arms of Robert Garrison and carried off in his powerful automobile to the sportsman's hunting lodge in the mountains.

Garrison thinks he has Gloria, and Mary learning this allows him to be deceived. It is a good place, she thinks, to hide from Arnold while she can figure out the matter quietly. And besides, this handsome young man who is her captor is a very interesting personage. In fact they fall in love with each other, and when the Arnold crowd discovers her whereabouts and comes to rescue her she turns in with her abductor and helps to fight them off. And how she fights.

It is inevitable, of course, that this novel meeting and such a case of love at first sight should result in the declarations of each, followed by the subsequent engagement. And with the able assistance of her sweetheart Mary succeeds in obtaining possession of her rightful property and punishing the unscrupulous executor.

The Quebec Football Union has invited Kingston teams to affiliate with them. The proposal has not been unfavorably received in the Limestone City, but no action will be taken this season.

HIS BRIDAL NIGHT IS A GREAT SUCCESS

A DOZEN MUSICAL NUMBERS ARE INTRODUCED—AT GRAND OCT. 4.

The coming of "His Bridal Night" to the Grand on Saturday, October 4, matinee and evening, is attracting the attention of local theatregoers. The farce, which was one of the great successes of last season, is by Margaret Mayo and has been made more attractive this year by the introduction of a dozen musical numbers. Every one who has ever heard of the marriage of a twin has mentally constructed the plot "His Bridal Night." It is mistaken identity which causes the complications, with a husband who is much too bossy and another gentleman who thinks he loves the bride and who is really enamoured of the other sister. The sister passes herself off as the bride and they all pass a very sleepless night trying to figure out just who is who. The plot complicates itself skillfully and the identifying process is genuinely and cleanly amusing. In the company will be found Robert Knight, the Crisp Sisters, who have been featured in vaudeville for six years; Bertha Julian whose wonderful soprano has been acclaimed by musical critics, Frank Cullen, Charles Bennett, Beatrice Lett and others of known ability. The music has been composed by Mr. Frederick V. Bowers, who in the last twenty years has contributed a large number of the nation's popular songs.

THE STORY OF A GREAT-SOULED MAN

DRAMA OF OUTDOOR LIFE AT EMPIRE THEATRE WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY.

The breath of the North woods and the sting of the snows are in "The Blinding Trail," the drama of outdoor life with its tremendous conflicts of passion which brings Monroe Salisbury to the Empire Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday in what is declared to be his most vital role of his career.

Stuart Paton and John B. Clymer wrote the story which was put into scenario form by the Universal scenario department.

Salisbury is Jim McKenzie, a big-hearted, big-fisted lumber camp boss in his new film feature. He is supported by Helen Jerome Eddy, Claire Anderson and others prominently mentioned in the "Who's Who" in screendom.

"The Blinding Trail," is the story of a great-souled man who, blinded in rescuing the daughter of his millionaire-lumberman employer in a toboggan accident, is inveigled into marrying her. She is a superficial creature of the cities who finds in Salisbury her hero.

But her cousin Adele sees in the big lumberman something greater—for she has the qualities that were mean to mate with his. How the problem of this triangle is worked out forms the dramatic entity of the play which reaches a terrific climax in a battle between the blind McKenzie and the man who won the unstable affection of his wife.

Paul Powell, who made "Who Will Marry Me?" directed this picture, in which Arthur Maude, Alfred Allen and Johnnie Cooke have prominent roles.

Fortune Awaits Inventor.

"Untearable" linen has long been the dream of many people, but although experiments have often been made, the way to weave an indestructible cloth is still unknown, and no one has claimed the fortune which is awaiting the inventor who solves the mystery.

Warsaw.

Warsaw is a very beautiful and imposing city as viewed from the castle at Prags across the Vistula, and contains a number of magnificent palaces, among which an ancient Saxon stronghold is the most notable. There also is the cathedral of St. John the Divine, a splendid example of gothic architecture, which dates from 1250.

JACK CANUCK IN BERLIN THURSDAY

An entertainment entirely original and new to the amusement world is coming to the Grand Theatre on Thursday afternoon, for an engagement positively limited to four performances. It is a combination of one of the greatest pictures yet produced and the appearance of a bevy of beauties celebrated wherever there is a motion picture machine and a screen upon which the flash is projected.

The picture is Mack Sennett's latest feature production, "Jack Canuck in Berlin," and to be a finer achievement than Sennett's recent triumph, "Mickey," and the bevy of beautiful girls is from the Mack Sennett, Los Angeles studios. They are the original Sennett bathing girls in their first appearance on any stage.

The story of "Jack Canuck in Berlin" is unique. The scheme of the plot is utterly original and its purpose is two-fold. It was created to amuse and to inspire patriotism. It is not a war play though its scenes are laid in Berlin and its hero a fighting, fearless, intrepid Canadian lad.

Ridicule, satire and burlesque are thrown around the deflated figure of the creature who sought to subjugate the world. The despicable character of the head of the house of Hohenzollern is proven in scenes of authentic quality, yet dashed with the spice of wit. A large cast is seen in the principal characterizations and a splendid organization of supernumeraries, gives animation to the big ensemble scenes.

PLEA FOR MEMORIAL TREES

Committee Would Have One Planted in Baptist Churchyards as Tribute to Roger Williams.

A memorial tree in every Baptist churchyard in the United States to commemorate establishment of religious freedom and soul liberty is the plan of the Roger Williams National Memorial committee of the District of Columbia. The committee, which is in charge of the drive to raise a fund for the erection in Washington of the Roger Williams memorial, announced it would ask every congregation in the country to plant a memorial tree.

"The tree stands for life," says a statement from the committee issued at the Washington headquarters, "and as the American Forestry association is urging the planting of memorial trees in honor of the American sailors and soldiers who gave their lives that political freedom should not perish from the earth, so we will ask that trees be planted in honor of Roger Williams, who worked and suffered that religious liberty might be woven into the national fabric of America."

Cruelty in Training Birds.

Performing birds are often taught by starvation. How many are aware that the pretty doves that fly when released to the bespangled artists, and form themselves into geometrical patterns on her head and outstretched arms, are often the sole survivors of hundreds which have been starved and then only fed when they perched upon an exact spot on the owner's arms.

Picturesque Lisbon.

Lisbon, the westernmost of European capitals, spreads itself in leisurely fashion over its 11 hills, extending for more than five miles along the shores of the famous Rada de Lisboa, and for more than three miles inland. Beyond the narrow channel leading out of the Rada through which flow the waters of the Tagus lies the open sea, and some 800 miles away over the horizon to the west are the Azores.

DRAINAGE OF HILLS.

Wet Surfaces Greatly Improved by Tile Drains.

Only by Keeping Individual Milk Records Can the Dairyman Work Out All His Unprofitable Cows—Monthly Milk Record Sheets Are Furnished Free.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The erosion of hillsides and the flooding of the land below by the eroded material has long been a worry and an economical loss to many farmers in hilly and mountainous sections. This can frequently be prevented and the method employed depends on the conditions existing, such as the nature of the soil, light or heavy, the steepness of the slope, and the type of agriculture practised—pasture or tilled crops.

Wet hillsides used as sheep pastures may be much improved by what are sometimes called "sheep drains." These are merely shallow open ditches about 30 inches wide on top nine inches wide on the bottom, and 15 inches deep for removing the surface water and carry it in a definite channel to a suitable outlet at the base of the hill. The removed earth should be thrown out on the lower side to form a sort of embankment to the drain. The grade of the ditch should not be so steep as to give the water sufficient force to destroy the drain by either washing away the banks or digging the drain itself deeper and thus making it dangerous for the sheep and lambs. Sub-drains are sometimes necessary.

A system of terracing is quite universally used to prevent destructive washing on hillsides. The terraces are made perfectly level and of any width and then carefully seeded to grass. At the time of rain the water spreads out evenly over the surface of these and then flows gently over the slope below without sufficient force to wash away any portion of the hill and thus prevents "gullying."

For the drainage of tilled hillsides a system of under-drainage is sometimes used successfully. The amount of erosion of the land largely depends on its condition. If the surface soil can be kept firm the erosion will be lessened. Soft spots on the hillside, though, frequently occur as a result of seepage water from above which has penetrated the surface soil and reached an impervious layer and thus deflected to the surface on the side of the hill. Water flowing over this with considerable force will naturally wash it away more easily than the firmer soil free from this seepage water.

If the drains are so laid to intercept this seepage water, considerable erosion can be prevented. If the hillside is comparatively steep, drains laid at an angle to the incline will be more satisfactory. They will naturally intercept all of the water flowing through the soil above them. Also the grade will be less and the drains are not so liable to be affected by the water moving slowly through them. If the slope is not very steep the drains may be laid down the incline with satisfactory results. Here the tile drains the land on both sides and no double draining results.

In this underdrainage the general benefits are again obtained. The water level is lowered, thus giving more root capacity to plants and the prevention of surface washing by allowing the water to penetrate through the soil to the drains, thus carrying much plant food to the roots of the plants.—R. C. Moffatt, M.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Methods of Keeping Cow Records.

Four things are necessary for keeping cow records:

1. A monthly milk sheet, ruled so that there shall be a column for recording the weight of the morning and evening milking of each cow for each day of the month, though some use a sheet ruled for three days only, and estimate the weight of milk given for the month from these three days, which may be consecutive, or on the first, tenth and twentieth of the month, making ten-day periods between. The Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto, will furnish (free) monthly milk record sheets to those interested.

2. A milk scale — preferably one having a dial face and two hands, one of which shows the net weight of milk in the pail, when properly set. This scale costs about five dollars.

3. A four to eight bottle Babcock test, where it is desired to know what each cow's milk tests in fat. This will cost from eight to twelve dollars complete. (If a member of a cow-testing association or convenient to a creamery or cheese factory, arrangements can usually be made to test the samples, hence the tester is not needed, but a progressive dairyman should have his own testing outfit and use it.)

4. The fourth and most important requirement is "The-will-to-do." Without this, milk sheets, scales, testers, etc., are valueless. By having scale, sheet, pencil, sample bottles properly labelled, etc., all conveniently arranged, it takes but little time to keep a record of each milking cow in the herd.

We would add a fifth need, which is some form of permanent record book for monthly totals and tests, as milk sheets, and notes or records of testing, are likely to be lost and not available for reference. But if these are recorded once a month in a permanent form, they will prove a source of help in breeding, feeding and weeding dairy cows. — Prof. H. H. Dean, O. A. College, Guelph.

Keep Up the "Friend Supply."

The success of every life, as well as its happiness, depends very largely on its friendships. Take time to make friends. Take time to keep them. There are a great many unnecessary things which can be omitted from our daily activities and no harm done, but for the making and for the keeping of our friendships in repair one must find time, whatever else is neglected.

A Kitchener Story.

A good story of Kitchener, who had he been alive would have turned sixty-nine on June 24, is told by Col Repington in his new book "Vestigia," published by Constable. The story refers to the Battle of Atbara, in which Kitchener's men routed the Mahdists and captured Mahmed, their leader. "K was extraordinarily calm during the battle," said Col Repington. "He had very slight knowledge of tactics, which he left to Hunter and Pataere. When I asked him, a few days before the battle, how he proposed to attack, he replied that he had brought us one thousand five hundred miles into Africa and had fed us, and that he expected us to do the fighting for him!"

World's Highest Peaks.

The highest mountain peak in North America is Mt. McKinley, in Alaska, whose altitude is 20,300 feet, and the highest in South America, Mt. Aconcagua, in the Andes, on the border of Chile and Argentina, 23,080 feet. The highest mountain in the world is Mt. Everest, in the Himalayas, in Asia. Its altitude is 29,002 feet. There are several hundred mountain peaks in the Himalayas 20,000 feet or over, running to an altitude of 28,278 feet.

Indian Flora for Life Belts.

During the war the proper provision of life belts and other life saving appliances on ships became of vital importance owing to the sub marine menace. One of the most widely used appliances was a life jacket stuffed with "kapok" or floss. This floss has very great buoyancy a jacket containing 24 ounces of this being capable of supporting a adult in the water. According to th existing official regulations the only kapok that may be used for this purpose is Java-Kapok and consists o the long hairs surrounding the seed of a tree which occurs abundantly in the Dutch East Indies.

A similar material is however obtainable from India, but from a different tree, and this Indian floss can not under the existing regulations be used for life-jackets. The results of trials made at the Imperial Institute staffs of which are given in the current number of the Bulletin of the Imperial Institute, have shown that the Indian floss can fully satisfy all the requirements as regards buoyancy and freedom from water-logging. It is therefore suggested that the use of Indian kapok should be at once permitted for life jackets, applications made by the Imperial Institute showed that kapok, equal in quality to that used in the trials, is available in India in large quantities.

Telautograph.

Two Swedish engineers have invented a telautograph that can be used on either a short or long circuit without adjustment or even of a telephone line.

Red Clover.

Were all the merits of red clover acknowledged in letters of gold on every farmer's barn, it would fall far short of the mark. A full estimate of its value is impossible.

Hot Blast of Volcanoes.

Writing in the Monthly Weather Review George N. Cole sets forth detailed arguments to prove that the hot blast which swept over the city of St. Pierre during the eruption of Mont Pelee, as well as similar blasts in connection with the eruption of Vesuvius that destroyed Pompeii and Herculaneum, the eruption of Taal Sakurajima, etc., derived its heat from the sudden compression of the air surrounding the volcano, and not from conditions in the volcano itself. In other words, it was not, according to this hypothesis, an outpouring of hot crater gases that caused the destruction, but the dynamic heating of the air attending the propagation of the explosion wave.

ATKINS AFTER CHAMPION EBER

WILL FIGHT IN HAMILTON FOR BICKELL BELT—FLYWEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP AT STAKE.

The first contest for the J. P. Bickell belt will probably bring together Fighting Dick Atkins, of Toronto, and Bobby Eber, of Hamilton, generally regarded as the Canadian featherweight champion, that is providing they can agree upon weights. The real feather weight is 122 pounds ringside, but the conditions imposed upon the belt by the donor, J. P. Bickell, make it plain that the trustees have full power to accept a contest at 118 pounds, at 3 o'clock or ringside as a legitimate contest for the belt. A $5o weight and appearance forfeit is demanded in every contest for the belt and the girdle becomes the property of any boxer who wins it three times. Right now "Scotty" McEwen, is furnishing the maker of the belt with Atkins' size and a request to make it to his measure "because my battle is going to win it."

To Meet at Hamilton.

Maybe he is, but he has two tough nuts to overcome right in front of him now. Eber and Goodrich -any one who has seen him in his contests with this pair this summer will agree with that.

Atkins meets Goodrich in Hamilton Wednesday afternoon at the A.A.A.A. meet for the Hamilton Trades and Labor Congress delegates. That should settle one end of it, anyway.

Who says professional boxers are not good living boys? "Scotty" Lisner and "Curly" Wilshur both turned down engagements in Hamilton Wednesday night because that opens the Jewish New Year.

CINCINNATI A SPORT CENTRE

WORLD SERIES, AUTO AND HORSE RACES AND BOXING ALL IN ONE WEEK.

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 23.—Cincinnati will be the sport centre of the universe during the world's series games if plans now on foot can be carried through. Besides the games, the speedaway auto races and the Latonia meeting, there will be boxing as Mayor Galvin has lifted the ban on fistic sport and some plan is to be arranged whereby the devotees of all these sports can take in an ample sufficiency.

The racing leaders have already manifest their willingness to conduct their events in the mornings of days when the Reds and White Sox play and boxing shows will be given each evening. This means that a sportsman can see the ponies run in the morning, attend the ball game in the afternoon and take in a fight show at night. Some round of diversion for a day.

Conferences between the racing crowd, the baseball bosses and the boxing promoters have been started and some schedule will be adopted to facilitate the transfer of the crowds from one place to another

YEAR RICH IN CENTENARIES

Natal Day Celebrations of Many Famous People Will Take Place During 1919.

This year of grace 1919 is rich in centenaries. To begin with, it is a hundred years since Queen Victoria appeared on Mother Earth—a centenary concerning which the monthlies will presently be waxing eloquent, London Tit-Bits states.

Another noted centenary of the present year is that of the famous old sea dog, Admiral Rodney, the man in whom for years the French found so persistent an assailant, so doughty an adversary. 'Twas way back in 1819 that this old gentleman first delighted his friends with his presence. The centenary of W. E. Foster, the statesman, will also be celebrated this year. Few greater authorities on education than this gifted son-in-law of the great Doctor Arnold of Rugby ever breathed.

Among other worthies whose names must also be mentioned in this connection is that of John Campbell Sharp, the Wordsworthian poet and philosopher; Arthur Hugh Clough, the poet, and Charles Kingsley, the gifted author of that immortal thriller, "Westward Ho!"

Scotsmen will presently be doing honor to the memory of another noted individual whose centenary also falls this year—a man worthy of a happier fate—Donald Cargill, the great covenanter, who, it will be remembered, for daring to excommunicate the king, was executed at the Old Market Cross, Edinburgh. Neither must we forget George Eliot, the authoress of that unparalleled romance, "Adam Bede."

WORKERS NOT ALWAYS BUSY

Bustling Individual Sometimes Is Merely Carrying Out Ideas Evolved by Apparent "Loafer."

Secretary of War Baker was defending certain army officers who had been berated as chair warmers. "Some may be," he admitted, "but in most cases I am sure you will find that the very person whose position or work seems almost a sinecure, is doing big things, while often the person who is thoughtlessly given credit is not the real worker at all. Like the secretary's stenographer.

"'Who is that busy young woman telling that visiting committee where to get off?' asked the stranger.

"'Oh,' was the answer, 'she's the secretary's stenographer.'

"'What secretary?'

"'The secretary of the Bluffville chamber of commerce. That's him, reading the movie magazine in the back room. He's the "live wire" you read so much about in the daily papers.'"

A NUT FOR COUNCIL CHAIRMEN TO CRACK

HAMLIN ASKS $207 FOR HORSE INJURED WHILE ON HIRE TO CITY.

Herbert Hamlin suggested to the City Council last night that the city keep his horse loaned to the Board of Works last summer on payment of $207.40. While in care of the Board of Works Mr. Hamlin claims the animal suffered injuries, from which it has not yet recovered, although Ald. Morrison, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, remarked that it was working every day.

In asking $207.40 for this horse, Hamlin values the animal at $125 the balance of the total is made up for veterinary service, medicine, loss of the horse's service to him and his own time in attendance.

Council decided that this is a nut for the chairman of the Fire, Water Light and the Board of Works to crack the former because it is claimed the animal suffered hurt while in his department's use, the latter in consequence of the Board of Works having hired the horse for departmental work pending the purchase of another.

TEAM MAKES A WILD DASH UP GEORGE STREET

HEAVY CLYDES OWNED BY WM ROBINSON PERFORMED UNPRECEDENTED FEAT.

Great excitement was caused this morning when a team of heavy farm horses dashed up George street from the Matthews-Blackwell factory through the main business section to the Y.M.C.A. without as much as touching anything on their wild dash. The team, which belong to William Robinson of Bridgenorth, were standing untied, and becoming frightened galloped off before any one could interfere. They dashed up George street, dodging among automobiles, trucks, street cars and pedestrians and were finally halted by P. C. Bristol, after a spirited hundred yard dash.

If any driver, no matter how skilful attempted to drive a team of horses at break-neck speed, straight up George street past the corners at Charlotte and Hunter streets, he would undoubtedly come to grief before he reached anything like as far as Murray street. But this was the marvellous feat of this unguided and terrified team, and their owner instead of receiving payment for the feat of his animals, will receive a summons to appear in Police Court to force a charge of a breach of the traffic bylaw for allowing his horses to stand in a public place untethered.

RED TRIANGLE CAMPAIGN

Peterborough City Asked For $5,000, Half 1918's Request.

The workers in the coming Y.M.C.A. Red Triangle Campaign to be held next Tuesday and Wednesday Sept. 30 and Oct. 1, are urged to keep in mind the meeting tomorrow evening, Wednesday at 6:30 at the Empress Hotel. Captain Frank B. Wilson who has just returned from overseas, where he occupied the position of Assistant to Conlone Burks of the Y.M.C.A. staff, will be present. Dr. John Brown, Jr. Territorial Secretary for Ontario and Quebec is also expected to be here. The campaign in Peterborough having been postponed from the original dates May 5-9, may cause some of our citizens to question the need of funds at this time.

The estimates for 1919 were made up early in the year and the work of transports, troop trains, dispersal centres, Red Triangle Clubs, hospitals and other extension work was carried out on the basis of the amount anticipated in the subscriptions. Peterborough city was asked for $5000.00 just half the amount asked for in 1918. The citizens did not have the opportunity to do their share towards raising this amount during the original campaign week. The opportunity will come next Monday and Tuesday. Peterborough's response to the Red Triangle appeal in 1918 was a splendid one, the city raising 25 per cent above the objective required. The campaign committee on which the Y.M.C.A. Board of Directors, the Red Cross and the G.W.V.A. are represented are confident of the outcome next week.

At a meeting of the G.W.V.A. last evening when it was unanimously decided to cooperate in the campaign, 6 workers were appointed. This action of the Veterans' Association is a splendid evidence of their faith in the Red Triangle work.

Bring your old shoes and boots to the Allen Theatre and secure admission to Dorothy Gish's stirring picture "Boots."

IRISH JORDAN TO BOX HERE SOON

WILL TAKE ON ONE OF TORONTO'S BEST BOXERS IN TWO WEEKS' TIME.

An announcement was made at the Great War Veterans' meeting last night that in about two weeks time "Irish" Jordan, the local boxer, will meet a man to be chosen from the Toronto boxers. Jordan won some good fights overseas and is anxious to break into the game back home. He was very disappointed at not having a chance at Frank Bull, the Ontario champion, last week, but has been promised a bout here very shortly. Those who saw Jordan in action overseas say he is a real fighter and can mix it with the best of them. If this bout is arranged undoubtedly a large crowd will be on hand to see a real local fighter in action against one of the best in the province.

CITY STARTS ON HOUSING SCHEME

NAMES A COMMITTEE TO ENQUIRE INTO CITY'S POWERS IN THIS REGARD.

The City Council last night took active steps toward adopting the Ontario Housing Scheme when the Mayor appointed on suggestion of Ald. Edgar, Aldermen Turner, Edgar and Taylor, a committee to look up the act, and report to Council the city's power in this regard.

Replies to enquiries from other Ontario municipalities as to what they are doing in this regard read in brief as follows:

Windsor has adopted the scheme, and has 130 applications for dwellings on a $4,000 loan basis. Have started about half this number of houses.

Belleville has taken up the scheme in a small way, and has applied for a $25,000 Provincial loan. The city has received no applications for houses.

London has about 12 houses under construction under the system and about 30 others planned. Cost of construction, however, does not let the scheme appeal to workingmen.

Galt has started 16 houses on a $3,100 basis, exclusive of lots, and have but two applications so far.

Guelph has 10 house under way.

Hamilton has 30 dwellings under construction.

AFTERNOON TEA AT LAKEFIELD

Proceeds to the Amount of Thirty-Two Dollars for Indian Maid.

A very successful afternoon tea and sale of work was held in St. John's Sunday school room, Lakefield, under the auspices of the Girls' Auxiliary. The room was artistically decorated with flags and maple boughs. The tea tables were presided over by Mrs. Mailing, president of the branch, assisted by Messrs H. Bygott, G Simpson, Ruth Crawford and E. Ogive while Mrs. Trude and Waldon and Miss Melissa Alford were in charge of the candy and homemade cooking. The fancy work was disposed of by Miss Watson. The proceeds amounted to thirty-two dollars which will be used to buy material for the making of an outfit for their little Indian maid.

SOCIAL AT LAKEFIELD

On Thursday Miss Florence McNal entertained a number of friends to a farewell evening for Miss Jean Thompson. About sixteen ladies were present. The evening was spent in cards at which Miss Melissa Alford won the prize.

INTERESTING SERVICES AT MARK STREET CHURCH

PASTOR SPEAKS AT BOTH SERVICES TO LARGE CONGREGATIONS.

Notwithstanding the rain the congregations at Mark Street Church were good on Sunday.

The pastor's subject for his morning discourse was "The Hills of Divine Helpfulness." The text was found in 121 Psalm, 1st verse: "I will lift my eyes into the hills from whence cometh my help." We have the book of nature Psalmist lifting his eyes to the hills and learn just such a lesson as the scientist when studying nature says: "I am thinking God's thought over again." The scientist may study the heavens through his telescope but man may lift his eyes to the church of God sanctuary of the hills going down through the ages to help all classes of people. We are proud of our great men such as Wicleffe, etc, who died to restore the Bible and you and I might worship God as we pleased. The Church of God is the greatest institution the world has ever known. When we cross the divide there will be no dark valley for Christ will lighten it.

The evening text was found in Exodus 4:2 "What is that in Thine hand." Moses hesitated to use the rod given him and so we do not make use of every opportunity given to us to use our talents. If so the church would never lack for workers.

Ladies' Aid will hold their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. J. Dodd Engleburn Ave., on Thursday, at 3 o.m. Members and visitors will be welcome.

LAKEFIELD FAIR PROMISES TO BE BEST IN ITS HISTORY

Attractive Midway, Horse, Bicycle and Dog Races.

It is expected that the annual exhibition of the Lakefield agricultural society today and tomorrow will be bigger and better than previous years. The grounds and buildings have been put in splendid shape and ample accommodation will be provided for the exhibits.

Second Day

The attractions on the second day will be worth seeing. In trials of speed a number of fast horses are entered and the spectators will be assured of some good sport.

The dog race and bicycle race will be a special attraction this year and will bring out a considerable number of entries.

Grand Concert

This year the directors will give a grand concert in the main building. The Peterborough Komedy Koncert Kompany will supply the programme.

At three o'clock a football match will be played between Chemong Indian team and the local team.

Music will be supplied by the Chemong Indian Band. Hot dinners will be served on the grounds.

Many new attractions will be shown on the midway this year.

Everyone come and make the fair a success.

The New Zealand Government has decided to grant soldiers a gratuity of 1$ pence daily from the date of embarkation to the signing of peace.

FIRST SKIRMISH IN SHOW DOWN BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOR

This is the Way U.S. Congress is Inclined to View Nation Wide Steel Strike

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Sept. 24.—Congress is inclined to view the steel strike as "the first skirmish in industrial warfare," possibly only the prelude to a long talked of "showdown" between capital and labor which many have predicted would come in readjustment from war to peace.

Socialize Industries.

The open statement by some of the strike leaders that the strike is the start of a movement to socialize the basic industries of the country, coupled with the fact that railway workers already have proposed in their so-called Plub plan to socialize transportation highways, is regarded in Congress as very significant.

The pending resolution by Senator Kenyon, Republican, Iowa, to have a Senate Labor committee investigate causes of the strike, hearing both chairman Gary of the Steel Corporation, on behalf of capital, and Jno. J. Fitzpatrick, chairman of the Organization Committee of the steel workers, in behalf of Labor, is planned to open up the whole situation, if possible, "in behalf of the great third party—the public," as the Senator from Iowa himself explains it.

Fitzpatrick will be heard by the committee tomorrow, and Judge Gary will be heard Wednesday, October 1.

50,000 WORKERS OUT IN BRITAIN

IRON EMPLOYES ARE STRIKING IN BREACH OF AGREEMENT WITH EMPLOYERS.

London, Sept. 24.—The British press prominently displays news of the American steel strike, but is chiefly concerned with the attitude of the British iron workers, 50,000 of whom are striking in breach of agreements with the employers.

The Daily News, pointing out that the United States Steel Corporation always has been opposed to unions, says: "The struggle is for the fundamentals of industrial freedom, right of combination and collective bargaining. The steel industry in the United States is far behind Great Britain in this respect."

BURNHAM PROPERTY IN EAST CITY PURAHASED BY THE CITY

The city has purchased the Burnham property at the corner of Hunter and Burnham streets, East City, for the purpose of getting gravel for the bridge close at hand. The city would have to pay damages on part of this property and they expect to get the purchase price out of the material they will take from the property. At any rate it is certainly convenient for the contractors to get their gravel so close at hand.

WEALTHY MAN FOUND DEAD, BOUND IN CHAIR IN HIS OWN APARTMENT

Victim of Heart Disease in Desperate Struggle With Burglars—Other Tenants Near in Apartments

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Only meager clews, which have so far led nowhere, are the working basis of detectives and police in the death of E. H. Purcell, 60 years of old, wealthy retired real estate man, found bound in a chair in the kitchen of the apartment owned by him at 661 Roscoe street early today.

A check mark following the name of the Frank Parmelee Transfer Company revealed the fact that a woman had called from Purcell's flat the preceding morning and asked that three packages be taken away.

Packages Found in Apartment.

The packages, containing oriental rugs, chinaware and furs, bound up in sheeting, were found in the apartment. Some small pieces of jewelry were strewn about the floor. Purcell's bank book, several penies and a bunch of keys were in the sink near Purcell's chair. From the appearance of a partly eaten breakfast—set for three—it is believed by the police that the burglars had taken time to prepare a meal.

Mrs. George P. Wagner, roomer in the opposite apartment, said that she saw Purcell reclining on a lounge in the front room about 11 o'clock at night, reading a book. About 2 a.m., she says, she heard the sound of voices.

Present on every hand were evidences of a desperate struggle. Bureau drawers had been pulled out and their contents strewn over the floor.

Due to Natural Causes.

Dr. William Burmeister, coroner's physician, this afternoon declared that death was due to natural causes. He has continued a postmortem examination at Linn's undertaking rooms, 3419 North Clark street, to determine whether heart disease, brought on by fright and severe exertion, might have snuffed out Purcell's life. There was no evidence that chloroform was used as was at first believed. Strips of cloth, which bound the head to the chair were not drawn tightly, and the breathing was not cut off, Dr. Burmeister said. Several marks found on the scalp were not deep enough to have caused serious injury, police said after a preliminary examination.

Body Found by Janitor.

The body was discovered soon after 8 o'clock by the janitor, Henry Van Vaerenberg, who noticed a key sticking in a rear door.

Mrs. Anna Wagenfur.

Mrs. Anna Wagenfur, who lives in the second apartment of the building above Purcell, told the police that she found Mr. Purcell's paper in the vestibule when she went to get hers. It was his habit to distribute the papers to the families in the building and she remarked to her son, Alfred, that Mr. Purcell probably was ill. She threw his paper into the vestibule of his apartment, she said, and when she came downstairs later in the day the paper was gone.

Late at night Mrs. Wagenfur heard a shot, she told the police. Her son, who was preparing to go to the city, also heard the shot, she said.

No Powder Marks on Body.

There were no marks of powder on the body. Mrs. Wagenfur said that a boy from another apartment had fired some ammunition left over from the 4th of July. The police said they did not believe the shot had any connection with the killing.

Tenants were present in each of the other five apartments. It developed, upon questioning by the police, that none had heard any sounds of struggle.

JOUR MEN STABBED TWO ARE BEATEN

PROBABLY ONE FATALLY AT CLEVELAND AS RESULT OF STEEL STRIKE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cleveland, Sept. 24.—Four men were stabbed, two probably fatally and two others were badly beaten near entrance of Amelcan Steel and Wire Co., Newburg, plant this morning in first serious local disorder of the steel strike. The trouble broke out when a street car stopped near the plant to let off men bound for work at the mills.

RATIFY PEACE TREATY

Premier Clemenceau Will Ask Chamber of Deputies to Vote.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 24.—Premier Clemenceau is expected to go before the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon and call for a vote ratifying the peace treaty with Germany.

A meeting of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference was held today in consequence of engagements of French members.

ONTARIO PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS AND REFERENDUM CALLED FOR SAME DAY

Election to be Held on October Twentieth—Sir William Hearst Dissolves Legislature---Issues Manifest to Electorate---Promises Minimum Wage in the Province---Nominations Oct. 13th

Toronto, Sept. 24.—Sir William Hearst last night announced the dissolution of the Ontario Legislature and the issuing of writs for a general election on October 20, with nominations one week earlier. At the same time the Premier made known the fact that he had decided to bring into the Cabinet as a representative of the returned soldiers General Arthur E. Ross, member for Kingston. Gen. Ross, whose record at the front as Director of Medical Services for the Canadian corps marked him as one of the most distinguished of Canada's soldiers, will join the Government as Minister without portfolio, but there is reason to believe that later he will be given a more responsible part in the management of the affairs of the Province. The Department of the Provincial Secretary has developed to such an extent that it is too heavy a load for a single Minister, and with the adoption of new measures dealing with public health, with the care of the feeble-minded and related matters, a field of service will be opened for which Gen. Ross will have exceptional qualifications.

The Prime Minister's announcement of an election upon Oct. 20 was so generally anticipated that it will occasion little comment. At the time the referendum date was announced the members of the Government were generally agreed that if a full expression of public opinion was to be secured on the Government's record and the people saved the expense of a double campaign, the election should be held on the same date. There were, however, some objections to such a course, and it was only late last week that the final decision was made.

A Minimum Wage.

In the message Sir William issued to the people he reviews the record of the Government and indicates the line the Government proposes to follow in the future. The platform upon which the Government will go to the country is set out under eighteen different headings, most of them dealing with policies that have already been put into effect in varying degree. Of outstanding importance among the new policies to which the Government has committed itself is the enactment of a minimum wage law for the Province, the establishment of a pension fund for mothers, the adoption of measures to reduce the high cost of living, and provision for the care of mental defectives.

The holding of the general election upon the same date as the referendum is not expected to cause confusion, but it is quite possible that it will prevent the full verdict of the electors being known the following morning. The counting of the votes at a general election is generally a task of one to two hours, according to the efficiency of the returning officer. The referendum vote cannot possibly be counted and compiled in less than four or five hours, and if the election ballots are counted first, the vote on the referendum will not be known at all definitely until the following day. The problem of getting the ballots counted and the results to the people in the shortest possible time will be considered in the near future.

WE HAVE UNREST, WE HAVE CRIMINAL PROFITEERS DECLARES SAM GRIGGS

Says Profiteering Must Be Punished With Imprisonment—Unrest Unvoidable

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Hamilton, Sept. 24. The Dominion Trades and Labor Congress this morning endorsed the action of the United States Steel Workers in support of the principle of collective bargaining and sent a telegram of the executive of the steel workers to that effect.

Criminal Profiteers.

Referring to the unrest prevailing in United States and Canada at the present time, Sam Griggs, fraternal delegate of the American Federation of Labor, said in addressing Congress, "We have unrest and we have criminal profiteers. The Government of the United States is conducting an extensive investigation into the cost of living, but I don't think much of these investigations. Unless these profiteers are placed in jails, where they belong, we will not get much relief." Mr. Griggs said that unrest was unavoidable and it was to be allayed some relief must come soon.

STRIKERS SUCCESS IS COMPLETE IN THE MAHONING VALLEY, OHIO

Otherwise Little Change in Alignment of Union Forces and Big Steel Operators.

Pittsburg, Sept. 24.—While steel strike districts are quieter this morning, interest has centred in a statement of Wm. Z. Foster, strike leader, that he will discuss with the national executive the advisability of calling out all Union trainmen and Great Lakes seamen in sympathy with the steel workers.

Little Change Generally.

New York, Sept. 24. — Reports from all steel centres today recorded little change in the alignment of the opposing forces of the Labor unions and steel companies.

Success Complete Here.

In the Mahoning Calley of Ohio, the strikers' success is complete The ndustry, which is the backbone of Youngstown and a score of neighboring villages, is paralyzed and all of the 46,000 wage earners idle. Elsewhere the struggle is being carried on with varying success, the issue still being doubtful on the great strategic sectors radiating from Pittsburg and Chicago

Returning to Work.

In the Pittsburg district the Carnegie Steel Co. announced today that the situation "looks good" and backed up its optimism with claims that the men were returning to work in considerable numbers.

Many Mills Closed.

The situation around Chicago is more definite than that in the Pennsylvania region. A majority of the mills are closed and those which are still operating are doing so with reduced forces.

U. F. O. CANDIDATE MAY WITHDRAW

ED. McINTYRE, OF CROWLAND, ONT., IS NOT A CANADIAN CITIZEN.

Welland, Sept. 24.—The political pot has boiled over in the Welland riding. With the mystery surrounding the date of the elections comes the announcement that one of the nominees may be forced to drop out of the contest and a rumor that Labor, despite the pledge of support made to the U.F.O. Convention, intends bringing out a candidate of its own.

E. D. McIntyre of Crowland is the U. F. O. candidate, and unless the election day is later than October 20 his name will not be on the ballot because of a technicality. Mr. McIntyre before he came to Crowland took out naturalization papers in the United States, and since returning to Canada has failed to secure repatriation, which will disqualify him.

Providing he is not eligible, the U. F. O. will select another candidate. Capt. Speck, recently returned from overseas, is the man Labor interests are now booming for candidate. Whether a convention will be called to nominate him has not yet been announced. With him in the field there will be four candidates out—Lieut.-Col. D. A. Sharpe, M.P.P., Conservative; Robert Cooper, Liberal; Speck and McIntyre.

GENERAL, TALKING FOR NATION SAYS FIUME MATTER IS SETTLED

RED TROOPS ARE OCCUPYING TOMSK

THIS SEEMS TO INDICATE INSURGENT RISING BEHIND KOLCHAK'S LINES.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 24.—A Bolshevik wireless message received today from Moscow says that Red troops, commanded by General Lubkoff, are reported to have occupied Tomsk, 500 miles east of Omsk, the all-Russian seat of Government, on the Trans-Siberian railway line.

Treason in Rear.

Foregoing report, if confirmed, would seem to indicate an insurgent rising behind General Kolchak's lines which had resulted in the seizure of an important strategic point on the Trans-Siberian line in Central Western Siberia.

SMALL BOYS SET HOUSE ON FIRE

But Firemen Extinguished Fire in Hen House Before Much Damage Was Done.

A fire broke out in the hen house of No. 278 Reid street yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock. This house is owned by Mr. Waddell, but is unoccupied at the present time. The fire was first noticed by Mr. E. Steward, who was passing in his automobile. He immediately warned the fire station who attended to it and by laying one line of hose extinguished the fire before any great damage was caused.

In the meantime, three boys between the ages of 12 and 14 reported to Chief Grange that they had set a match to the hen house.

FIGHT CAPITALISTS IN THE WHOLE WORLD

IF THERE ARE ANY BOLSHEVIKS THEY ARE AMONG THE BRITISH CAPITALISTS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Sept. 24. Ben Tillett, M. P., general secretary of the Longshoremen and Dockmen of England, in an interview today on his way to the Dominion Trades Congress at Hamilton, declared that "Bolshevism in England is mere ghost and if there are any Bolsheviks they are among British capitalists."

CANADIAN LOCOMOTIVE GAINS.

Report for Year Shows Profits Increased $215,000.

The annual report of the Canadian Locomotive Company for the fiscal year ending June 30 shows profits before interest, dividends and deductions for reserves, and depreciation, of $892,976. The showing compares with a profit of $677,937 last year.

The deductions include $100,000 for the depreciation reserve, and $35,000 for a special reserve. The same deductions were made from earning last year. Since 1912 the total profits of the company have amounted to $4,056,000. It has $1,500,000 of bonds, and $3,500,000 stock outstanding.

Capt. D'Annunzio Names Four Italian Warships as "Fiuman Navy"—Crews Praised For Loyalty to Cause

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 24.—"As a nation we consider the Fiume matter settled, because we have actual possession," said General Giuseppe "Peppico" Garibaldi to an Associated Press representative.

Garibaldi Was Ready.

Garibaldi had just reached Paris from Rome, coming on what was said to be an important mission. "Had O'Annunzio not gone in," continued Garibaldi, "we would have done it within 15 days.

Pola, Sept. 24. Four Italian warships, the battleship Dante Alighieri and the destroyers Girabello Nullo and Abba, are named as units of the "Fiuman navy" in a proclamation written by Capt Gabriele D'Annunzio and distributed in this city. The proclamation praises the men of these ships for "their loyalty to the Fiuman cause," and tells them for their "valorous acts"

Despatches from Fiume soon after Capt. Gabriele O'Annunzio's coup stated the Dante Alighieri was unable to leave that port because her machinery had been damaged by the crew.

ENGLAND NOW FACES HUGE STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES; OUTLOOK BLACK

MISSED FOOTING AND FRACTURED HIP

MR. WILLIAM HANNAH MEETS WITH PAINFUL ACCIDENT INJURY IS SERIOUS.

Mr. William Hannah, of Bewdley, met with a very painful accident Monday evening. Mr. Hannah intended to leave for Illinois to-day for the winter and came to town to say farewell to his friends here. He was staying with his granddaughter, Mrs. J. A. Box, Ontario street, and when going down the back steps missed his footing and fell fracturing his right hip. Mr. Hannah was taken to the hospital, but the injury was so painful that at the time of writing could not be set. Owing to Mr. Hannah's advanced age, 86 years, the injury is quite serious.

Ultimatum of Union Presented to Government—Unless a Favorable Reply is to Hand by Thursday Noon, Men Will be Ordered Out—Increased Expenditure of 45,000,000 Annually

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Sept. 24.—Because of the situation created by presentation to the Government today of an ultimatum by railwaymen, in which a strike was threatened, a full meeting of the Cabinet was called to be held this afternoon, to consider the situation.

A general railroad strike throughout England was again possible this morning, when the men's representatives served an ultimatum on the Government respecting their wage demands.

The Government's reply is expected early today; Sir Eric Geddes and Lloyd George are in conference.

Decision Thursday.

The ultimatum of the Railroad Employees' Union executive says that unless a favorable reply to their demands is received by Thursday noon the men would be ordered to cease work.

Huge Increase.

This expectation was realized early in the afternoon, when Minister Geddes replied to an ultimatum, declaring that the action of the men's executive was unjustifiable, and that in order to meet their demands freight rates would have to be advanced probably fifty per cent., which would mean an additional permanent expenditure by the railway companies amounting to £45,000,000 annually.

The action of the railway executive came somewhat unexpectedly, despite the gloomy forecast of an approaching crisis given by Secretary Thomas in the House of Commons yesterday for inquiry among leaders of the Railroad Men's Union, during this morning revealed a feeling that his opinion did not accord with the general view of the men. Before the meeting, at which ultimatum was framed, which was a session of the full executive body of the National Union of railroad men, belief was voiced is most quarters that a settlement could be reached without a general strike. Thomas said yesterday that the outlook for prevention of the strike was "black."

A NEW GRATUITY NOTE.

SECRETARY WHATLEY, of the G. W. V. A., has struck a note in the gratuity agitation not before sounded—that of widows, mothers and orphans of those men who have made the supreme sacrifice in their country's service. Amid all the furore created over this question the nation's debt to the returned men has been the cry, without any apparent thought for those heroic women who must, as a result of Canada's victory, go through life mourning the loss and deprived of the support of husband or son, as the case may be. 'Tis true such suffering women receive a pension, but so do thousands of the returned men who are looking for a $2,000 gratuity in addition. 'Tis also true that the widows and orphans do not receive even a gratuity equal to that which has already been allotted the returned men. And who, after all, is the better entitled to a gratuity—let it be large or let it be small—than she who has been left to the cold charity of the world by the heroism of son or husband in responding to the call to do or die for Canada and home? Surely the men who have earned in France and Belgium a lustrous record for humane thought for the weak and tender solicitude for the oppressed will give first place to those mourning women, living mementos of Canada's glory and unselfish sacrifice, wives and mothers of gallant brothers-in-arms whose death is typical of the sacrificial principle upon which British Christian faith is erected.

We commend, in measure full and overflowing, that spirit of true comradeship, engendered in the war, which is exemplified in Secretary Whatley's declaration that Veterans should see to it that the bereaved women shall have equal, if not first, claim upon the country's recognition in the shape of gratuities.

Then there is the thought that even if this increased gratuity be forthcoming, might there not consistently be expected gradation in amounts awarded and elimination of some claims altogether? Is the man whose soldiering service consisted of a pleasant stay in the Old Country, visiting his sister and his cousins and his aunts entitled to an increased gratuity? Should the man who served four or more years at the front be ranked in the same class with he who served but one or two? And what further consideration is coming to the man who secured a fat job in the London pay office, or at similar service, at a bigger salary than he ever earned as a civilian? These are phases of the question which, in justice to all concerned, should have place in all deliberations on the matter of gratuity recognition, and which, if equably worked out, might induce the Government to accord a more earnest ear to what is really an outstanding problem in Canada today.

SHOULD CEASE TO WHINE.

ERZBERGER complains that the Allies are disregarding the German law which demands that import duties be collected on a gold basis. His plaint is that if this is continued Germany will be ruined, says the New York Commercial. Hamburg and Bremen are being shunned he says, because on the gold payment basis the duty at those ports is almost four times higher than it is on the paper basis in the area occupied by the French and the English. Mr. Erzberger forgets that peace has not been declared and that until it is the Allies will run the western doorway to Germany as they please. The years are long and many of them lie ahead. Mr. Erzberger need have no fear that the nation he represents will collapse. If he and his confreres in the government would put on a bold front, show their faith in the nation and cease to whine, their people might yet stand four-square to the winds of economic adversity, solve their problems and win back some of the respect they have forfeited.

A LONG-SUFFERER.

THERE IS ONE CLASS in every community to whom sympathy these times is due, and who have borne the trials and hardships of war and the burden of the high cost of living under circumstances calling for the greatest fortitude, and that is the men who live on salaries—mark the word, salaries, not wages. The salaried man has no union to protect him or to enforce an increase or a reduction in hours; he is individually isolated in the sea of workers, with no recourse against increasingly difficult conditions but to live as live can and make the most of it. There are thousands upon thousands of salaried men whose incomes have remained at the same level throughout the war, and who have cheerfully kept their noses down to the everlasting grindstone, pinching and economizing to meet living charges, and to play their part in the struggle against Hun despotism. The salaried man has to keep up a presentable appearance, subscribe to this and contribute to that, pay his share in church maintenance, and give his children an approved education, and how he has done and is doing it is a mystery too deep for most to solve. He certainly has a minimum of life's comforts and pleasures, with a maximum of life's struggles, and let us hope he is heaping up for himself a reward where thieves do not break through and steal nor moth doth corrupt. Let us also anticipate that the time will come when—and let it be soon—in national reconstruction the salaried man will find a place in that general world-betterment which is supposed to evolve out of the world-wide slaughter of 1914-18.

CHANCE FOR TRADERS.

THERE OUGHT, as Sir Auckland Geddes remarked, to be "a blaze of hope" in the hearts of all our manufacturers. Never was there a time when there were so many markets, new and old, clamoring for goods after five years of interrupted trade. At the same time our most effective European competitors are temporarily out of action and faced for a long time with most difficult and absorbing political difficulties. There is just such a chance as British traders of old knew well how to make use of. It is a time for audacity and efficiency, not for a timid clinging to the apron strings of a government whose commercial acumen is so often abused by its present suppliants. If we are to have strong and efficient industries we need open channels of trade and the freest possible traffic along them. Our traders have the markets of the world before them, and do not need to shelter in the hothouse atmosphere of artificial high prices at home.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

EVEN IF the Republicans should elect their candidate for President and also secure control of the House and the Senate, it does not follow that Washington will end the existing Reciprocity arrangement with the Dominion of Canada, says the Westminster Gazette. It does not necessarily follow, because the Republicans are not likely to be able—much as some of their ultra-Protectionist supporters may desire—to revise the tariff of 1913 in the spirit that actuated the revisions of 1897 and 1910. In 1910 the Republicans obviously overplayed the game; and Mr. Taft's defeat in 1912 was in part the result of the Payne-Aldrich tariff. Ultra-Protectionists are slow to profit by experience. Otherwise, after the disaster the McKinley tariff brought for the Republican party in 1892, there never would have been the Payne-Aldrich tariff of 1910. But today, and for some years to come, no party at Washington will dare add materially to the amazingly high cost of living by revising the tariff upward all through the schedules. It is most improbable that the existing tariff will be revised by a Republican Congress in the spirit of 1897 and 1910. Only in the event of a revision in 1921 in that spirit will there be a deletion from the Tariff Act of 1913 of the section upon which the existing Reciprocity arrangement between Canada and the United States is based. The Government at Ottawa is, of course, as free as the Government at Washington to end the arrangement. But there is the grain growers' movement in Canada, and the probability that at the next general election it may send thirty-five or thirty-eight members to the House of Commons.

DEVONSHIRE HOUSE.

DEVONSHIRE HOUSE, the seat in England of the Duke of Devonshire, at present Governor-General of Canada, rose from the ruins of Berkeley House, destroyed by fire, which was, John Evelyn tells us, "remarkable for its great number of chimneys, state-rooms and cedar staircase." Evelyn himself designed the holly hedges, and took pride in the garden, "incomparable by reason of the inequalities of the ground, and a pretty piscina." The poets, Waller, Denham and Dryden, were familiar with the hospitalities of Berkeley House, and doubtless bored their host by inflicting their verses on him in part payment. The present house was built by William Kent for the third duke, and became the headquarters of the Whig party during the hey-day of their political power. It was here that "the beautiful Duchess" wrote those lines on William Tell which drew a startled query from Coleridge. Here, too, in 1851, took place the first amateur performance of Bulwer Lytton's comedy of "Not So Bad As We Seem," for the benefit of the Guild of Literature and Art, before Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort.

General Sir Arthur Currie, while a strong believer in the back-to-the-land policy for returned veterans, also believes that assistance should be given to those living in cities. It certainly hardly seems right that one class should be favored and another left to look after itself.

STARTING PRICES DOWN.
(Baltimore News.)

The fact that the Hotel Emerson has advertised a 25 per cent. reduction in food prices to take effect at once and also a reduction of $1 to $1.50 on rooms, is of interest not merely because it may point the way to similar action on the part of others, thus widening the circle affected, but rather because it will be hailed as a sign that we are on the way to more normal conditions in all lines.

LAWLESS CHICAGO.
(New York World.)

With the Chief of Police asking for two thousand more men because crime has increased fifty per cent., Chicago is wondering whether Prohibition is all that its advocates have claimed for it. For that very reason, therefore, it presented a most inviting field for the new reform. The report that things are getting worse will shake public confidence in the theory that morality can be legislated into folks and cause some of us to despair of Chicago itself, [illegible] or sober.

THE BOSTON LESSON.
(New York Tribune.)

In his telegram to Samuel Gompers, Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts speaks the voice of a nation that sees the right and knows no other course than to uphold it, calmly, steadfastly.

"There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, any time," he wrote.

Tersely and simply put, the words express perfectly the truth that we are all coming to realize as the controlling fact in this era of strikes threatened and threatening.

NO NEED FOR COAL WHEN SCIENTISTS RELEASE ENERGY LOCKED IN MATTER

(By Sir Oliver Lodge.)

[Sir Oliver Lodge, doyen of British scientists and one of the most powerful thinkers in the world, predicts that chemistry will soon produce an energy of such concentrated power and explosive violence that the very existence of the planet will be endangered. Sir Oliver points out that a chemical element known as niton is so spontaneously active that a single pound radiates an energy of ten thousand horse power. He expresses the hope that the enterprising nation whose inventive genius perfects this all-powerful energy will prove so humanely civilized as to hold its destructive power in check.]

London.—A pinch of coal dust or a thimbleful of oil represents at present the most portable form of power. If the whole of the energy resulting from these when combined with oxygen could be really utilized they would yield quite a considerable store.

An ounce of oil completely burnt would heat between six and seven pounds of water from freezing to boiling point, which is the equivalent of 410 foot-tons. A ton falling a height of 440 feet would generate the same amount of heat.

But is there any kind of energy locked up not in the moecule nor in the inter-action between molecules, but in the actual structure of each atom? Does a single atom of matter contain energy by reason of its constitution? And, if so, is there any means of getting at it?

Previous to the discovery of radium the question could hardly have been asked. The answer is now known. In radioactive substances there certainly is a store of atomic energy, and some of the energy is liberated by the emission of flying particles flung off from time to time whenever the atom is degenerating or passing from a more complex to a more simple form.

And this emission of energy is very great. When it was first observed that a few grains of radium was continually giving off a great deal of energy and yet not disappearing, some scientific men, even Lord Kelvin himself, spoke of it as a sort of miracle. The stuff burned.

It soon became clear, however, that there was no flaw in the law of conservation of energy. The stuff certainly possesses and certainly loses all the energy it emits but it loses very little weight. The disappearance of a single grain of matter out of say a pound is only detectable by careful weighing, but the power remitted during the disappearance of grain would be enough to raise the temperature of a ton of water from freezing to boiling point.

We must remember, however, that not such effect would be produced even by a pound of radium in any reasonable time, for it would take a year to lose a grain.

And so the power is diluted down; there is nothing violent about it, and we know no means of hastening it nor indeed of retarding it, either.

It is a remarkable fact that whether the bit of radium be made red hot in a furnace or cooled hundreds of degrees below zero by liquid air, its rate of disintegration remains practically constant. People sometimes speak of radium as if it were unique. Not so. It is a striking member of a class, and it serves well to illustrate the properties of that class.

Every now and then an atom of radium explodes or fires off a projectile—what is called an "A" particle. The projectile bears to the residue of the atom something of the same proportion that a shot bears to a gun. It is like a two-ton gun firing a 100-pound shot.

Only now and then does a radium atom get to this explosive stage. For every one that thus exerts itself in the course of a year there are about three thousand that remain quiescent for that period.

But directly one shot has been fired the rest of that particular atom does not settle down into quiescence again till it has fired off four more, converting itself each time into a different element.

Some of these shots follow each other quite quickly, barely giving time to the experimenter to examine the properties of the intervening substances. Yet these substances are real elements, with chemical reactions of their own and with a characteristic spectrum. Their peculiarity is that they are short lived.

The greatest energy per unit weight of combustible material is the burning of hydrogen in oxygen. This emits heat to the value of four thousand units of heat for every gram of water formed by the combination. But by the time that a gram of radium has gone through its changes a million times this quantity of energy would have been emitted. Let it not be supposed, however, that only the atoms of radioactive substances possess it, some more, some less; but for most atoms the energy is all locked up in their intimate structure and is quite inaccessible.

The radioactive elements are those which do not keep the energy completely locked up. Once an hour one out of thirty million atoms goes off with violence and continues to fire at known, though not quite regular, intervals five times till it becomes quiescent again. It thus gives away the secret of a vast store of energy.

Every atom is a complicated structure, a region of law and order.

The point for present consideration, however, is not the rate at which different elements choose to give out their store of energy, but the existence of this store and its marvellous abundance.

The particles shot off from radium are shot with a speed quite amazing—about one-fifteenth that of light. To get some notion of this speed we may compare it with the highest speed of a bullet. During the time taken by a rifle bullet to fly without resistance from the muzzle of a rifle to a target 300 yards away the "A" particle simultaneously shot off from radium would have travelled 3,000 miles, from London to New York. The time needed is only a quarter of a second.

And as to the energy of such a projectile, it is not much in itself, because its mass is so minute, but weight for weight it is four hundred million times more energetic than a bullet.

But, it may be said, radium fires them off so seldom. Each projectile is violent enough, truly, but, you say, there is only one out of 3,000 which explodes in the course of a year. That is so, but think how many atoms there are in any visible speck of substance.

Take a milligram of radium—that is, take one-seventieth of a grain—and ask how many projectiles such as we have described are fired off by it each second. The number is no less than thirty million, even from radium itself, and the number of projectiles is even five times as great as this if the products of disintegration are not allowed to escape.

Thirty million projectiles, each with a fifteenth of the speed of light, come away from a milligram of radium every second, yet the speck will last a thousand years before it is half exhausted.

Chemical combination is not in it with energies such as this. And this is the kind of energy which is locked up and at present inaccessible in every atom of matter.

A little arithmetic would enable us to paraphrase the late Sir William Crookes and say that if all the energy in an ounce of matter could be extracted and fully utilized it would be enough to lift the German navy and pile it on the top of Ben Nevis.

Sir Ernest Rutherford reckons that the gaseous emanation primarily given off from radium after firing its first shot—this emanation being itself a chemical element called niton—is so spontaneously active that it actually does radiate energy at the rate of ten thousand horse power per pound.

Undoubtedly, if the progress of discovery enables us to get at and utilize the energy locked up in a ton of ordinary matter per diem, no further motive power would be needed.

And if, further, we found ourselves able to liberate any considerable portion of such energy in a short period the explosive violence would be such that the very planet would be unsafe.

It is to be hoped that no such facilities will fall to the lot of an enterprising scientific nation until it is really and humanely civilized and is both willing and able to keep its destructive power in check. Humanity is not ripe for every discovery, but in due time, and when it can be applied to useful and beneficial ends, I doubt not some such power as that here foreshadowed will be attained.

FALLON NOT GUILTY

Charge of Manslaughter Against Peterborough Man Dismissed.

Wm. Fallon, of Peterborough, the returned soldier who was charged with manslaughter in connection with manslaughter in connection with the death of Bella Roy of Ottawa, which took place in a St. Lawrence Boulevard rooming house July 16th last, was tried before the King's Bench and found not guilty. The jury rendered their verdict without leaving their seats.

Prophecies of Queen Victoria

There are people who during the late struggle could not understand how the royal families of countries in Europe at war with one another could possibly be loyal to those countries and yet be among themselves, so closely intermarried and on such intimate terms of relationship. Our own Duchess of Connaught, for instance, was a Prussian, and Queen Mary is of direct German descent on her father's side, yet both were working heart and soul for England, the land of their home, and those were not lacking who would have liked to have laid the centre blame of the European conflagration on a genuine old-fashioned Royal family quarrel.

Apropos of all this, some hitherto unpublished correspondence of Queen Victoria's, which the King has recently allowed an article in the "Quarterly Review" to use, throws an interesting light.

It seems, although King Edward has been accredited with having brought about the Franco-English and Russian alliance, the beginning of this diplomatic move was made by his mother with a perfectly natural and humane desire to support weak neighbors in a time of trouble.

It was Bismarck the Queen distrusted, and the instincts of this domineering and practical statesman taught him to as thoroughly dislike Victoria of England. In intimate court language he classed the English Royal family as part of "the Coburg gang." When Prussia seized the Danish state of Schleswig-Holstein in 1864 the Queen wrote indignantly to her daughter, the Crown Princess of Germany, through whose influence she had been trying to secure magnanimous terms for Denmark: "Her Majesty thinks that Prussia should at least be made aware of what she and her Government and every honest man in Europe must think of the gross and unblushing violation of every assurance and pledge she had given which Prussia had been guilty of."

That sentence, taken from a queen's letter written half a century ago, might, from the sound of it, have been written by a journalist of last year.

But it was for France Queen Victoria most feared. She wrote personally in September, 1870, to the King of Prussia, appealing on behalf of France, that he make peace in a generous spirit, but was politely refused.

For this she seems not to have blamed the Emperor, but Bismarck. Another excerpt tells us where the Queen believed the Prussian royal family to stand: "July 31, 1871.—Talked with good Fritz (her son-in-law, the Crown Prince of Germany) about the war. He is so fair and kind and good, and has the intensest horror of Bismarck, says he is no doubt energetic and had driving power, but was bad, unprincipled and all-powerful; he is, in fact, the Emperor, which Fritz's father does not like, but still does not seem to be able to prevent. As for the treaty which he published, said to be proposed by Benedetti, Fritz said that it was quite as much Bismarck's doing as that of the Emperor Napoleon; that he felt they lived on the edge of a volcano, and that he should not be surprised if Bismarck some day tried to make war on England! This justifies what many people have said."

Later on, in 1875, the Queen, writing to her daughter at Berlin and calling her "Dear Vicky," wrote of Bismarck: "No one wishes more as you know, than I do for England and Germany to go well together, but Bismarck is so overbearing, violent, grasping, and unprincipled that no one can stand it, and all agreed that he was becoming like the first Napoleon, whom Europe had to join in putting down . . . . I wrote at that moment a private letter to the Emperor Alexander (of Russia), urging him to do all he could in a pacific sense at Berlin" (in favor of France is meant). The foundation of the future entente is here clearly shown.

Later on, in the same letter to her daughter, Victoria of Prussia, she concludes: "But Bismarck is a terrible man, and he makes Germany greatly disliked; indeed, no one will stand the overbearing, insolent way in which he acts and treats other nations—Belgium, for instance.

"You know that the Prussians are not popular, unfortunately, and no one will tolerate any power wishing to dictate to all Europe. This country with the greatest wish to go hand in hand with Germany, cannot and will not stand it."

This letter shows that royal families think and act for themselves fully as well, if not better, than ordinary ones do. But it seems pitiful that neither the Queen nor her daughter and son-in-law, then the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, though all three having "the intensest horror" of the clever but unscrupulous Bismarck, could prevent the present Kaiser, who was a grandson and son from completing his education under this energetic and "unprincipled" man, and thus becoming the instrument of bringing on that war against England and all Europe which the Queen foresaw and dreaded; and making Prussia's unpopularity so great that the world now frankly loathes her.

The tragedy of royal families must be in having their children half owned and controlled by the state, especially when that state produces unworthy representatives.

THE MERCHANTS

In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general.

PROMPT BILLS BRING PROMPT COLLECTIONS

"Sending out our bills on the last day of the month instead of anywhere from the fifth to the tenth of the following month has increased our collections about 15 per cent," says one store manager.

"Formerly we made the mistake of letting the bookkeeper make out the bills at times when there 'was no more pressing work on hand' for her. Now we know that there are very few things connected with her job which can be more important than this.

"In the first place, when the customer receives the statement promptly on the first day of the month it conveys the impression that we are operating strictly on that very good system of insisting on prompt payments. Statements which arrive 'at any old time' lead him to feel that he may pay 'at any old time.'

"In the second place, most persons live on salaries, and money in general is more plentiful around the first of the month than at other periods. Naturally it is the bills which come in at this time that get the funds immediately available.

"On overdue accounts we use the telephone with good effect.

"We simply call up the customer, remind him of the debt and ask him to tell us when to expect payment. We note that date and, if the payment is not forthcoming, we call him up first thing the next day and we keep right on checking him up on his promises and calling him on the phone until he does pay. We have found that the certainty of those telephone calls, which are very businesslike in tone despite their courtesy, brings payments much quicker than sharp threats of legal action. The latter have a dangerous tendency to stir up the 'Irish' in the average red-blooded American, and so defeat their own purpose."

BARGAINS LURE WOMEN EVEN OUT OF BED

"What's the big idea, friend? All those dames crowdin' into the lobby of that men's clothing store at 7 the way, so early in the morning?"

"Search me," replied another early riser. "Guess there's a bargain sale or somethin' goin' on."

Had these men followed the newspaper advertisements of Brussiar & Co., men's outfitters, of Reading, Pa., they would have known that a remnant sale of ends of shirting from this store's custom department was to take place at 8 o'clock in the morning.

Brussiar & Co. find on their hands every six months or so an accumulation of remnants of such materials as madras, percale, cheviot, chambray, gingham, crepe, sateen, linen, comet domet, pongee and fiber, which for obvious reasons, they desire to dispose of. For purposes of quick riddance, and to insure little or no interruption to salesmen during regular business hours, the management has inaugurated these remnant sales, the hour selected being either before or after the customary shopping periods.

Such sales are advertised weeks ahead and invariably attract a host of women to the store on the day of the sale, no matter what the hour.

The most recent of these sales was staged at 6 a.m., and long before that hour women began crowding their way up to the store's entrance. By 8 o'clock not a remnant remained.

"LISTEN FOR THE BELL" SELLS LOTS OF GOODS

No defeated boxer battling to cover without having the knockout handed to him listened for the gong with more eagerness than did crowds of shoppers who took advantage of a novel sale feature staged in Elmira, N.Y., this summer by Tepper Brothers department store.

The firm installed bells all through the different sections and advertised that whoever bought goods worth twenty-five cents would be given the articles free whenever the bell would ring in that particular department.

The bells sounded at irregular intervals, and no one could judge just when and where the next would clang. All that could be done was to stay on the job and shop until all possible needs were satisfied. While the idea kept down the sales' totals, as many did not go over the twenty-five-cent limit, it moved almost every article of that price out of the store during the day.

In each instance where a person had just paid the twenty-five cents the bell rang Tepper Brothers refunded the money. It was interesting to note the banner attendance at the sale, and the public is ready for its repetition as often as the firm wishes to stage it.

Merchants who have studied the plan say that it is invaluable to sell small lots of goods that move slowly. Odds and ends of which just a few are left can be disposed of, with only an occasional refund to follow.

ICE WATER PLUS CLEANLINESS

The Bon Ton, a specialty store in San Francisco, scored a hit when it took the water coolers off the floor (it made shoppers ask where the cooler was. Then some one pressed a button and a maid appeared with a tray of lily cups and thermos bottle and some paper napkins. The maid served all shoppers who happened to be standing near and then disappeared to wait for the next call.

Customers received a vivid illustration of the store's policy of service—and incidentally the sales clerks by a casual word or two at this "psychological moment" increased the sales of lily cups and thermos bottles.

THE VACATION WINDOW

A window such as that used by the R. H. Macy Company can never fail to boost the sales of summer goods. It may be repeated indefinitely with variations at will, but it always pulls. A beach scene is depicted. There is real sand on the floor of the window, with wax figures in bathing costumes disporting in the background may be placed any goods of vacation-time appeal, from cold cream to trunks.

Another window which pulled results for Strawbridge & Clothier in Philadelphia was one which sold not so many trunks and suitcases themselves as the use for these things. It was a baggage room window. The only equipment needed besides the trunks, suitcases and valises which were piled up in profusion was a back curtain on which was painted the train room gates with the trains beyond. The sight of a grip or a trunk does not necessarily excite the desire of ownership "for its own sweet sake", but the suggested thought of the coming vacation does indeed drive home the necessity for it.

VETERANS ASK SALE OF BEER AND WINES

Oppose Return of Open Bar, But Would Learn From French System.

Denouncing the License Act as "stupid," and the Ontario Temperance Act as "atrocious" and "a maker of criminals," and affirming their intention of resisting "the tyranny of political governments," Parkdale G.W.V.A. went on record last night as favoring the sale of beer and wine, and advocated an affirmative answer to all four questions on the forthcoming referendum, as the means of attaining that end.

There was no discussion on the motion, Col. A. T. Hunter, President, expressing the opinion that every phase of the subject had been fully considered at the last meeting. By way of demonstrating this fact to the members, he asked three questions. The first was that all opposed to the sale of beer and wine should rise. One member complied with the request, and a disposition on the part of some to hoot was drowned by the [illegible] of the majority for the courage of the comrade.

No one responded to the second question, which was that all in favor of the restoration of the open bar should rise. The third asked by Col. Hunter was: "How many of you think your views would be changed by unlimited discussion?" None thought so, and the following resolution was carried with three dissenting voices.

"That when we were asked three years ago to vote for or against the Ontario Temperance Act, we were told that if we voted for it we would get rid of the open bar, and that when we returned we would find in force an atrocious Act which has already made a hundred times more criminals than Fagin the Jew, that in the meantime we be a nation of abstainers, and that we would have a full experience of a rational system under which the French authorities keep a tight hand on the dangerous alcoholics, and allow free access to beer and wine, that under the present system immoderation, exceptional and drunkenness almost non-existent.

"That we should have to admit that we are inferior in self-control to the average Frenchman, and we do not admire being treated like Indians on a reserve or inmates of a jail farm. That the use of beer and wines is a man's business, and we do not in any event, having resisted the tyranny of Wilhelm, propose to submit to the meanest of all tyrannies, the tyranny of petticoat government.

"That the only way to clear the issue is to vote yes on all four questions on the referendum; that in our opinion, the statesmen who cannot express the popular desire for national temperance legislation by drafting an Act that will be neither the stupid License Act nor the atrocious O.T.A., is mentally too lazy to continue as a public servant, and that the aspiring legislator who cannot distinguish between beer and whiskey is not sufficiently intelligent to remain in public life."

The Citizens' Liberty League is proud to state that the following Organizations of Veterans have signified their approval of the League's objects and are supporting it in the endeavor to obtain sane, moderate temperance legislation.

Great War Veterans' Association—Toronto Branches: Parkdale Central Riverdale West Toronto Earlscourt. The Grand Army of Canada. His Majesty's Army and Navy Veterans' Association. The Naval Veterans' Association. The Originals' Club. 75th Battalion Association. 83rd Battalion Association. 75th Battalion Officers Association.

These great Organizations of men who were the first to answer the call in the fight for liberty are endorsing the platform of the Citizens' Liberty League because they know, with the League, that the Ontario Temperance Act unduly restricts the liberties of the citizens of the Province.

These men ask,—and what men in the Province have such a right to ask?—that you vote "YES" on questions 2 and 3 on the Referendum Ballot—and so assure to the citizens a beer containing 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight, absolutely non-intoxicating—the Beer of the Ballot.

Vote "YES" on all Four Questions

Remember, every voter must vote on every question or his ballot will be spoiled.

TOMASSO TITTONI RESIGNS OFFICE

ITALIAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S POSITION IN CABINET ONE OF GROWING DIFFICULTY.

DISAGREES WITH PREMIER NITTE

HAS BEEN UNSUCCESSFUL IN BRINGING ABOUT SOLUTION OF THE FIUME QUESTION.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Rome, Sept. 23.—Tomasso Tittoni, Italian foreign minister, has resigned because of the Fiume incident, according to an announcement by the Giornale d'Italia. Foreign Minister Tittoni's position in the Italian cabinet has been one of growing difficulty recently because of the Fiume developments. He is reported not to have been in entire agreement with Premier Nitti over the stand to be taken regarding the D'Annunzio coup, and as head of the Italian peace mission at Paris he has been successful so far in bringing about a solution of the Fiume question by the Peace Conference.

The most recent plan for an adjustment, which he participated in arranging, is said to have been approved by Great Britain and France, but American endorsement is understood to have been lacking, intimations from sources close to President Wilson being that there had been no change in his views, long ago expressed, that Fiume should not go to Italy.

NEW TEMPERANCE BILL, PERHAPS?

MAY RESULT FROM UNION CAUCUS AT OTTAWA—PARTY DIVIDED.

Ottawa, Sept. 23. At the Unionist caucus today "re-organization" as a Unionist party was postponed but a program for the present session was outlined.

The main question dealt with today was that of prohibition. Mr. Rowell, it is said, strongly urged the necessity of re-introducing the bill ratifying and extending the provisions of the prohibition order-in-council until one year after the proclamation of peace, but there was considerable division in the gathering as to the wisdom of this course.

A number of members are said to have taken the view that the Doherty Act, regulating interprovincial traffic and providing for provincial autonomy was all that the country demanded.

It is probable, however, that a new bill, perhaps slightly modified, will be introduced.

STATUS OF CROWN LAND OF GALICIA

IN DISPUTE BY POLES AND UKRANIANS BEFORE THE SUPREME COUNCIL.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Sept. 23.—The status of the former Austro-Hungarian crown land of Galicia was before the Supreme Council for discussion this morning. Premier Paderewski of Poland was heard by the Council, presenting the Polish view as to the disposition of the territory. The claims of the Poles and the Ukranians as to Galicia are widely at variance. Stephen Pichon, French foreign minister, presided over the council's session.

plate of bacon and eggs. Today you may eat heartily and feel fine. Tomorrow you may bolt a glass of milk and two crackers and get a stomach full of gas, sour risings, biliousness, a feeling of bloated heaviness and other distress. Indigestion is a fault from infancy to old age, no matter what you eat, so the thing to consider is how you may eat freely, get away with it fine and not suffer any of those distresses of indigestion. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have solved this problem for a host of people.

In fact, they are so well known that many physicians prescribe them for indigestion, dyspepsia and other digestive disorders. They contain ingredients which act with an alkaline effect, just as the stomach does in perfect health. Thus you may eat those foods you may have denied yourself, for fear of distress. Get a 50-cent box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store, and there will be no thought of trouble after eating. Try this harmless plan of enjoying life.

LIBERTY LEAGUE MEETING AT LINDSAY TOWN HALL

Small Attendance Attends Organization Meeting and Hear a Provincial Man.

Lindsay, Sept. 24.—A public meeting of the Citizens' Liberty League was held last night in the Town Hall, but owing to lack of publicity and counter attractions the attendance was not large. Mr. Sam Scott acted in the capacity of chairman, and later on in the evening was appointed secretary pro tem.

Mr. C. E. Haight (a returned man) and a member of the Provincial committee, was present and addressed the meeting on the referendum question. His utterances were emphatic, as he denounced the methods of the prohibitionists.

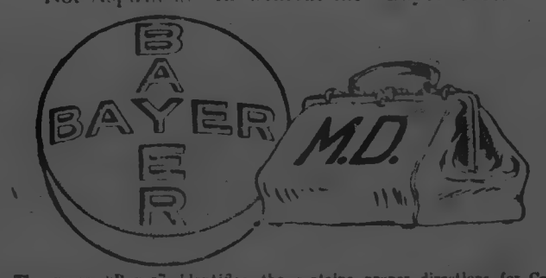
ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"



The name "Bayer" identifies the genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada. It contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuritis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Neuritis and Pain generally.

Always buy an unbroken package. Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

PROTECT YOURSELF

THIS is the Season of the Year when every person should strengthen and build up the system in order to ward off Influenza, La Grippe, Coughs and Colds. For some months we have been investigating and testing the merits of Cod Liver Oil in combination with hypophosphites and creosote, and we now take pleasure in announcing to the Canadian People that we have under the name of "BORDO" the Blood-builder a preparation that while pleasant to take, will strengthen the system, aid digestion, keep you, healthy and vigorous, "BORDO" the Blood-builder can be given to young and old and will not disturb digestion in the least. It is highly recommended for the treatment of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Nervous Debility, Influenza, Anaemia and to strengthen the system in general after sickness or other ailments has left the constitution in a weakened condition

"BORDO" is not a Cure-All but the Manufacturers have every confidence in doing what we claim for it. In cities like Peterborough we appoint only one Agent and it is NOW ON SALE AT

REV. A. J. THOMAS RECLINES INVITATION FROM ST. JAMES

Asked to Occupy Pulpit of Leading Can. Methodist Church During

Rev. A. J. Thomas, M.A., B.D., present pastor of the George Street Methodist Church, has received an invitation to St. James Methodist Church, Montreal.

The Quarterly Official Board of the George Street Church met last night, and although expressing deep regret at losing the services of their beloved pastor, would place no obstacle in his way to accepting an offer to Canada's leading Methodist Church.

Mr. Thomas will accept this offer and will, with the approval of the transfer committee of the Methodist Church, go to the Montreal church at the beginning of next conference year (next June).

Mr. Thomas has been one of the most successful pastors and preachers Methodism has ever had in this city, and although his people will regret his departure at the end of his third year, they are, nevertheless, greatly pleased with this great honor cast upon him. It is indeed a great tribute to Mr. Thomas to be chosen to this important work at a very critical time in the history of that church, at a time when reorganization and enthusiasm are most urgently required.

SAYS HOT WATER WASHES POISONS FROM THE LIVER

Everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it, before breakfast.

To feel as fine as the proverbial fiddle, we must keep the liver washed clean, almost every morning, to prevent its sponge-like pores from clogging with indigestible material, sour bile and poisonous toxins, says a noted physician.

If you get headaches, it's your liver. If you catch cold easily it's your liver. If you wake up with a bad taste, furred tongue, nasty breath or stomach becomes rancid, it's your liver. Sallow skin, muddy complexion, watery eyes all denote liver uncleanliness. Your liver is the most important, also the most abused and neglected organ of the body. Few know its function or how to release the dammed-up body waste bile and toxins. Most folks resort to violent calomel, which is a dangerous salivating chemical which can only be used occasionally, because it accumulates in the tissues, also attacks the bone.

Every man and woman, sick or well, should drink each morning before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, the poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleasing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Limestone phosphate does not restrict the diet like calomel, because it can not salivate, for it is harmless and you can eat anything afterwards. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, and any pharmacist will sell you a quarter pound, which is sufficient for a demonstration of how hot water and limestone phosphate cleans, stimulates and freshens the liver, keeping you feeling fit day in and day out.

TWO BANK ROBBERS IN TOILS.

Men Arrested in Dayton Confess to a Long Line of Thefts.

Dayton, O., Sept. 24. — Lyman Powell, aged 30, Chicago, and E. A. Asher, aged 21, Milwaukee, confessed to a long line of big bank forgeries here yesterday and were placed under $15,000 bond each, pending their removal to Portage, Wis. A letter containing a $5 draft raised to $500, opened accidentally by a hotel guest, furnished the clue to the arrests.

FANCY DRESS CARNIVAL AT APSLEY TOWN HALL

SOMETHING NEW IN HISTORY OF VILLAGE—AND WAS A DECIDED SUCCESS.

A fancy dress carnival was held in the town hall at Apsley on Sept. 18. This was something entirely new in the history of Apsley and for a first attempt was a decided success, no less than forty attending in fancy dress, as follows:

Canada—Mrs. Jones, Miss Hamilton, Miss C. Tucker, Miss M. Caldwell.

Red Cross Nurse—Miss D. Spence, Miss M. Thompson.

Milkmaid—Miss J. Tanner, Miss Fletcher.

England—Mrs. C. Smith.

France—Mrs. Booth.

Night—Miss A. Booth.

Egyptian—Miss M. Spence.

Japanese—Miss R. Windsor.

Queen of Hearts—Miss Hartwick.

Cow Girl—Miss L. Knox.

Golden Glow—Miss Wilson.

Indian Girl—Miss A. Coones.

Nursing Sister—Miss B. Kilburn.

Roses—Miss R. McKay.

Bopeep—Miss H. Woods.

Snowflakes—Phyllis Spence.

Jack Frost—Cicely Spence.

Fairy—Alma Jones.

Gipsy—Agnes Woods.

Red Riding Hood—Stella Jones.

Flower Girl—Cora Johnston.

Cowboy—Roy Brown, Vernal Windsor.

Soldiers—S. Windsor, J. Downing, M. Tucker, Alex. Woods, B. McIlmoyle.

Uncle Sam—Rex Spence.

Cook—Donald Woods.

Barber—John Coones.

Clown—Charles Smith.

Chinaman—M. Moloney.

Knave of Hearts—Roy Spence.

Boy Blue—R. Woods.

The judges, Reeve and Mrs. Bullied and Mrs. Chas. Hawkes, had a most difficult and delicate task to perform as all were worthy of prizes. In awarding the prize for the prettiest costume they found it impossible to decide between Miss M. Spence as an Egyptian and Miss R. Windsor as a Japanese, and so both were awarded first place. Miss D. Spence as a Red Cross Nurse was awarded first for the best character costume. Miss Amy Booth as Night winning second and Miss A. Coones as an Indian Maid third. The best character costume prize for gents went to Mr. Roy Spence as Uncle Sam, and the prize for the most comical was won by Mr. Chas. Smith in the juvenile section Cicely Spence as Jack Frost was awarded first, and Alma Jones as a Fairy second, with Hazel Woods as Bopeep receiving ohnorable mention, as also did Roy Spence as Knave of Hearts and Ronald Woods as Boy Blue.

Reeve Bullied as master of ceremonies performed his duties in a capable and masterly manner and kept the floor well filled with dancers until the early hours. The proceeds amounted to nearly $27 with a net profit of $16, which was given to the new Anglican parsonage fund.

COAL WORKER MAY STRIKE THURSDAY

TROUBLE BREWING FOR TORONTO COAL FIRMS—MINIMUM WAGE $25 A WEEK.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—Trouble is brewing in the ranks of the employes of local coal firms, and it is rather well known in the various local coal yards that unless an amicable arrangement is reached by Thursday that the men intend striking on that day. Various local coal merchants admit today that they have received an intimation from their employes that the latter are not satisfied with present working conditions, although the employers state that they have not received any ultimatum that the men may go out on Thursday.

The employes, it is understood, are asking for a minimum wage of $25 and eight-hour day, and Sundays and holidays off. For work on Sunday they are asking double time, and for overtime they ask time and one-half. In a letter delivered to every coal merchant in the city last week the men asked for some recognition of their claims.

Tom Watts, general organized for the Canadian Labor Federation, stated that unless the unforeseen happens he does not anticipate a strike on Thursday.

DOWNEYVILLE.

(Special Correspondence.)

Downeyville, Sept. 24.—Mr. Stance Lucas has returned to Toronto where he will resume his studies.

FRITZIE BRUNETTE IN "THE WOMAN UNDER COVER"

A newspaper woman usually acquires a world of sordid facts of the seamy side of life from her journalistic experience. It is her job and sometimes she becomes hardened to the "human interest" affairs transpiring in connection with her duties as a newspaper "sob sister," but there was a time when a story struck home to Alma Jordan, star reporter of "The Morning Leader." Sent to draw out the true story of the murder of Jack Rollson from the suspected woman, Yvonne LeClaire, Alma Jordan finds the other man in the case is her worthless brother. And while she hides behind the portieres, listening, breathlessly waiting to catch every word—she is broken hearted to learn that the other man in the case is Billy Jordan, whom she promised her dying mother to stand by.

The portrayal of the inner woman in the character of Alma Jordan, by Fritzi Brunette, is one of the outstanding features of the production of "The Woman Under Cover," the film version of the well known stage play, "Playing the Game," Sada Cowan's foremost theatrical success. This newest Universal six-reel feature is to be shown at the Grand Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

George Selgmann, formerly at the head of David W. Griffith's directorial staff, directed this feature of newspaper life. Selgmann has just recently returned from France, where he served with the American air forces. One of Selgmann's most recent successes since his return from France was the Universal special attraction, "The Spitfire of Seville."

An all-star supporting cast was selected for "The Woman Under Cover," including such well known film folk as George McDaniels, Fontaine LaRue, Carl Stockdale, Edward Cecil, Harry Springler, Fred Gamble and Marion Skinner.

EMMY WEHLEN CHARMS IN BRIGHT NEW COMEDY

For brightness of theme and ingenuity of plot Emmy Wehlen's latest vehicle, a sparkling comedy romance called "A Favor to a Friend," found immediate favor with the public.

The story is one of love and adventure, and Miss Wehlen, in the role of Mary Worthington, an heiress to her father's estate, at once becomes the centre of a swiftly-moving plot involving the estate, the abduction of the dainty little lady herself, and the unique meeting with the man of her heart who is originally responsible for the exciting adventures through which she goes.

Miss Wehlen has never been better than in 'A Favor To a Friend" which is an original story by Lieut A. Reed, directed by John Ince and personally supervised by Maxwell Karger, Director General.

The entire cast as well without exception was excellent, and included the handsome Jack Mulhall, Hugh Fay, Joseph Kilgour, Effie Conley, Jack Miller, Jr., Harry Todd and Fred H. Warren.

JOHN BARRYMORE, POPULAR PARAMOUNT STAR, HAS DRAMATIC ROLE IN NEW PHOTOPLAY, "THE TEST OF HONOR"

Story Deals With Virginian Who Prefers Prison to Exposing Criminal Act of the Woman He Loves and Who Betrays Him—See it at the Allen To-day and To-morrow

Martin Wingrave, a Virginian, loves Ruth Curtis, a young married woman who despises her husband. She encourages him, as well as George Lumley, a medical student, who is infatuated with her, and, although she finds Wingrave more attractive, Lumley is far more useful to her. Juliet Hollis, the daughter of the organist of the village church, adores Wingrave, whom she meets in the Wingrave library, where she frequently borrows books.

At a country club trap shooting contest one day Martin and Ruth go to the club house, and they are drinking tea when Curtis and Lumley appear just in time to see Martin embrace Ruth. Angered at his wife's conduct, Curtis attacks Wingrave who knocks him down. Lumley administers first aid and tells Ruth to give her husband wine. She fails to do this, the result being that her husband dies. At the inquest she testifies that Martin's advances were unwelcome to her, and that he had killed her husband while the latter was seeking to avenge his wife's honor. Lumley knows this to be false, as Curtis had suffered for years with a weak heart, but Martin refuses to incriminate the woman he loves, and, making no defence, is sent to prison for seven years.

During this period Juliet Hollis is inconsolable. Ruth has married Judge Ferris, and when Martin leaves prison he meditates revenge against her. He calls himself John Martin, and visits her. He threatens to expose her past to her second husband unless she introduces him in her set, which she consents to do. Her love for him revives, and she resents Juliet's love for him, a passion Martin returns. She demands the return of some love letters written by her to Martin, but he refuses to comply with her request. Judge Ferris' jealousy is aroused by the friendship of his wife to Martin, and he hears her tell Martin that she loves him. As he advances towards them Martin embraces Ruth. Martin explains that he was convicted for the killing of his wife's first husband and that he had forced his unwelcome attentions upon her for the second time. Ordered away from the house, Martin refuses to go. Meanwhile, Lumley, at the behest of Ruth, exchanges Martin's headache tablets for poison tablets, but he suspects the trick, and, once convinced of the truth, tells Lumley, who is now a physician of reputation, that he is risking his career for love of a woman who is unworthy of him. Juliet comes to the house in search of Wingrave and Ruth, now more than ever jealous of her, tells her that Wingrave murdered her first husband because of love for her (Ruth), but Juliet will not believe her.

Judge Ferris threatens to have Martin ejected from the house, but Lumley, who is now disillusioned, tells the truth, which is that Martin had shielded Ruth when, as a matter of fact, she had brought about the death of her former husband by refraining from giving him the stimulant which would have saved his life. What happens then can be seen at the Allen today. To tell it all would spoil the surprise in store for the patrons.

MONROE SAILSBURY IN LUMBER CAMP DRAMA

Down the shining path of the slide "Big Jim" McKenzie sped on his toboggan, shouting in joyful abandon at the comrade left behind. Suddenly his shouts died on his lips. There in his path stood Helen Halverson, daughter of the millionaire lumberman who was McKenzie employer.

The girl was paralyzed with fright. To avoid striking her McKenzie swerved his sled full into a tree.

He was picked up as if dead. It was found no bones were broken, but the concussion had injured the optic nerve. Blindness set in. Helen convinced it would be but temporary, followed the call of desire and lured Jim into marriage. Then, tiring of the game, she looked about for diversion.

What happened when "Big Jim," sightless, powerless, learned of his wife's treachery? And what of Adele, who had renounced her love in the face of McKenzie's infatuation for Helen? To learn the outcome of this gripping story of the North Woods you must see "The Blinding Trail" at he Empire Theatre Wednesday and Thursday.

JACK CANUCK IN BERLIN IS COMING

AT GRAND THEATRE OCT. 2 AND 3—SENNETT MERMAIDS THEMSELVES WITH NEW SENNETT SCREEN HILARITY.

A desire that thousands of Mack Sennett film comedy devotees have never hoped seriously to entertain is about to be realized. At the Grand Theatre on Thursday and Friday, October 2 and 3, the famous Sennett Bathing Beauties, whose charms have been hitherto silently extolled only on the silver screen are to appear in person. They will make the journey to Peterborough especially for the purpose, by special permission of the comedy producer, and appear in a series of beautiful tableaux and an act staged by them in all their gorgeous raiment and lean limbed perfection.

The mermaids made famous by Sennett bathing come to give significance and vital interest to the local premiere of the comedy king's most ambitious motion picture undertaking, two reels of satire and slap stick entitled "Jack Canuck in Berlin," with all the Sennett fun ensconced in one act and German naval bombast and egotism as the marks of their shafts.

This double attraction will set a new standard for motion picture permission of the comedy producer, large eastern cities where it will be possible in turn. The tour of the mermaids is said to be as much of a surprise to them as to the public. Hitherto this ensemble of physical radiance has been kept in the California Studio for the jealous eye of the camera alone. The producer's interest in his most ambitious comedy effort caused him to yield to importunities to add this fillip to its exhibition.

Sol L. Lesser of San Francisco, the largest individual distributor of states-rights films in the U. S., who has bought the American and Canadian rights to "Jack Canuck in Berlin," brought the innovation about by his persuasions for a brief suspension of the studio rule that has heretofore kept the girls in seclusion.

BIG COMEDY SUCCESS 'S HIS BRIDAL NIGHT

The coming of Margaret Mayo's big comedy success, "His Bridal Night," to the Grand, next Saturday, matinee and evening, October 4, will be a theatrical event of exceptional interest and will reveal one of the most successful of recent day entertainments. Produced at the Longacre Theatre in New York city where it ran for a long, and later musicalized by the introduction of numerous song numbers, contributed by Frederick V. Bowers, it has ever since been accorded unstinted praise wherever seen and has secured a firm hold on public favor. Miss Mayo, who wrote the book, was also responsible, it will be remembered for the remarkable success of "Twin Beds." The story tells of the direful misadventures which befall Joe Damorel, a millionaire bridegroom, and Lent Trevitt, the sweetheart of the bride's twin sister. Vi, the newly wed sister, quarrels with her husband at the outset of the honeymoon and Tiny, the twin, thinks it will teach the tempestuous Vi a useful lesson if she (Tiny) palms herself off as the bride. She accordingly sets off on a wedding journey with Damorel. Inasmuch as the two sisters look identically alike, this is easily accomplished. Trevitt, who is never quite sure whether he is making love to his friend's wife or her sister, follows the honeymooners to their dovecote in Tuxedo, and Vi, the bride, exasperated and repentant, rushes thither also. When they are all assembled under one roof the complications increase as the girls refuse to solve the riddle of their identity, and the fun is fast and furious. The company to be seen here is a thoroughly representative one and includes in its personnel such well known players as Robert Knight, the Crisp Twins, well known in vaudeville; Frank Cullen, a character actor of big reputation; Charles Bennett, Bertha Julian and Beatrice Lett.

INQUIRY INTO RACE BETTING

OPENED AT OTTAWA TODAY BY GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONER RUTHERFORD.

A PROTEST AGAINST COMMISS'R

DECLARED HE CANNOT APPROACH THE QUESTION WITH AN OPEN MIND.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—Commissioner Rutherford today opened the Government investigation into horse racing and race track betting. Most of today's session was taken up with statements of counsel representing Canada and the Canada Racing Association. D. A. McCarby, K.C., of Toronto, appeared for the association, and the Social Service Council was represented by W. E. Raney.

Protest Lodged.

In the course of a statement of the attitude of his clients towards racing, Mr. Raney read a letter written by the legislative committee of the Social Service Council to Sir Robert Borden, protesting against the appointment of Dr. Rutherford as commissioner on the ground that Dr. Rutherford had appeared before a special committee of the Commons in 1910 as a witness for the race track interests and had stated his belief that some systems of race track betting was necessary. In view of this action the council had stated its belief that the commissioner could not approach the question of race track betting with an open mind. Mr Raney said his clients had no objection to make against horse racing. They regarded it as any other sport. Their objection was to the carrying on of the business of betting and gaming. It should not be permitted on race tracks any more than it would be allowed in a common betting house.

For Selfish Purposes

He contended that amendment to criminal code in 1910 which legalized race track betting was procured for selfish purposes and not in the interests of horse racing or of the public. Mr. Mc arthy offered to lay before the commisioner all available facts in connection with tracks operating under the Canadian Racing Association. He presumed that the inquiry as far as Ottawa was concerned would cover merely operations of Connaught Park Jockey Club.

Certain Undesirables.

Crown Attorney J. A. Ritchie, His Honor Judge McDougal, Sheriff Wright of Hull, and Aubrey MacDonald, detective of the Ottawa police force, were called in regard to the effect of racing on the community. None of these had observed any determinate features. Detective MacDonald said there were certain undesirables who follow the crowd during a race meet, circus exhibition, or when the Prince was here; but the Ottawa police department had not had any more cases because of the operation of the Connaught Park track.

Not Suit Everybody.

With reference to Mr. Raney's remarks about his attitude in 1910, Commissioner Rutherford said he regreted that his appointment did not please all parties concerned. He expressed doubt as to whether the Government could have found a man who would suit everybody.

The inquiry adjourned to meet in Montreal on Thursday.

OSLER EXPECTS GOOD GAME WITH BELLEVILLE SATURDAY

Toronto Sport Writers Call Goyer and Mills Best Batteries in Championship Series.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—Despite Osler's one run victory over Belleville, the game next Saturday afternoon at Scarboro Beach is going to be a hard fought contest, and may be a duel between Joe Spring, Osler's brilliant right-hander, and Freddie Goyer, Belleville southpaw ace. Belleville has to win Saturday to keep in the running for the Ontario championship, while Osler will have to hold their lead to qualify to meet the winners of the Hamilton-Guelph play-off for the championship.

Although Osler beat Belleville by the odd run, Belleville has to be reckoned with, and in Goyer they have one of the most dangerous pitchers in amateur circles. The big fellow had Oslers' mitters eating out of his hand after the first innings. He has wonderful control for a port sider, and with Spring pitching at top form the fans will see two smart heavers in action. Belleville has a smart infield and Catcher Mills is the best looking catcher Toronto fans have seen in the championship series.

DARK OUTLOOK FOR PRO. HOCKEY

TORONTO PLAYERS CLAIMING TO BE FREE AGENTS HEADING FOR THE WEST.

By LOU E. MARSH.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—While things are roaring along like Ralph De Palma on Daytonia Beach in local amateur hockey circles, professional hockey in these parts is showing about as much life as a cullud pusson after a barbecue. No one seems to want to have anything to do with pro. hockey in these parts.

The Arena people are through with pro. hockey and pro. hockey players as far as maintaining a rink club is concerned. The "club" which handled the local pro. team last fall is through if Charlie Querrie knows what he is talking about. He says he has kissed the pro. game farewell.

"Never no more," says Charlie, and he puts enough pathos in "swan song" to make one believe that he didn't make enough out of last year's team to buy "dope" enough to keep "Lizzie" from freezing up.

A well-known local amateur team manager was handed the outfit on a silver platter a month ago, but when he found out that Hamilton wouldn't have a new rink and a pro. team he dropped it like something hot. "If I ever did take hold I'll tell you one thing," he remarked, "I'd fire the bums and roustabouts from the club and make it an organization which good clean amateurs might be induced to join. I'd do that if I finished last. I'd have a dependable team even if I finished last."

There's sure an indigo hue to the local pro. hockey horizon.

Players Going.

And just to make it a real navy blue, the players are deserting the ship. Some of them have already signed up to go West to the Patrick league. They won't admit it—but they have.

I bumped into Alf. Skinner last night.

"When are you going West?" I asked.

"Who said I'm going West?" he parried.

"Don't pull that stuff on me," I replied. "I know you are now, or will be under contract shortly to go out to the coast, and that Jack and Bill Adams are going to head West too, along with you."

"Let the Adams boys talk for themselves. I don't know anything about their affairs," said Alfie. "I have nothing to say about hockey just now only to make it plain that I am a free agent and can sign up where I please."

Will Go, Too.

Never mind what Skinner says. He is under contract to go West, and will go, too. Jack Adams is going with him, and Bill has decided to too. If some one does not pull the "Mason and Dixon line" stuff across the trail. If they do, and the Coast people persist in taking Eastern players west, a hockey war will be precipitated and I know who will win.

Free Agents.

Do you know that all last year's Toronto players consider themselves free agents because their contracts were not fully completed last season. It will be remembered that the local team quit two weeks before the season ended, and the players say that they did not receive the full amount their contract called for. It is on this alleged nonfulfillment of contract that the players claim that they are now free agents and ready to sign on anywhere.

The N.H.L. constitution upholds them, and two players have told me that President Calder has informed them that they are free agents.

Jack Adams was called up. He tried to hedge about it, but he was as unconvincing as Skinner. Anyway, who cares. They have probably been warned by the Coast moguls to give a first-class imitation of any oyster until told to loosen up, but what chance had they when the story leaked out in the West?

Wanderers Through.

Sammy Lichtenheim, of Montreal Wanderers, was in town the other day.

"Will you have a team in the N.H.L.?" he was asked.

"Not as long as it is run as it is now being run," was the reply. "There is no sport in it. I want nothing to do with it."

"How about the new arena?"

"They say they are going to have it, but I see no indications yet," was the reply.

If Torontos are out the N.H.L. will be left with only three teams — a manifestly unpracticable league.

CINCINNATI GETS THE OPENING GAME

REDS WIN TOSS AND GET ADVANTAGE IN BIG SERIES THE UMPIRE.

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 24.—Cincinnati won the toss and gained the first big advantage in the approaching world's series over the White Sox or Indians, qualifiers from the American league. The first two games will be staged in Redland and the big series will open on Oct. 1. The Chicago fans then will have a chance to watch three games.

Arrange for Other Games.

If it is necessary to play more games after contesting two in Cincinnati and three in Chicago, the next two will be played in Cincinnati and the next one in Chicago. If necessary to play the ninth game it will be put on in the city which wins the toss.

The first club winning five games will take the pennant.

Name Umpires for Games.

The umpires, who will judge the plays in the world series games are: American league: R. F. Nallin and William J. Evans.

National league: Charles Rigler and Emmett Quigley.

The National commission held a meeting here today to arrange the details of the world series. Louis Comiskey, son of Charles Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox, tossed the coin for the choice of the opening game. August Herrmann selected by the commission were Leslie F. Constans of Pittsburgh, who will represent the National league, and William Harridge of Chicago, who will represent the American league.

GATE RECEIPTS $6000.

Lindsay, Sept. 24.—When it is stated that there were more paid admissions at the Lindsay Fair on Saturday last than there were during the two days of the Fair last year, this gives the alert mathematician a chance to figure out the gate receipts. It is estimated that there were between 20,000 and 22,000 people in attendance. Of course, there are a large number of attendants, midway men, dining-room attendants, directors, etc., who are not charged any admission, and the only way to have a perfect check on the attendance would be by using a turnstile. A meeting of the officers of the Fair was held yesterday and it is understood that the receipts for the Fair were something like $6000, which constitues a record.

HEAVILY FINED

Lindsay, Sept. 24.—At a session of the Police Court on Monday afternoon a citizen was charged with unlawfully having, giving or keeping liquor in a place other than his private dwelling, without first having obtained a license, therefor, contrary to the provisions of the Ontario Temperance Act. The offence was committed on Saturday, Sept. 13. A fine of $212.90 was imposed. The accused claimed that the liquor was placed on his property by an enemy.

HYDRO ELECTRIC FOR LAKEFIELD

LINE WILL BE CONSTRUCTED FROM DAM NO. 5 TO LAKEFIELD.

At a meeting of the Lakefield Council and Board of Trade held last Friday it was decided to wait on Sir Adam Beck with a request that the Hydro Commission supply Lakefield with power at an early date. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., and Mr. James Thompson, M.P.P., were also at the meeting and supported the undertaking.

The deputation consisting of Reeve Moore, Councillors Porter and Charlton, E. R. Tate, Chas. Tanner, Dr. Smith and O. A. Langly, met Sir Adam Beck last Tuesday and were gratified to learn that the Hydro-electric Commission would take immediate steps in this direction. The Commission will construct a line from dam No. 5 to the village of Lakefield to supply its citizens with power within the next few months.

Lakefield citizens are to be congratulated upon the success of their deputation and the important results they will revive from it.

ALLEGED TO HAVE FORGED CHEQUES

CHARGED WITH USING VARIOUS BANKS AND SIGNATURES TO OBTAIN MONEY.

Michael Jos. Kelley appeared in Police Court this morning charged with having forged checks on various banks and with different signatures. It is alleged that the accused has signed checks under the name of Rev. John Kelly, Dr. Wright and various others, making attempts to conceal his hand writing on all these occasions. His alleged forgings date back to last May and total an amount of three or four hundred dollars. He was remanded for one week at the request of Mr. O'Brien, who appeared for the accused.

The Great War Veterans say, "The cause is worthy," and are assisting.

The Red Triangle Drive

Red Cross Workers are again in harness to assist in putting the drive across.

When the Armistice Was Signed last November, many of us thought that the need for raising more money for Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and other worthy causes had passed. This great work, however, could not cease abruptly. The need for additional Red Cross supplies soon disappeared, and you will not be asked to contribute more to that fund. But we still had several hundred thousand men over there who had to be brought home. These men looked to the Y. M. C. A. to carry on its great work on their behalf. This work has been in progress in a big way ever since, and even yet is not quite over. Then, also, the work at home has had to be strengthened in a hundred ways to meet the needs of the returned men and the changed conditions created by the war.

NEXT TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30th AND OCTOBER 1st

The citizens of Peterborough are to be given one more opportunity to contribute to the support of this great work for our soldiers and returned men. This time $7500 is asked for. Note below some of the ways in which the money you have contributed in the past has been expended, and then we know that once more you will be willing in a generous way to help the good work along.

The National Y. M. C. A. proudly points to its record when making this appeal for your aid.

THE WORK OVERSEAS

The Canadian "Y" has been serving the troops at Archangel, Russia, Vladivostok and Omsk, Siberia, and Palestine.

"Y" secretaries accompany all transports with special equipment for the entertainment of returning men.

Free distribution of drinks and eatables is made at all Canadian ports of debarkation.

"Y" secretaries accompany all troop trains right through to their destinations. Free distribution of eatables and candies is made at suitable points en route.

A "Y" secretary is placed at all dispersal centres, where free distribution of drinks and eatables is maintained.

Red Triangle Huts or Clubs are provided at all large centres of population to give sleeping and eating accommodation for returned men at moderate rates.

All local Y. M. C. A.'s throughout Canada give six months' membership privileges to any returned men applying for same.

THE WORK IN CANADA

In Canada, a great work, much of it by voluntary assistance, has been conducted. In one year in Ontario and Quebec:

1,250 volunteer ladies assisted in carrying out the Area program.
69 volunteer laymen assisted on the Military Service Committee.

Y. M. C. A. MINSTRELS.

The first practice of the Y.M.C.A. Minstrels for their brand new show in November was held last night at the Y.M.C.A. There was a big time. Almost forty of Peterborough's best young male voices combined to produce wonderful harmonies. It was a most enthusiastic gathering and there is no question but what the Y.M.C.A. Minstrels will put on a show which will be the best ever presented in Peterborough, and will compare favorably with any in Canada.

Mr. Huycke has abundant material for solo, quartete and specialty work and there are far more ambitious embryo end men than can possibly be used, but this will insure the selection of eight end men who will be real good. Every number on the program will be new, and some big surprises are in store for the waiting public in the shape of novelties introduced for the first time.

The Y. W. C. A. are co-operating, and the girls will take part in the chorus and solo work, which will give a greater and more pleasing variety to the program.

The next practice will be held at the Y.M.C.A. next Wednesday, Oct. 1st, at 7:30 sharp.

MISSION RALLY

A meeting of special interest was held last night in the Sunday School hall of the Murray Street Baptist Church when Miss Hinman, a returned missionary, addressed the members of the Women's Mission Circle. Miss Walton, president of the local circle, occupied the choir, Mrs. (Dr.) Scott assisting. A large number were present to hear the address, which was of unusual interest and all too brief for the attentive gathering. Miss Hinman, who is a speaker of fine delivery, drew impressed upon the members, the a verbal picture of conditions as they exist at the present time. She pled for enthusiastic zeal in this worthy cause, touching on the educational work, the medical work, the evangelistic work, the leper mission and also the industrial section.

Miss Florence Scott favored the audience with a solo rendered in her usual artistic manner, while Miss Emma Aldridge and Miss Walton expressed the thanks of the gathering.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY, FINANCIALLY STRONG, WILL LOCATE IN PETERBORO

The Nashua Gummed and Coated Paper Company, With Factories in the States and England to Establish a Branch in This City if Ratepayers Say the Word Ratepayers to Vote on Bylaw Oct. 24th

Still another industry has decided to locate in Peterborough, a Canadian branch of the Nashua Gummed and Coated Paper Company, strong financially, and with two factories in the United States and one in England. This company will take over the Renfrew Manufacturing Company's building, better known as the old Cordage works, and do so with every prospect of establishing, within a very short time, a flourishing business in lines of goods for which there is a large and growing demand.

Last night the City Council passed a by-law to authorize the execution of an agreement with this company for locating here, and as that agreement involves the purchase of and improvements to the property mentioned for $67,000, and leasing it to the new company for a term of years the ratepayers will be asked to vote on the by-law on October 24th.

A Prosperous Concern.

The Nashua Gummed & Coated Paper Company has been in business for a number of years. They manufacture gummed paper, coated paper, glazed paper and other lines. The demand for their lines of goods has grown rapidly, and their business has grown with that demand. They began in Nashua in a comparatively small way, and they now employ about eight hundred persons there, and have also a factory at Middletown, Ohio, and have opened a factory in England. They are at present enlarging their factory at Middletown. They ship goods in Canada now, but have to do so against a high customs tariff, and they expect to do a larger business, amounting to at least $500,000.00 a year, when they have their Canadian factory in operation and are in a position to furnish Canadian made goods. The company not only count upon the present market in Canada, but they believe the prospects in this country are very good and that the demand will grow, and they are coming here in order to be in a position to supply this growing market.

Enquiries regarding the company show their financial standing and responsibility as good, and they have a high rating.

City Purchase Property.

The proposal which the bylaw is to authorize is that the city purchase the land and buildings of the former Canadian Cordage Company, put them in good repair and rent them to the Nashua Company. The price for the property is $50,000.00 and as the roof needs repair, painting is required and other work will be needed to put the building n good condition, these repairs are estimated to cost $7,000.00, making a total of $67,000.00.

Company Lease Premises.

The company will lease the building and pay as rental seven per cent. per annum on the cost of the property and the cost of the repairs and will insure the buildings for the city and keep up the property. They will lease the plant for five years on these terms with a right to renew the lease for a further five years and with an option to purchase it during the term of the lease. The present fixed assessment of $10,000.00 will remain during the term of the lease, except for school purposes, and the company will pay full school and local improvement taxes. If the plant were to remain empty, as it is now, there would be no business assessment upon it, and, judging from past experience, the assessment of the property while unoccupied would be lowered, and by having it occupied the benefit of the school taxes on the business assessment will be received.

The rental will more than pay the interest on the money invested, and the balance, which will be about one and a half per cent. on the whole amount, will go towards paying for the property.

Five Years' Term.

The company will occupy the property for at least five years, and ratepayers may rest satisfied, judging from their previous success and the opportunities in Canada, that they will continue to occupy it and no doubt purchase it before the lease expires. Like all strong companies that have come to Peterborough they are cautious in making promises as to the employment they will give, but they will be paying a rental of about $4,000.00 a year and they are not going to do that for nothing. At the beginning they will manufacture two or three of their lines of goods and the others will no doubt be added, as they are agreeing to pay rent for premises that will give them room to do so Strong Financially.

This is a company strong financially and the prospects are good for their business developing and their factory growing here. But even suppose the most unlikely event happened that they went out of business here in a few years, after the lease has expired the city would own the property and have obtained it at a low price. Last spring the buildings, heating plant, etc., which are included in the purchase, were appraised by an appraisal company of good standing at $152,561.00. This will be obtained for $50,000.00, and during the term of the lease this sum will be reduced by the difference between the interest paid and the rental received. So that in the very unlikely event of this company not renewing the lease and not purchasing the property the city will have a choice manufacturing property at a very low cost to be occupied by some other good industry.

But Council believes this company they are now dealing with will grow and prosper ,and be another important addition to the branches of United States manufacturing companies located here and to the number of prosperous industries of Peterborough.

CONVICTS SHOT THREE ESCAPE

LONG TERM MEN MAKE DESPERATE ATTEMPT TO BREAK JAIL AT JOLIET.

THREE SCALE WALL AND FLEE

TWO CHICAGOANS WOUNDED IN ATTACK ON GUARD WHO USED HIS GUN.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—Local outbreaks at the penitentiary at Joliet late yesterday afternoon and early today, which the authorities denied to be anything in the way of a general mutiny, resulted in the wounding seriously of two convicts from Chicago, one of whom probably will die, and the escape of three others, two from Chicago and one from Peoria.

Four of the five prisoners involved were long term men and rated as among the most desperate in the state prison. One of them had escaped twice before. None of the escaped men had been apprehended up to noon today.

Yesterday afternoon, William J Gatlin, 33 years old, serving a term of from one to fourteen years on three charges of robbery in Chicago, sent up in 1917, and George Cechota, 26 years old, serving from one to twenty years for highway robbery in Chicago, sentenced in 1916, refused to go into "solitary" when ordered into confinement for a breach of discipline.

Attack Guard and Are Shot.

They attacked Guard Henry Springer with their fists. He fired four shots at them all taking effect. Each man was wounded in the stomach and the arm. Gatlin is expected to die.

Gatlin has "done time" in three penitentiaries, while Cechota holds the prison record for escaping. He made his get-away from Joliet on May 20, 1917, and again on Aug. 10, 1918. He also is said to have a bridewell record.

The convicts who escaped during the night were John Murphy, 22 years old, sent up from Chicago on April 12, 1915, for from one years to life for manslaughter; James Leo of Chicago, 29, sent up in June of this year for from one to five years for burglary, and William Johannings meyer, 34, sentenced to from one to twenty years from Peoria in May, 1918, for burglary.

Scale Wall With Ladder.

With five other convicts they were working on a night detail making repairs on the boiler house. Shortly after midnight they were taken along with other details to the convict kitchen for lunch, with Guard George Crawford in charge. In the confusion the three convicts slipped out, procured a ladder from near the boiler house, placed it against the fifteen foot wall, climbed over and escaped. They escaped notice of the guards in the towers on the wall.

Posses were sent out early to search for them, but authorities believed they caught a freight train for Chicago and now are in hiding here.

UNION GOVT. SERVED PURPOSE WELL

In an editorial headed "The Union Government," the Montreal Star says: "The Union Government served the purpose for which it was formed, war work, and on the whole served it well. The time is aprpoaching when the old party lines should be and will be re-established."

BYLAW TO EXEMPT G.W.V.A. FROM TAXES

WILL BE SUBMITTED TO RATEPAYERS ON OCTOBER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

Last night the City Council passed a by law to exempt from taxes the club house of the G. W. V. A., on Murray Street, except for school purposes and for local improvements. This by-law, under the act, will go to the people on October 24, as the Council has no power to exempt taxes on such property except by the assent of the people.

WALK OUT OF RAILWAY MEN IN ENGLAND MAY BEGIN AT MIDNIGHT TOMORROW

Executive of National Union Meet Representatives of the Government This Afternoon---Government Willing to Continue Negotiations, and Sudden Demand For Settlement Came as a Surprise.

London, Sept. 25. — Sir Eric Geddes, the Minister of Transport, and the entire executive committee of the National Union of Railwaymen conferred for two hours and a half this morning over the railway wage question, which is threatening a nation-wide railway strike. At the end of this time the conference took an adjournment until 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Before the session it was stated by the president of the union that if the conference failed to avert a strike the walkou twould begin at midnight Friday.

Nation-Wide Strike.

The who leexecutive committee of the National Union of Railwaymen will participate in a conference to be held this afternoon with representatives of the Government relative to the union's threatened nation-wide strike, according to a notification sent to Sir Eric Geddes, Minister of Transport.

Cabinet Holds Session.

The Cabinet was in session yesterday afternoon for three hours and discussed the situation. An announcement after this meeting said the Government was willing to continue negotiations with the union, it being declared that a "misunderstanding" existed. Members of the union are now working under an agreement with the Government by which the men will continue to draw their war-time wages till Dec. 31. The sudden demand for an immediate settlement, therefore, came as a surprise yesterday, and there were hints that the union's action was of political significance.

21 CANDIDATES NOW FOR LABOR

Hamilton, Sept. 25.—The extent to which labor proposes to enter the political field was told by Mr. Joe Marks of the Independent Labor party at the Trades and Labor Congress yesterday. He stated that in the coming general election in Ontario they would run twenty-one straight Labor candidates in addition to a number of other Labor representatives who would run for the United Farmers as well. Mr. Marks asked for the sympathetic support of the delegates in a Provincial tour which he will make shortly.

NOT READY FOR A BYE-ELECTION

TEMISKAMING MUST WAIT TILL PROBABLY THE END OF NOVEMBER.

Ottawa, Sept 25.—The Federal by-election in Temiskaming constituency made vacant by the death of Hon Frank Cochane cannot take place on October 27th, the date on which the vote will be taken in the seven vacant constituencies for which the writs have been issued, for the reason that there is not sufficient time between now and that date for the preparation of the lists. It is regarded as probable, however, that the writ will be issued without much delay, and that the time for voting will be towards the end of November.

CAN'T CALL OFF BIG STEEL STRIKE

THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND MEN WILL DEMAND JUSTICE, SAYS FITZPATRICK.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Sept. 25.—Investigation of the nation wide steel strike begins today. The Senate Labor committee has been called to determine if the situation can in any way be relieved by Federal action. John Fitzpatrick, chairman of the strikers' organization, has assured the committee that he would present Labor's side of the controversy, and he was summoned as the first witness.

Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the U. S. Steel Corporation, was summoned to present the other side of the controversy, but will be unable to appear until next week. He will be asked to make a detailed statement and then submit to cross-examination.

FRIEND OF ROOSEVELT DEAD

Seth Bullock, Black Hills Pioneer, Passes Away at Deadwood.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 24.—Seth Bullock, life long personal friend of the late Theodore Roosevelt, died at his home here yesterday morning after an illness of several weeks. He was a pioneer of the Black Hills and was 62 years old.

Chatham is to take over the electrical business of the Chatham Gas Company.

WIRE FLASHES

Washington, Sept. 25.—Resolution introduced in House declares House would go on record as opposing any interference by American forces at Fiume.

Rome, Sept 25.—Rumored here today that President Wilson's answer in Fiume trouble would be favorable to a plan to make that city Italian.

Ottawa, Sept 25.—Third reading was given to peace treaty in Commons late yesterday afternoon.

Indiana Harbor, Ind., Sept 25.—Officials of Inland Steel Co. sent ultimatum to striking employees today that unless they returned to work within two days plant would be closed down for six months.

Montreal, Sept 25.—First shipload of Canadian and American Royal Air Force officers to be repatriated by British Government arrived in Montreal on Megantic.

Washington, Sept 25.—British Government has decided to release immediately large quantity of package mail held in England during the war.

Paris, Sept. 25.—Italians crossed line into Dalmatia and captured town of Toquire. Belgrade despatch indicates Italians are operating in Dalmatia, hundred and fifty miles south of Fiume.

London, Sept. 25.—It is thought strike of railwaymen again averted. Government have sent notice to men they will negotiate further with them and that there has been some misunderstanding.

New York, Sept. 25.—Steel corporation officials claim men are returning to work in large numbers, while Labor leaders deny statement. Federal inquiry will begin today.

EARLY SETTLEMENT

St Catharines, Sept. 22.—As the result today of a conference between Government Fir Wage Officer E N. Compton and President Frank Healey of the Niagara District Trades Federation, an early settlement of the ship canal strike is expected. Strikers ask an eight-hour day and 44-hour week.

PERMANENCY OF UNION GOVERNMENT

The Ottawa Morning Journal, in commenting on the probable results from Tuesday's Unionist caucus says:

A caucus of the Unionist party, summoned for today, may have far-reaching political consequences. The caucus, although not so stated officially, has been called for the purpose of considering the present status and prospective future of the Unionist party. It is the result of some unrest among the rank and file as to the precise character of the party's creed, policies and platform.

Ever since last session there has been an increasing undercurrent of restlessness as to the party's political whereabouts and destination. Old line Conservatives, who saw the Government lean more and more toward a policy of lower tariffs, became fearful over the National Policy. Old line Liberals who deserted Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but saw a growing numerical superiority of Conservatives in the Ministry, began to wonder whether they were merely minority stock-holders in the new political concern. The whole position was curiously vague, and even the Prime Minister's return from Paris, which was expected to result in a new declaration of policy, failed to produce either leading or light. A caucus was called at which the question of a permanent Unionist party, superseding the old Conservative party, was raised, but, according to the testimony of no less a witness than Mr. Rowell, no very definite action was taken. A sort of general motion, it appears, was put and carried, but it pledged no one to anything in particular; and so the situation remained.

* * *

The National Liberal Convention exposed this situation's weakness. At the election of 1917 every Liberal Provincial Government, with one lone exception, went Unionist. With the conclusion of the War a number of them desired to remain Unionist. But the Unionist party, strictly speaking, was not a party at all. It had no political creed, no distinctive, clear-cut domestic policies, no definite platform of its own. The result was inevitable. The Provincial Liberal Unionists could not declare themselves permanently for a party which, in a political sense, did not exist. They could not subscribe to Unionism unless and until they knew what Unionism meant. And there being no one to tell them what Unionism (in peace) did mean, there was only one thing left for them to do. They returned to the Liberal fold.

* * *

The result, say restless Unionists, was harmful to the prospects of a successful Unionist party. For when Mr. Oliver, of British Columbia; Mr. Stewart, of Alberta; Mr. Martin, of Saskatchewan; Mr. Murray, of Nova Scotia; and Mr. Foster, of New Brunswick, returned to official Liberalism they were careful to take with them political machinery that might have some day been of value to a permanent Unionist party.

* * *

Now comes a number of byelections in a sense they constitute a miniature general election. Accordingly, a number of Unionists think it an opportune time for someone to tell the electors what Unionism is, whether it is a distinctive party, and just how and when and where it differs from the old Conservative party, and, for that matter, from the old Liberal party.

Generally speaking, the majority of Unionists, whether Liberal or Conservative, favor Unionism being made permanent. They hold that

RED TRIANGLE FUND CAMPAIGN GETS OFF TO EXCELLENT START

Two Speakers who Served Overseas Explain Present Work of Dominion Y.M.C.A.

The banquet held at the Empress Hotel last evening under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. to put their Red Triangle Club campaign under way was in every way a success. The men displayed great enthusiasm in the work before them by their remarks and by the eager attention with which they listened to the speakers of the evening.

Capt. Wilson Speaks.

The first speaker was Capt. Wilson, former side-de-camp to Colonel Burke, the head of the Y.M.C.A. in France. Capt. Wilson has returned very recently and dealt chiefly with the military work of the Red Triangle.

During the war there were over two hundred Canadian Y. M. C. A. centres in England and France alone without those in different parts of the world. After Armistice the work of the Canadian Y.M.C.A. in France practically trebled. While the war was on the soldiers were usually up in the first line trenches, where it was ipomsaible to provide amusements for them, but after the war they were gathered in large camps or being transported to various parts of the country. This afforded great opportunities for service for the "Y" and they were not slow to take advantage of them.

Besides this there was the work of disposing of the supplies, huts, etc., which work was not completed in France until about July 11.

Work on Transports.

Then on practically every transport returning with men there had been one "Y" secretary with full equipment to supply good, wholesome amusement and entertainment for men and officers during the seven or eight-day passage. Immediately the men arrived at Halifax they were met by competent "Y" secretaries, who did all in their power to help the men by giving information, fruit, provisions, etc. Then a secretary accompanied every transport train into the interior, even going as far as Vancouver, if that city happened to be the destination of the troops. They would wire ahead to their destination when they were to arrive and a Red Triangle official would be on hand to meet them and supply them with facilities for a good wash and a free lunch.

Work Continuing.

Now the work in Canada is continuing. Troops are still arriving, necessitating port and transport work as referred to above. There have been established sixteen Red Triangle Clubs in various centres for the returned men. These have been greatly appreciated, and everywhere calls have been pouring in to keep up this good work. Then there is the very important work in the hospitals. The "Y" has at the present time men in seventy military hospitals throughout Canada who are doing what they can to bring cheer and

ALLIES WISH TO AVOID FORCE AND FRATRICIDAL CONFLICT

Problem at Fiume Seems Impossible of Solution Persuasion is Useless

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Rome, Sept. 25.—Cabinet ministers do not conceal the enormous gravity of the situation and the serious difficulty, not to say impossibility, of finding a satisfactory solution to the Fiume problem. They do not want to use force against Captain D'Annunzio, wishing to avoid a fratricidal conflict, and it is said that this hesitation may be partially due to the fact that troops ordered to proceed against the poet's forces might refuse to obey orders. Persuasion, it is said here, is useless without agreeing to Capt. D'Annunzio's conditions—annexation of the port of Fiume and the hinterland to Italy proper.

Premier Nitti Strong.

The advisability of the cabinet resigning has been examined, but this idea has been abandoned since a ministerial crisis would not help to solve the problem, nor is there a man available with greater authority or more energy than Premier Nitti, who is generally considered the strongest statesman possessed by Italy.

NURSES HOLD CONVENTION

Niagara Falls, Sept. 23.—Spanish-American war nurses are holding a convention at the Clifton Hotel today, lasting until the 25th. Colonel Pringle and Mayor Stephens were the principal speakers of the afternoon. Mayor Stephens gave them an official welcome to the city.

STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE.

AS REMARKED TO editorially last Saturday, Mr Burnham on Monday moved in the House of Commons that a definite plan of government for the application of a scientific method to deal with the struggle for existence be laid before the people at the next general election. Mr. Burnham's idea is conveyed in the following excerpt from his speech accompanying the resolution:

Mr. Speaker, I will, with your permission, make a statement with regard to this resolution in order that the statement may express shortly what I refer to, and after that I will, with your permission, make a more extended comment.

1. Eliminating the weak and the vicious, 90 per cent. of the population may be considered as trying to do its duty and to perform a faithful part in the struggle for existence, 90 per cent therefore, may be considered a constant quantity.

2. Should this constant quantity be considered as a number of free units or as a united totality? The economic record from the earliest times of the different countries of the world, which is most extensive and instructive, furnishes the answer. The evolution of society shows that what began in free and rival units has developed, in theory at least, into a society composed of both free and allied units. In the early era each family is supposed to be free to do as it pleases in its own home, but later on, when it goes forth from home to earn its living, it inclines to unite with other families. At home it is still comparatively free. The tendency is towards union everywhere.

3. The invasion of the freedom of the family in its own circle is being proceeded with, however chiefly in a moral way. The argument is being put forward that society must be considered only as a whole. This involves the final stage of development. What has been known as freedom is being put aside for the interest of the majority. The rule of the majority is becoming absolute industrially and morally, but not religiously. Morally and religiously are really one. Hence it will not be long before the rule of the majority will be extended to the religious on the ground of aggregate right as against individual right. This, of course, upsets the whole theory of man's responsibility to God, which is supposed to concern the individual. The modern doctrine substitutes the ways of man for those of God. This fact is worthy of note because it shows how surely the national, if not as yet the world, aggregate has come to be considered as one. The constant quantity is becoming so well defined that it is affected only by itself, moving by means of a majority in a certain given or ascertained direction. It may be considered, therefore, as one man, that is, man and woman.

4. The struggle for existence has to do with necessaries only. Therefore, we simplify the problem we are now considering by eliminating the weak the vicious, and the element of luxuries. It is the man struggling for necessaries of life.

5. In the last analysis the man whom we have taken as our unit, to simplify matters, gains his living and that of his family from nature. When however, he said to his neighbors: "Some of you do some things, some of us will do others, and we will trade," the problem which we are now considering began.

6. The basis of this trade became nominally the unit of labor cost. Labor produced wealth, and part of the wealth was used as capital. So long as the unit of labor-cost was paramount there was little difficulty. But when men begin to trade so as to obtain, where possible, something for nothing, otherwise known as profit, the struggle, not with nature, but against each other, began, and it has continued and become intensified to the present day. It has been partially counteracted by organization, but it expresses itself very largely and terribly in what is known as sweating.

7. Until the unfair element of securing something for nothing is banished it is impossible to obtain order in the trade world.

8. When it is banished and a unit of labor-cost is ascertained and established, it will be easy to calculate the true rate or price of exchange, or trade.

9. The world really is divided into two parts economically, the producing and the consuming parts. They trade with each other. When the fair exchange price is based upon the fair exchange value as ascertained for a constant quantity by a constant unit of labor-cost, the problem of the struggle of existence so far as it applies to the trading world, will be solved. The rest depends, as they say, upon the individuals themselves. It will be no longer, as at present, a struggle to obtain order out of chaos. It will be no longer an unequal struggle. It becomes a fair fight, definitely ascertained quantities seeking definitely ascertained results. The problem ought to be as simple as one in simple equations. Why is it not solved then, if it is so easy? you ask. I answer: What can you do with people who believe in profit, who, instead of reducing their common efforts and needs to a common basis, fight them out as if they were all Great? We are fast beginning to see the first light of dawn, and then how we will laugh at ourselves when daylight shows us up.

The modern system of method of science, of course, tests theories by experience, principles by practice. We have not yet learned to do this in the business or trade world, and it is to this absolute necessity that I am presuming to direct your attention today.

We notice that in talking to this motion of Mr. Burnham's, Mr. Morphy said: "Conditions in Canada are not so bad if we let them alone..... The influenza ran its course, it petered out, and so I feel that the unrest we have noticed in the industrial life will also disappear." We cannot see the force of Mr Morphy's argument, for, in running its course, the influenza was not let alone by any means. No, it was practically "stamped out" in many infested centres by forceful application of protection laws and medical scientific skill, without which who shall say that the death-toll would not have been enormously higher than it was? And Mr. Morphy can rest assured that industrial unrest will not "disappear" until the cause for that unrest—whatever it may be—has been removed. First causes are too often neglected in this world for the well-being of mankind. Many are lying in consumptives' graves because they thought that by letting that cough alone it would disappear of its own accord. Although Mr. Burnham's motion was negatived, the principle underlying it of applying some system to maintain a due relative proportion between the cost of production and that of consumption should not be lost sight of by our legislators.

THE PHONOGRAPH.

HOW MANY OF US have quite realized the possibilities, the uses, to which the modern phonograph may be put? For instance, probably few have ever thought of employing it as a teacher. Yet that is the most recent manner in which it is being used. Not only have the authorities in charge of certain schools placed phonographs in their class rooms for the purpose of assisting in the marching and singing, but also with the avowed object of teaching advanced subjects in music. In such cases, it has become indispensable to the students who wish to take up music as their life profession, for it may be used to illustrate and lead a class studying harmony, counterpoint, the Canon and Fugue.

These subjects may have seemed a trifle dry to some students, but with the aid of the talking machine any student may approach such studies from quite a different angle, one that is of practical benefit from the start. The practical side will at once become apparent, when we remember that in using the phonograph one must do a great deal of listening, so here is the first step in training the musical faculties; for music is not to be thoroughly enjoyed unless our sense of hearing is keen. Ear training is the basis of successful study of all theoretical branches of music.

Unless the student has had long and frequent lessons from a first class teacher he has very little chance to apply his harmony lessons to his aural training. When he attends an class where a good teacher has a phonograph and a blackboard for assistants, the circumstances change and a keen interest in the subject matter taught soon becomes manifest. Records have been prepared which allow of classes being formed in any town or city and where advanced musical subjects may thus be taught. In future those who have had regrets that they have not been able to attend some great musical conservatory need sigh no more, for the village organist, providing he is a trained man, can form a class which will be of intensest interest when the new records for such studies are put on the talking machine for the first time. Not only may the local teacher use this method, but school teachers who are now qualified in music may pass the hint on to their respective school boards and cleverly agitate the fact that the phonograph as an educator has possibilities that have hitherto been undreamed of.

THE RULE OF REASON.

Wall Street's impressions and conjectures regarding the strike against the United States Steel Corporation may seem unimportant to the leaders of unionized labor. Still, it would be a serious error to treat these opinions as negligible. They are, in fact, significant.

The sum and substance of these off-hand opinions is that the Steel Corporation is not unwilling to have a "show-down" on the whole labor problem, and that the average manufacturer is so weary of industrial strife and of demands upon him which he deems excessive and unwarrarnted, that he, too, rather welcomes the proposed trial of strength between a powerful corporation and a group of labor leaders who profess to represent a large majority of the employes of that corporation.

Organized Labor for its own sake should give thought to the effect that some of the recent demands have produced in the industrial world. The public earnestly sympathizes with Labor when it protests against a real injustice, or when it strikes to obtain redress of serious grievances when it has failed to secure justice by other means. But the public has little sympathy with unreasonable demands, with what it considers "profiteering" on the part of wage-earners who, feeling that under existing conditions the supply of labor is likely to fall below the demand for it, do not scruple to take advantage of the situation.

To command public sympathy, Organized Labor, and specially its responsible leaders, must submit to the rule of reason with the rest of the community, refrain from unwarrantable exactions, and give the country a chance to readjust itself in peace to normal conditions. The country unmistakably favors an economic truce and thinks that Labor can and should grant such a truce.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

CAN'T TAKE BOTH SIDES.

(Buffalo Express.)

Former Senator Lewis says that if the League of Nations is adopted the President will at once present the case of Ireland to it council. If the President can do that, Great Britain or Germany or Japan can present the case of the Philippines to that council. They could present the case of South Carolina if South Carolina should again develop a case of antipathy to the United States. What, then, becomes of the contention that the League does not have jurisdiction over domestic questions? What is left of the argument that reservation is unnecessary, refusing to recognize jurisdiction of the League in domestic questions of the United States?

UNLIMITED RIDES, $1 A WEEK.

(Popular Mechanics Magazine.)

A remarkable experiment in flat rate street car service is being tried in the city of Racine, Wis., having gone into operation on August 18. The system is the simplest possible. For $1 the passenger buys a pass, good for one week, which gives him and other members of his family the privilege of unlimited riding. Conductors do not punch the cards, nor ask identification of the holder, and, of course, no transfers are needed. The week's cards expire at midnight on Sunday, each issue being distinguished by a different color. Obviously the company hopes to raise the average transportation expenditure of its patrons by this bold means.

A CRASH IN OCEAN RATES?

(Toronto Mail and Empire.)

Prophecies are being made in some marine circles that before many months there will be a crash in ocean freight rates. According to a recent compilation by Lloyds, there are now in commission about 2,500,000 gross tons of steamers more than before the war. That is, the loss sustained during the war has been made up, and an excess of 2,500,000 tons provided. The tonnage building is another ten million tons, and as this begins to seek cargoes, the effect on rates will be very noticeable. Already in the transatlantic trade space is becoming rather easily obtainable at times.

LAKEFIELD

(Special Correspondence.)

Lakefield, Sept. 25.—Major and Mrs. H. A. Ben Oliel and children, who returned last Wednesday after an absence of more than four years, are spending a few weeks at Point of Rocks Stoney Lake. Major and Mrs. Ben Oliel went overseas in August, 1915, and in September Major Ben Oliel (then captain) was appointed chaplain of Cliveden Canadian Red Cross Hospital at Taplin. About eight months later he was transferred to the Canadian General Hospital at Le Treport in France. He was after long service there moved to Hastings area and later transferred to No. 5 Canadian General Hospital at Kirkdale, Liverpool. He received his majority and was senior Canadian chaplain in the Liverpool area. More than 25,000 men passed through his hands. Mrs. Ben Oliel, who accompanied him, did excellent work also. They returned to Canada on the steamer Ordunia. The people of Lakefield join in welcoming them again to the village.

WEEPING ECZEMA SOON RELIEVED

A Perfect Treatment For This Distressing Complaint

WASINO, Ont.

"I had an attack of Weeping Eczema; so bad that my clothes would be wet through at times.

For four months, I suffered terribly. I could get no relief until I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and 'Soothe Salva'. The first treatment gave me relief.

Altogether, I have used three boxes of 'Soothe Salva' and two of 'Fruit-a-tives', and am entirely well"

G. W. HALL.

Both these sterling remedies are sold by dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"Fruit-a-tives" is also put up in a trial size which sells for 25c.

The form of induction followed was the new form adopted by the Provincial Synod of Ontario, which concluded its session at Ottawa on the previous week.

A large delegation from St. Mark's Church, Warsaw, were present and church was well filled with local visitors.

The prospects of the parish are now much brighter.

Dr. Archbold and family are now in residence in the rectory.

The Harvest Home service at St. John's Church will be held on Thursday, Oct 2.

On Sunday, Sept. 30, St. Mark's Church, Warsaw, will hold their annual Harvest Home service.

On Thursday, Sept. 30, a lecture will be given in St. John's Church by Nurse Fanny Northcott on her experiences in China as medical missionary. Everyone is welcome.

CROP REPORTS

The following is a summary of reports made by Agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

A large acreage of fall wheat has so far been got in. Where sown early the crop is looking well on fallows, but it is rather patchy where grown on stubble or other poorly prepared land. Middlesex reports that a number of farmers are sowing their wheat late to avoid injury from the Hessian fly.

Buckwheat, which has been grown more largely this season than usual as an alternative crop on account of the sowing of spring grains being delayed by wet weather, promises a fair yield generally, although Victoria states that some of it was got in too late to fully mature.

Late potatoes are doing better than was expected, and roots generally are at present making good growth.

Latest reports from Essex and Kent are to the effect that the weather so far has been favorable for harvesting the comparatively large acreage of tobacco, which work is now in full swing. It is estimated that the yield per acre acre will be from fair to good.

The corn crop is being cut under favorable conditions, and it is claimed that an abundance of good seed has been riponed this year. Silo filling is also progressing satisfactorily.

A number of promising clover fields are being saved for seed, according to the Middlesex representative. In fact, Ontario farmers have never before grown as much red clover and alsice for seed as they have this year.

The milk flow has not come back as freely as was hoped for by dairymen. Condenseries in Grenville are now paying $3 a cwt. for milk with 3 per cent. butter fat, and a bonus for every point above that standard.

G.W.V.A. QUESTIONAIRES

Brantford, Sept. 23.—The G.W.V.A. of Brantford today sent out questionaires to the 1,000 members, asking for particulars of employment since returning from France. The policy of the G.W.V.A. on the gratuity question was also set forth succinctly as involving increased pensions for war widows and orphans, care of disabled soldiers, and care of the returned soldier in general to the full extent of the ability of the country to pay.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

THURSDAY, SEPT. 25, 1919.

STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE.

AS REFERRED TO editorially last Saturday, Mr Burnham on Monday moved in the House of Commons that a definite plan of government for the application of a scientific method to deal with the struggle for existence be laid before the people at the next general election Mr. Burnham's idea is conveyed in the following excerpt from his speech accompanying the resolution:

Mr Speaker, I will, with your permission, make a statement with regard to this resolution in order that the statement may express shortly what I refer to, and after that I will, with your permission, make a more extended comment.

1. Eliminating the weak and the vicious, 90 per cent. of the population may be considered as trying to do its duty and to perform a faithful part in the struggle for existence, 90 per cent therefore, may be considered a constant quantity

2. Should this constant quantity be considered as a number of free units or as a united totality? The economic record from the earliest times of the different countries of the world, which is most extensive and instructive, furnishes the answer. The evolution of society shows that what began in free and rival units has developed, in theory at least, into a society composed of both free and allied units. In the early era each family is supposed to be free to do as it pleases in its own home, but later on, when it goes forth from home to earn its living, it inclines to unite with other families. At home it is still comparatively free The tendency is towards union everywhere.

3. The invasion of the freedom of the family in its own circle is being proceeded with, however chiefly in a moral way. The argument is belug put forward that society must be considered only as a whole This involves the final stage of development. What has been known as freedom is being put aside for the interest of the majority. The rule of the majority is becoming absolute industrially and morally, but not religiously. Morally and religiously are really one. Hence it will not be long before the rule of the majority will be extended to the religious on the ground of aggregate right as against individual right. This, of course, upsets the whole theory of man's responsibility to God, which is supposed to concern the individual The modern doctrine substitutes the ways of man for those of God. This fact is worthy of note because it shows how surely the national, if not as yet the world, aggregate has come to be considered as one. The constant quantity is becoming so well defined that it is affected only by itself, moving by means of a majority in a certain given or ascertained direction. It may be considered, therefore, as one man, that is, man and woman.

4. The struggle for existence has to do with necessaries only. Therefore, we simplify the problem we are now considering by eliminating the weak the vicious, and the element of luxuries. It is the man struggling for necessaries of life.

5. In the last analysis the man whom we have taken as our unit, to simplify matters, gains his living and that of his family from nature. When however, he said to his neighbors: "Some of you do some things, some of us will do others, and we will trade," the prbolem which we are now considering began.

6. The basis of this trade became nominally the unit of labor cost. Labor produded wealth, and part of the wealth was used as capital. So long as the unit of labor-cost was paramount there was little difficulty. But when men begin to trade so as to obtain, where possible, something for nothing, otherwise known as profit, the struggle, not with nature, but against each other, began, and it has continued and become intensified to the present day. It has been partially counteracted by organization, but it expresses itself very largely and terribly in what is known as sweating.

7. Until the unfair element of securing something for nothing is banished it is impossible to obtain order in the trade world.

8. When it is banished and a unit of labor-cost is ascertained and established, it will be easy to calculate the true rate or price of exchange, or trade.

9. The world really is divided into two parts economically, the producing and the consuming parts. They trade with each other. When the fair exchange price is based upon the fair exchange value as ascertained for a constant quantity by a constant unit of labor-cost, the problem of the struggle of existence so far as it applies to the trading world, will be solved. The rest depends, as they say, upon the individuals themselves. It will be no longer, as at present, a struggle to obtain order out of chaos. It will be no longer an unequal struggle. It becomes a fair fight, definitely ascertained quantities seeking definitely ascertained results. The problem ought to be as simple as one in simple equations. Why is it not solved then, if it is so easy? you ask I answer: What can you do with people who believe in profit, who instead of reducing their common efforts and needs to a common basis, fight them out as if they were all different? We are fast beginning to see the first light of dawn, and then bow we will laugh at ourselves when daylight shows us up

The modern system of method of science, of course, tests theories by experience, principles by practice. We have not yet learned to do this in the business or trade world, and it is to this absolute necessity that I am presuming to direct your attention today.

We notice that in talking to this motion of Mr. Burnham's, Mr. Morphy said: "Conditions in Canada are not so bad if we let them alone..... The influenza ran its course, it petered out, and so I feel that the unrest we have noticed in the industrial life will also disappear." We cannot see the force of Mr. Morphy's argument, for, in running its course, the influenza was not let alone by any means. No, it was practically "stamped out" in many infested centres by forceful application of protection laws and medical scientific skill, without which who shall say that the death-toll would not have been enormously higher than it was? And Mr. Morphy can rest assured that industrial unrest will not "disappear" until the cause for that unrest—whatever it may be—has been removed. First causes are too often neglected in this world for the well-being of mankind. Many are lying in consumptives' graves because they thought that by letting that cough alone it would disappear of its own accord. Although Mr. Burnham's motion was negatived, the principle underlying it of applying some system to maintain a due relative proportion between the cost of production and that of consumption should not be lost sight of by our legislators.

THE PHONOGRAPH.

HOW MANY OF US have quite realized the possibilities, the uses, to which the modern phonograph may be put? For instance, probably few have ever thought of employing it as a teacher. Yet that is the most recent manner in which it is being used. Not only have the authorities in charge of certain schools placed phonographs in their class rooms for the purpose of assisting in the marching and singing, but also with the avowed object of teaching advanced subjects in music. In such cases, it has become indispensable to the students who wish to take up music as their life profession, for it may be used to illustrate and lead a class studying harmony, counterpoint, the Canon and Fugue.

These subjects may have seemed a trifle dry to some students, but with the aid of the talking machine any student may approach such studies from quite a different angle, one that is of practical benefit from the start. The practical side will at once become apparent, when we remember that in using the phonograph one must do a great deal of listening, so here is the first step in training the musical faculties; for music is not to be thoroughly enjoyed unless our sense of hearing is keen. Ear training is the basis of successful study of all theoretical branches of music.

Unless the student has had long and frequent lessons from a first-class teacher he has very little chance to apply his harmony lessons to his aural training. When he attends an lass where a good teacher has a phonograph and a blackboard for assistants, the circumstances change and a keen interest in the subject matter taught soon becomes manifest. Records have been prepared which allow of classes being formed in any town or city and where advanced musical subjects may thus be taught In future those who have had regrets that they have not been able to attend some great musical conservatory need sigh no more, for the village organist, providing he is a trained man, can form a class which will be of intensest interest when the new records for such studies are put on the talking machine for the first time Not only may the local teacher use this method, but school teachers who are now qualified in music may pass the hint on to their respective school boards and cleverly agitate the fact that the phonograph as an educator has possibilities that have hitherto been undreamed of.

THE RULE OF REASON.

Wall Street's impressions and conjectures regarding the strike against the United States Steel Corporation may seem unimportant to the leaders of unionized labor. Still, it would be a serious error to treat these opinions as negligible. They are, in fact, significant

The sum and substance of these off-hand opinions is that the Steel Corporation is not unwilling to have a "show-down" on the whole labor problem, and that the average manufacturer is so weary of industrial strife and of demands upon him which he deems excessive and unwarrarnted, that he, too, rather welcomes the proposed trial of strength between a powerful corporation and a group of labor leaders who profess to represent a large majority of the employes of that corporation.

Organized Labor for its own sake should give thought to the effect that some of the recent demands have produced in the industrial world. The public earnestly sympathizes with Labor when it protests against a real injustice or when it strikes to obtain redress of serious grievances when it has failed to secure justice by other means. But the public has little sympathy with unreasonable demands, with what it considers "profiteering" on the part of wage-earners who, feeling that under existing conditions the supply of labor is likely to fall below the demand for it, do not scruple to take advantage of the situation.

To command public sympathy, Organized Labor, and especially its responsible leaders, must submit to the rule of reason with the rest of the community, refrain from unwarrantable exactions, and give the country a chance to readjust itself in peace to normal conditions The country unmistakably favors an economic truce and thinks that Labor can and should grant such a truce.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

CAN'T TAKE BOTH SIDES.

(Buffalo Express.)

Former Senator Lewis says that if the League of Nations is adopted the President will at once present the case of Ireland to it council. If the President can do that, Great Britain or Germany or Japan can present the case of the Philippines to that council. They could present the case of South Carolina if South Carolina should again develop a case of antipathy to the United States. What, then, becomes of the contention that the League does not have jurisdiction over domestic questions? What is left of the argument that reservation is unnecessary, refusing to recognize jurisdiction of the League in domestic questions of the United States?

UNLIMITED RIDES, $1 A WEEK.

(Popular Mechanics Magazine.)

A remarkable experiment in flat rate street car service is being tried in the city of Racine, Wis., having gone into operation on August 18. The system is the simplest possible. For $1 the passenger buys a pass, good for one week, which gives him and other members of his family the privilege of unlimited riding. Conductors do not punch the cards, nor ask identification of the holder, and, of course, no transfers are needed. The week's cards expire at midnight on Sunday, each issue being distinguished by a different color. Obviously the company hopes to raise the average transportation expenditure of its patrons by this bold means.

A CRASH IN OCEAN RATES?

(Toronto Mail and Empire.)

Prophecies are being made in some marine circles that before many months there will be a crash in ocean freight rates. According to a recent compilation by Lloyds, there are now in commission about 2,500,000 gross tons of steamers more than before the war. That is, the loss sustained during the war has been made up, and an excess of 2,500,000 tons provided. The tonnage building is another ten million tons, and as this begins to seek cargoes, the effect on rates will be very noticeable. Already in the transatlantic trade space is becoming rather easily obtainable at times.

CROP REPORTS

The following is a summary of reports made by Agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

A large acreage of fall wheat has so far been got in. Where sown early the crop is looking well on fallows, but it is rather patchy where grown on stubble or other poorly prepared land. Middlesex reports that a number of farmers are sowing their wheat late to avoid injury from the Hessian fly.

Buckwheat, which has been grown more largely this season than usual is an alternative crop on account of the sowing of spring grains being delayed by wet weather, promises a fair yield generally, although Victoria states that some of it was got in too late to fully mature.

Late potatoes are doing better than was expected, and roots generally are at present making good growth.

Latest reports from Essex and Kent are to the effect that the weather so far has been favorable for harvesting the comparatively large acreage of tobacco, which work is now in full swing. It is estimated that the yield per acre acre will be from fair to good.

The corn crop is being cut under favorable conditions, and it is claimed that an abundance of good seed has been ripened this year. Silo filling is also progressing satisfactorily.

A number of promising clover fields are being saved for seed, according to the Middlesex representative. In fact, Ontario farmers have never before grown as much red clover and alsice for seed as they have this year.

The milk flow has not come back as freely as was hoped for by dairymen Condenseries in Grenville are now paying $3 a cwt. for milk with 3 per cent. butter fat, and a bonus for every point above that standard.

G.W.V.A. QUESTIONAIRES

Brantford, Sept. 23.—The G.W.V.A. of Brantford today sent out questionaires to the 1,000 members, asking for particulars of employment since returning from France. The policy of the G.W.V.A. on the gratuity question was also set forth succinctly as involving increased pensions for war widows and orphans, care of disabled soldiers, and care of the returned soldier in general to the full extent of the ability of the country to pay.

Happy Mothers

Many mothers who in order to keep the home neat and attractive, the children well fed and dressed, continually overdo.

The experience of motherhood alone causes a severe strain upon the system, from which many women recover slowly, and serious feminine disorders may develop unless great care is taken to prevent them.

To such women Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is invaluable. For many years this root and herb medicine has been recognized as the standard remedy for woman's ills, restoring them to a normal, healthy condition.

Mrs. Walsh's Case

Avonport, N. S.—"I have obtained great benefit by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had five children and have taken the Vegetable Compound before each of them was born, except the first one, and if I was pregnant again I would take it. I was always troubled with a bearing down feeling when on my feet but since taking Vegetable Compound I feel a lot better. I hope you will publish this letter if it will help some other suffering women."

A Word to Childless Women

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in many cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF THE PITCH-PIPE?

It is not so many years since the leader or precentor in Scottish (and may be eastern Canadian) kirks, made a practice of giving out the "doh," or starting note from a pitch-pipe or pitchfork. In the early days of the church choir, the pitch-pipe was made of wood with a long, movable, graduated stopper, blown by the mouth and approximately adjustable to any note in the scale. In later years a small metal tube with a brass rod enclosed, and more commonly used and could be adjusted to sound in semi-tones; but owing to its unreliability in securing exact pitch it has been discarded in favor of the more dependable pitch fork in the scale of C commonly used by piano tuners. An interesting item on the subject of the old fashioned precentor and his pitch-pipe is quoted as follows, from Ditchfield's book, "The Parish Clerk." "In church here in olden times, when the time for singing the metrical psalm arrived, the parish clerk gave out the number, using the time honored formula, 'Let us sing to the glory of God, the 119th Psalm.' Then pulling out the pitch-pipe from the capacious pocket of his coat he would march pompously down church to the west gallery, blow his pipe and give the singers their notes. The choir would hang on to the note he sounded until he had returned to his official place in the three decker seat below the pulpit, when he would start the singers vigorously to their psalms."

THE LIGHT IS DAWNING

Granted that the child has a musically receptive mind—when you take into consideration the imbecilic school methods of cramming, stuffing, packing the child brain at such a rate that it becomes a case of "in at one ear and out at the other" when you realize that the child is away from home usually from 9 to 4, or earlier until nearly 4 years, and often has "home work" or more school stuffing to try and absorb. How can we ask of him more than an hour (?) piano study and practice? Granted that he is endowed by nature with a fine ear for music, all the more reason for not spending him for giving him time to play, develop his muscles, breath capacity, etc. Thank God, in many schools the light is dawning, but far too much study is yet imposed on the child brain. Yes, you can't put a young head on adult shoulders, evidently—nor an old head on young shoulders without causing damage that is often irreparable.

CONSTANT PRACTICE THE PRICE OF SUCCESS

Occasionally, singers may be found who are naturally gifted with a well-placed voice, the kind of organ that the famous diva Patti designated as "the gift of God," and with it good breathing powers, fair musical knowledge and temperament. They are indeed fortunate. I said fortunate, yes but this good fortune is not the only thing required for success. Success can only come from hard work and careful study, in addition to such gifts. Many a student has been ruined by careless study, by listless inattention. A naturally talented singer may be spasmodic attempts at study, sing very acceptably for a time, but he (or she) will never attain the highest that he is capable of, nor will he always have his vocal resources at command, unless he has acquired the mastery which accrues to vocal development, and breathing which has been perfected by steady practice. Constant practice is the price of success especially where the voice is concerned; and Music of all the arts, is the hardest taskmistress, and one who must be assiduously wooed.

EVERY CHILD IS A MUSICIAN

Music is natural to the child. Every child is a musician, if it be musical to express one's self in terms only of sounds. His cry has a musical value; it is the expression of supreme emotion in the terms of sound, and what else is music? Only later does he learn to express himself by gesture, movement, line, color; the pictorial sense comes very late. At first, he denotes his contentment by the simple straight melodic line in his coo of contentment, as the cat purrs her content in a monotone.

Emotions of surprise, anger, joy, fear, desire, dislike, produce on the child as they do in the adult musician a variation from the melodic line; and the greater the excitement the higher the curve, until it becomes an angle—a shriek. Later and by degrees, this expression confines itself into smaller and smaller spaces. But that child will always have a distorted idea of music whose teacher does not point out to him from the first the analogy between the simplicity or complexity of the melodic line and the emotion to be expressed.

SPECIALIZE

Do not listen to praise of the vulgar and ignorant. Be your severest critic, and seek to come as near as possible to your ideal. Pursue this ideal even when it is in contract with the common taste. Set for yourself some colossal task. Even if you do not succeed in attaining it, the effort alone will benefit and improve your art.

Do not forrget that great mastery of any subject is obtainable only at the price of long and persistent study.

Specialize, if possible, in one thing. The world does not give credit for too many accomplishments.

When you have accomplished something in the world and you are anxious to get recognition die as soon as possible.

MUSICAL CRUMBS

The more you put into music, the more you get out of it.

All musical composers were not poor. Verdi married a wealthy man's daughter. Then for his great opera "Aida" he was paid $20,000 with the offer of an additional offer of $10,000 if he would go to Cairo to supervise its first performances.

As far back as 1872 Rubinstein earned $40,000 on his American tour as a pianist. Later on he was offered $125,000 to give a series of 50 concerts in America. This he declined.

Keep the piano closed when sweeping the room. It should be covered with a sheet when sweeping, cleaning or airing the room. Also the piano should be opened for a spell each day, even when not in use, to prevent discoloration of the keys.

Players of brass instruments should fill the instrument with warm water once a week. Let the water stand for a quarter of an hour, empty it and blow a small piece of sponge through the tubing. Repeat this operation several times pressing the valves down alternately. Cold water should then be forced through the entire instrument, valve slides included.

Says Leopold Godwsky: "To train a child on a piano, the tone of which is become dull and dead, and is always sliding out of tune, is a serious error. Instead of using a make shift instrument because the pupil is a beginner, let me say there is no other time in the pupil's career when the best instrument, instead of the poorest, is so vital."

LEFT AN ESTATE OF $43,759

Mrs. Mariana Robinson, a widow, who died in Toronto on July 11, by her will filed yesterday in the Surrogate Court disposed of her estate valued at $43,759 by ordering that it be divided in equal shares among her two daughters, five sons, and Lois Isabel Gertrude Kelsey, a granddaughter.

FIRM HAS LONG HISTORY.

The Story of the Home of the Sheffield Blade.

Sheffield's first claim to fame as an English city of note is, of course, its manufactories. But it is interesting to recall that its castle was for twelve years the prison of Mary, Queen of Scots, and that before that Cardinal Wolsey was "entertained" here after he had fallen into disfavor with his king. Nothing remains of the castle to-day but the ruined walls of the manor house. A writer in the Christian Science Monitor tells of the present-day Sheffield.

Those who best know Sheffield, the home of the "Sheffield blade," in the West Riding of Yorkshire, are constantly forced to the admission, whenever they return to the town, that Sheffield is not as bad as it looks. There is, of course, no escaping the fact that Sheffield, however it may be approached, is "of a terrible aspect." Leeds has its ever-hovering cloud of smoke, Manchester, too, in this respect, is no whit behind; but Sheffield, in the density of its wonderful envelope, as seen from the train, seems to outstrip all competitors. Chimneys there are, great forests of them, on all hands, whilst house and factory, church and warehouse, crowd over the hills and dales right up to the skyline. All this only renders all the more wonderful the fact that, once in this great town of cutlery, known the world over, the forbidding envelope seems to disappear, whilst few towns more quickly capture even the chance visitor with the glamor of its great industry or the romance of its great trade.

For the "man of imagination," as he stops to look at the shining polished products in the Sheffield shop windows, inevitably recalls the fact that the town was famous for such things as these more than 1,000 years ago, when the Saxon cutler wrought his rude blade in his wattle hut at the foot of the same great moorland which, to-day as then, stretches away to the west.

"A Sheffield thwytel bare he in his hose," wrote Chaucer, in the fourteenth century, describing the feller of the Reeve's tale, and the term "whittle" is still familiar to Sheffield cutlers. In Chaucer's day, the straight iron blade set in a wooden handle was held in high esteem, if it were, indeed, "right Sheffield." For was there not a certain well-known goldsmith of York who made a special point in his will as to the disposal of his "angelic thweityll?" And he was by no means unique. Then by Elizabeth's day a very much larger world had heard of Sheffield wares. They figured everywhere in the literature of the day and in common speech, and always in terms of high approval. "First, then, be the choice of your penknife; a right Sheffield knife is best; a good razor is next, being not too thick nor too thin grounded. Many other knives there are indifferent good, but these two first named hold commonly best in proof." Thus confidently affirms a sixteenth century authority.

It was not that they had a superfine finish. Other goods from other markets were, no doubt, much more to look at, but the reputation for serviceability of the Sheffield blade was thus all the more fairly won. The knives of the Sheffield craftsman, as set forth by the Act of Incorporation, in 1629, were "knives of the best edge." We may, declares one writer, understand the proud modesty with which the Earl of Shrewsbury, who at that time practically owned the town, sending a case of "Hallamshire whittles" to Lord Burghley, in 1575, referred to them as "such things as my poor country affordeth with fame throughout the realme."

Sheffield, moreover, by this time, had its Cutlers Company, and the London cutlers, were beginning to complain bitterly of the "English foreigners" who were caught "hawking in the street and highways with deceivable wares." The "deceivable wares," however, steadily had the best of it. Even in the sixteenth century, Sheffield knives were finding their way to distant markets, whilst the Act of Incorporation states definitely that the Sheffield cutlers supplied with their goods not only "most parts of this kingdom," but also "othar foreign countries."

PERMANENCY OF UNIONISM

a new political party, holding the balance between extreme radicalism on the one hand and extreme Toryism on the other, a party retaining the best traditions of the two old historic organizations and grafting on to its platform new ideas called for by the needs of the times, is challenged by the era of reconstruction ahead. In their opinion the old name Conservative, despite its historic associations and splendid past, is out of harmony with the spirit of the times and places a hobble skirt upon prospects of success; and they would call the new organization the Unionist party.

But they insist that the matter must be dealt with now. They insist that a platform be launched so that those who feel they cannot stand upon it may go where they belong. They insist, also, upon a political organization, something without which, they hold, no party, no matter how altruistic its aims or how high its ideals, can become a living force.

* * *

At this caucus all of this is to be threshed out. From a sick bed the Prime Minister is understood to have sent out a creed for the new party and this, it is said, is to be laid before the caucus. What this creed, or statement of policy contains, no one outside a few of the Premier's political intimates knows, but, if it proves satisfactory to the caucus, it will likely be shortly given to the country and used as the Government's fighting ground in the byelection campaign.

There are many and strange rumors about the future of some of the Liberal-Unionist members. It is said of Mr. Rowell, for example, that he will soon retire from the Government and await a favorable opportunity of returning to his old party, the favorable opportunity undoubtedly in mind being Mr. Mackenzie King in search of Cabinet material. Some, of course say that in his recent speech Mr. Rowell burned all his bridges behind him and is now definitely cut off from the Liberals, but cynical observers point out that in politics people who burn bridges behind them have an astonishing way of getting back where they belonged by improvised political pontoons.

Then there is Mr. Maclean. Mr. Maclean undoubtedly contemplated retiring from the Government at the end of last session. For some reason not quite clear he took a trip to England instead; but it appears to be pretty certain that he is going as soon as the present 31-day session is over. The resignation of Mr. Maclean would leave the Government without Cabinet representation in the entire Maritime Provinces and with but two ministers for the four million people who live east of the Ottawa River.

* * *

Shall the new men who must therefore be taken in be Liberals or Conservatives, or what? This with a half score of equally interesting questions, may be definitely defined by long odds it is the most momentous caucus that Ottawa has seen in many political moons. For it may see the birth of a new party and the definite passing of an old.

SEEKING OIL IN FAR NORTHWEST

IMPERIAL OIL CO. MAY EXPLOIT TERRITORY ON THE MACKENZIE RIVER.

New York, Sept. 25.—Donald Cadzow, Arctic explorer, has just returned from a 4,500-mile trip through the Far North, where he has been collecting specimens for the Museum of the American Indian, Hoye Foundation, New York. Mr. Cadzow, whose home is in Summit, N.J., left the United States last April. He outfitted his expedition in Edmonton, Alberta.

Mr. Cadzow previously spent five years in the Arctic, and speaks the languages of the Eskimo and of several Indian tribes. Through part of his journey he had Indian guides, but for the major portion he traveled alone.

He continued with his expedition across Great Slave Lake and entered the mouth of the Mackenzie River. At that time he was accompanied by a member of the North-west Mounted Police. At the Mackenzie River they met two Eskimos who had killed two Jesuit priests but who had been freed by the Canadian courts. The Eskimos were on their way home to Coronation Gulf, in the Arctic.

At another point in the journey Mr. Cadzow met two geologists sent by the Imperial Oil Company of Canada. There was every indication, they said, that in the regions near the Hay River there were the greatest oil fields yet discovered in the world. At a point sixty miles from Fort Norman, on the Mackenzie River, oil was oozing out of the ground. In adjacent territory Mr. Cadzow saw miles of pure tar sands. Lignite in the oil and ear deposits had been burning for many years.

OSLER SLUGGERS FEAR FRED GOYER

TORONTO CHAMPIONS HAVE GREAT RESPECT FOR THE EASERN LEFT- HANDER

Toronto, Sept. 25.—Fred Goyer and Joe Spring had a pitching duel last Saturday at Belleville, when the Oslers defeated the G. T. R. team of that city. These two will oppose each other again next Saturday, when the Eastern champions come here to meet Oslers at Scarboro Beach.

Goyer's work in the Eastern circuit earned him the name of pitching ace, and when he defeated such teams as Oshawa, Port Hope, Peterboro,' Lindsay and Cobourg he well deserved the title. Goyer held Oslers to six hits and struck out ten.

The return game will be called at 3 p. m., with Buscombe, of Toronto, and Kay, of Peterboro', as umpires.

FULL SETTLEMENT

Brantford, Sept. 24.—It was announced here today that the Brantford Motor Trucks and the Russel Motor Company of Toronto, both of which firms had contracts for the manufacture of shells for the United States Government, would get full settlement this week. The new factory in Brantford will be available for other uses. Many requests have been made for the same, once settlement is made.

FOUND ILLICIT STILL

St. Catharines, Sept. 23.—George Pariselli, another Italian on whose premises on Thorold Road an illicit still was found last week, was up for trial today, but the case was adjourned to allow the raisin mash found in three big barrels to be properly analyzed. There was nearly 150 gallons of this mash. No alcohol was found. Inspector King estimated Pariselli had about $2,000 worth of whiskey in the making.

Raoul Kohle and Logornie Turgeon, French-Canadian trackmen, each aged eighteen, who had just come yesterday morning to Lyn, Ont., to work in that district of the Grand Trunk, were instantly killed in the afternoon.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

The Trips of Columbus and the R-34 Contrasted.

They had to bribe men in the earnest and timorous days of Columbus to ship for the first Atlantic trip. Sailing towards the edge of a perfectly flat earth had no particular charms, even for criminals and "broken men" who were offered indemnity if they would go. Life imprisonment, in safety, seemed better than high adventure terminated at any moment by a sudden, cataclysmic death.

That was 427 years ago. Now there is no need to call for criminals to man the first Atlantic trips in the air. They had to turn men away from the crew of the R-34, on the first voyage by lighter-than-air machine, and even then one stowaway got himself aboard and made the trip. The idea was to keep the tremendous dirigible as light as possible. And so, with all this eagerness for flying, the R-34's crew was smaller than the crew of the Santa Maria, which consisted of 52 ignorant and fearful men, who had no idea just why they went, or where. On the three ships together, the Encyclopedia Britannica says, there were 88 men, 52 on the sailing ship Santa Maria, which Columbus commanded himself, and 18 apiece on the caravels Pinta and Nina.

It took that small, bobbing Spanish fleet just seventy days to make its trip, and the R-34 took only four and a half; and one might suppose that the longer would have been more tedious, and the shorter, flying one, more miraculous and joyful. But, if the diaries of two individuals can be taken as at all representative, there was no wonder in the flight of the dirigible to compare with that which compassed about on every side the Sana Maria, the Pinta and the Nina. Columbus wrote the one diary, abstracted by Las Casas, and Lieut. J. C. Shotter, the engineer officer of the R-34 kept the other. And the impression gleaned from the latter one is that transatlantic crossings in the air will be too utterly boring to be endured unless some unusual and diverting form of recreation be thought up for blase travellers. Even the ocean itself can hardly be seen, says he, and it's a weary life above the fog and clouds. There was a wonderful sunrise one morning, though with cloud reflections of a surprising kind. "This would at least be a little distraction from the cloudy monotony for prospective passengers on transatlantic voyages," says he, with a gleam of hope.

It was different, and very wonderful, at least for Columbus himself, who had an eye out for the roundness of the earth, from August 3 to October 12, in 1492. Even the recurrent disappointments about land, even those mutineering sailors (for whom the wonder was so great as to amount to fear) could not dispel the rare magnificence of the nights and days or the almost uncanny strangeness of the things which happened. The passengers on the R-34, the trouble was, knew that the earth is round. It was not for them a theory to be proved.

In the first place there was the compass. It acted peculiarly—more peculiarly than any one had supposed it would on the simple western way to Asia. It was on September 13 that the "westerly variation of the magnetic needle" was noticed, and from then on even the stupidity of malcontents could not dull the radiance of that trip. Every day some odd and splendid thing occurred. A meteor fell "on September 15 only four or five leagues away. Then there were the vast plains of seaweed known as the Sargossa Sea. And the weather was sweet and balmy, like, as Columbus said, "an Andalusian April," with only the song of the nightingale not there to make it perfect.

On the 18th there were birds and a low ridge of cloud. But the real signs of land did not come until October 11, when the Pinta picked up a cane, a pole and a stick which seemed to be wrought with iron, a board and a branch covered over with berries. "And with these signs all of them breathed and were glad."

There was a demonstration of thankfulness and joy when once they got to land which only men of Southern Europe could have staged. They wept and knelt and prayed and planted banners for the Catholic majesties of Castile and of Leon, and for themselves. The R-34 came from Northern Europe and there were no tears nor kneelings, so far as has been told. Nor were any flags planted. However, there was a reception, done in Anglo-Saxon way, to relieve the officers and crew of all the boredom which attends this flying above the fog.

How odd that men were so afraid in those timorous days to take a trip of so much wonder; so eager now to fly tediously above the clouds. Fear and wonder must be very much akin. One's only regret is that the stowaway, who seems to have lost the fear and kept the wonder, was in no circumstances to keep a diary of his own!

Thimble Lore.

Though the thimble is claimed to be a Dutch invention, somebody who knows says that they had them all the way back in the days when Herculaneum was. Sailors formerly wore a like device on their thumbs, and they called them thumb-bells or simply thimbles. Hence the origin of the present word.

You'd never think, would you, that it takes twenty men plus a great deal of expensive machinery to make one little thimble, would you? When John Softing introduced them from Holland into England in 1695, he virtually introduced a new industry besides.

Alcohol From Waste.

A cellulose factory at Krogstad, Norway, has doubled its capital stock with a view to enlarging its capacity and introducing a process for making alcohol from sulphuric waste.

Education the Only Read.

Education alone can conduct us to that enjoyment which is at once best in quality and infinite in quantity.—Horace Mann.

IMPROVES APPETITE.

A Study of Weather and Business Has Many Surprises.

Watch what you eat the next time it rains or snows. Perhaps you think the weather takes away your appetite. It doesn't. It makes you eat more. The American Magazine explains what weather does to the restaurant business. The writer says:—

"A study of the weather and business has its surprises. For instance, restaurant men know that appetites are not the same on a dark, gloomy day as on a day that is bright and cheerful. Natural enough! The surprising fact is that they eat most on the day that is dark and dismal.

"'On a cloudy day,' an old restaurant man tells me, 'people just sit and eat. There is nothing else to do. On a nice day they eat less and hasten out into the open. But the less they eat the more particular they are about the quality.'

"Not so long ago a young woman opened a good little restaurant near the Department of Agriculture, in Washington. Most of her customers are employes of that department. She does a big business every day, but the rush is greatest when the day is the stormiest. On a fine day the men from near-by buildings walk to restaurants farther away, just for the exercise.

"No one knows just how much business is affected by the subtle influence of weather on human temperament. Dentists find that patients are inclined to be slow to make appointments and quick to break them on cloudy days. A cloudy day is depressing to many persons, and they lack the nerve to face the ordeal of having their teeth cobbled. The same thing that hurts the dentists' trade helps the regular pill doctors. A lot of people whose spirits are dampened by the weather think that if they go to a doctor and purchase an expensive prescription they will feel a great deal better."

Mam'selle Marie's Ant-Eggs.

All manner of queer trades flourish in Paris. One man is an instructor of owls, another of canaries. If she has a parrot that is to be tutored, she may at once obtain the services of an instructor for it. Some of these teachers take birds home to board and instruct, but if the owner prefers, such a teacher will come to the house, bringing with him a well trained singer or talker, as the case may be, to be put in the cage with the pupil.

Other Parisians devote themselves to the raising of bird food. At one time the inhabitants of a certain quarter were attacked by an inexplicable irritation of the skin. All up and down one street people were scratching themselves from morning to night, and this lasted till the dwellers in that quarter looked almost like a colony of lepers. Finally the authorities looked into the matter and discovered that the doings of a certain Mam'selle Marie were the cause of the difficulty.

She was a breeder of ants, or, more strictly speaking, a raiser of ants' eggs for the fattening of young pheasants. When the police visited her establishment they encountered a woman 50 years old, of a most forbidding aspect. Her face and hands were as completely tanned as if they had undergone dressing by a skilful currier. The work had been done by the bites of the ants, against the attacks of which she had protected the rest of her person by wearing a close suit of leather. Thus protected, she kept in perfect security, surrounded by sacks full of her lively merchandise.

The visit of the police seemed to her an outrage, but, say what she would, Mam'selle Marie was compelled to transport her boarding establishment out of the city. It appeared that she had correspondents in many parts of France and received daily consignments. She was proud of her business or profession, as she called it, and found a ready market for all the eggs she could furnish.

The Webs of Spiders.

"As fine as a spider's web" is rather a misleading comparison, as all spiders' webs are not alike; nor are all the threads of which they are made. These may be dry or sticky, fine and regular, or coarse and rough, according to the will of the spider, and the use he wishes to make of it.

One kind of web is that seen on the grass on dewy mornings. This is merely a level floor on which the spider runs and catches his prey. The thread is not sticky, and the web may last, if undisturbed, a whole season. Attached to it is a tube of web, in which the spider hides.

Another web is in large meshes, but of indefinite shape. Insects get entangled in the mesh, but are not held by any glutinous nature in the thread.

Then there are some webs, in which the spider runs about to catch the insects which get entangled. In addition, there is the familiar geometrical pattern. In making these, the insect first places the radiating lines in position. On these are woven the circles of sticky thread, which, however, never reach right to the centre. These are the webs which catch insects by their stickiness.

There are, in addition, many varieties of spiders which build no web at all, but catch their prey by running after it.—Tit-Bits.

Toluol.

To give an approximate idea of the scope of the industry, one need only compare the small output of pure toluol in 1912 and 1913, for which years it was approximately 500,000 gallons, with the estimated output for the year just past (1918); during which period it is hoped that the output will have exceeded 20,000,000 gallons. Practically all of this increase has been possible because of the recovery of toluol from coke oven gas and city supplies.

Mystery of Coal Beds.

Whence did we get our greatest national treasure? No one can say with certainty, says Tit-Bits. The origin of the coal deposits still baffles science. Some men, after years of investigation, say that bitumen dowed out of the earth into lake bottoms and estuaries, and there, in the course of ages, was gradually changed into coal.

Others believe it to be of animal origin, like the great guano and nitrate beds. But a majority of scientists believe that coal resulted from a great accumulation of vegetable matter. At one end of the various kinds of coal fuels we have peat and lignites, and in these the vegetable remains are clearly visible. But at the other end is anthracite, in which no trace of vegetable structure can be seen.

In all the main types of coal there is some evidence of vegetable origin, excepting anthracite. But one great problem that cannot be solved is, How did this vast accumulation of vegetable matter take place? It seems incredible that sufficient could be gathered together to form the thick seams of coal so common in England and Wales. The question remains a mystery of nature.

Canada's War Trophies.

Canada owns over 450 big guns, scores of airplanes and many thousand rifles and machine guns. The trophies are too many to house in the proposed War Museum at Ottawa, and a great number will fall to the lot of various municipalities throughout the Dominion. The distribution will start immediately.

Prince Joachim's helmet, the plume of which alone is worth $350, is among the war trophies owned by the Canadian Government.

Dr. A. G. Doughty, Dominion archivist, spent over three years collecting war trophies for the Canadian Government, and his search was a most fruitful one.

Princes Learn Trade.

In possible anticipation of just such an upheaval as has now occurred, it became the custom of the Hohenzollerns many generations ago to require each of the princes to master a trade, so that he might qualify to earn a livelihood if the necessity arose. In his youth the ex-Emperor William II was taught several handicrafts. He is said to be particularly expert at bookbinding, which he learned from the court bookbinder, Clio.

Gipsy Language.

The language of the Gipsies, Romany, is said to be Hindoo dialect derived from Sanskrit. Ethnologists pretty well agree that the Gipsies are descendants of an obscure Hindoo tribe. The popular belief that Gipsies are descendants of the Egyptians has no other basis than the similarity of the two words. The word "Gipsy" as a matter of fact, is from the Bohemian, and means "vagabond." The first Gipsies appeared in England early in the sixteenth century, but were found in eastern Europe at least two centuries earlier. They are now scattered all over the world.

Why Hair Stands on End.

When hair stands on end on the back of a dog or cat when frightened it is moved by tiny muscles attached to the roots. The hair follicle is like a little seed buried in the flesh. Attached to either side of this seed are tiny muscles which run diagonally through the flesh from the lower part of the follicle. These little muscles are like the guy ropes of a tent. They are what are called the erector muscles, and when fear or cold is experienced these muscles promptly tighten up in such a manner as to "hoist" the hair very quickly.

Arctic Night.

Viewed solely as a matter of optics, the Arctic night is as dark as any night. Explorers in high latitudes say, however, that there are many alleviations of the obscurity. The stars flash keenly, the moon comes along in a regular succession of phases, the snow surface relieves the gloom under conditions of the utmost absence of light, and the aurora borealis is the finest kind of illuminant. Explorers all agree that their men pass the winter night without much difficulty if only there are means of amusement.

The Amazon.

The Amazon discharges the largest amount of water of any river in the world, and the St. Lawrence next. Other interesting facts about these rivers are that the length of the Amazon is 3,300 miles and its width varies from a few hundred feet at different points to more than 100 miles at its mouth. The St. Lawrence is 2,200 miles in length, is from one to several miles wide at places to ninety miles at its mouth.

Abbreviations.

The letters i. e. are as abbreviation of the Latin phrase "id est," meaning "that is," and the letters e. g. an abbreviation of another Latin phrase "exempli gratia," having the meaning of "for the sake of example" and "for instance." Vs. is an abbreviation of the Latin word versus, meaning "against." Vice versa is a phrase meaning "the order or relation of terms being reversed."

Sound Investment

As one of the essential elements of Safety, it is readily recognized that the street dust nuisance is one of the most pressing problems of the day, and one of the most necessary to overcome. There is only one known system which will positively clean a paved street and will remove both the course and the fine dust completely. That is the Blaney Sweepers, as manufactured by the Dominion Dustless Sweeper Co., Limited.

Sanitation of city streets is so costly under the present system that the demand for an efficient street sweeper is most insistent, not only in Canada, but in all the large cities of the world. The Motor-driven Street Cleaning Machine of the Dominion Dustless Sweeper Co. has been designated by expert engineers to be as near perfection mechanically as human ingenuity could invent.

The greatest advantages consist, first, in the fact that the machine replaces, in other words, does away with, the work of a large number of laborers; and, second, that on smooth pavements it removes practically every bit of the fine dust, as well as the coarse material, which is picked up and deposited in the hopper.

The Company are holders of patent rights in Canada, United States, Great Britain, France and Australia.

comfort to the invalided soldiers. Their present ambition is to continue this work until April 1 next year, rather than cease this year, as contemplated. This decision was come to on account of the many urgent requests received from all over the country. The home branch of the "Y" has given a six months' membership free of charge to every returned soldier who desires it. The local branch has at the present time over two hundred such soldier members. Capt. Wilson concluded his talk by stating that he was confident Peterborough would do its share to help along this great work.

Dr. Brown, who served overseas as a major in the Y. M. C. A. service, was the other speaker of the evening, and dealt more with the general work of the Canadian "Y." He felt, on account of reports about the war work of the Red Triangle, that the people were more familiar with it than with the work done right here at home. Before the war there was an active Y.M.C.A. in every city in Canada. "If that was worth while then it is much more so now," declared Dr. Brown. "The boys and young men are a great asset to a community, and now the communities are becoming conscious of their obligations to the boys and the young men." Since the war the great change in home and social conditions makes a wise use of leisure hours very necessary to the welfare of the growing generation. Parents and older brothers have come to "Y" officials and told them that they did not know what they would have done for their boys during that terrible four years had it not been for the influence and presence of the Y. M. C. A.

Business Men's Classes.

"If the swimming pools, gymnasiums, playing fields, etc., were not, it would be a serious lack we are not aware of," declared Dr. Brown emphatically. Successful business men all over the country are looking for ways and means for keeping in good physical condition. The business men's classes are a real factor in most of the "Y's" throughout the Dominion. "It is surprising the number of ministers taking advantage of the physical department of the 'Y' to keep in good condition," said Dr. Brown. This business men's class is a real asset to the community.

New Fields of Service.

Then there is a new branch of the work growing up. It is work among the populations of small towns and among industrial workers. There is a great similarity between the conditions of the men in the mining and lumbering camps and those over in France. Those who worked among the soldiers overseas are especially adapted for the work among these men. Then there are men who devote all their time in doing work of helpfulness among factory employes. The speaker referred to one instance where he had seen a specialist giving a talk to factory hands during the dinner hour. This work has the double advantage of diverting the minds of the workers from their labor and of giving them some very useful information. "The body of industrial workers affords a wonderful field for service," declared the speaker. Some opportunities of a second chance for an education should be given to these under-privileged men, and the "Y" feels it can do something along this line. The speaker referred to the president of the Massey-Harris Co. as a man with the welfare of the workingmen at heart. He has conducted for some time an educational class in the Toronto West End Y.M.C.A.

Then there are the returned men who are endeavoring to determine what line of life work they will follow. The "Y" is attempting to give to such of these men as the Government does not touch a good vocational training. Dr. Brown stated that he hoped to see a county "Y" for Peterborough County before long with branches in the different places with a population of over 200.

Need More Money.

But the "Y" needs money to carry on this work. Unless it receives the whole-hearted support of the people it cannot carry on in the way that it should. They desire to enlarge their field, to do work where they never did it before and to better work where they have been working before. The present campaign is the last appeal for war work, but to complete their work they must have $40,000 more, and this city's share of that amount is $7500.

Committee Confident.

Different members of the campaign committee expressed themselves. The "Y" is atempting to give for such a worthy cause would be reached in this city, especially as the War Veterans, who will vouch for the great work done by the Red Triangle overseas, are co-operating in the drive.

NO FEAR OF AMERICAN AUTOS

Sir Auckland C. Geddes Says British Are Well Protected in Trade.

London, Sept. 25.—Sir Auckland C. Geddes, minister for national service and reconstruction, gave no hope that a tariff would be imposed upon American motor cars when questioned by a deputation of manufacturers who called at the Board of Trade today. He declared that for some time the British "had little fear of American competition, as existing duties, the cost of private cars, freight packing and its insurance and loss in international exchange gives ample protection."

VIEWS OF RETURN MEN ON THE RED TRIANGLE GAMPAIGN FOR FUNDS

Y. M. C. A. Offers Same Atmosphere as Men Found Over There

Since it was announced a few days ago that an appeal is to be made to the citizens of Peterborough next Tuesday and Wednesday for $7,500 to help wind up the great work that has been done during the past five years by the Y.M.C.A. in connection with the war and the return and demobilization of the men in Canada, hearty approval of the movement has been expressed by returned men who have had a chance to test for themselves the value of the work of the Y.M.C.A. It is expected that the demobilization of the soldiers and the work connected with the war that has been done by the Y.M.C.A. will be completed by next April. The funds that are being asked for are Peterborough's share of what will be required to carry the work to completion. Those who are co-operating in the campaign in Peterborough are the Red Cross workers, who this year will not have to make any appeal for funds for that worthy cause, the Great War Veterans, the National Y.M.C.A. Council and the directors of the local Y.M.C.A. The following are expressions of opinions by some of the returned Peterborough boys about the work of the Y.M.C.A.:

Sid. Martin (late 93rd Canadian Signal Corps): "I do not know what the boys overseas could have done in some circumstances had the 'Y' not been present to take the place of home. On my return to this country I find in the Red Triangle Club the same homely atmosphere o'over there.'"

Fred Preston (Canadian Heavy Artillery): "The Y.M.C.A. is the best institution that ever crosse dthe Atlantic. Other societies were all right but they were on a small scale and could not meet our needs the same as the 'Y'."

Harold J. Devey (3rd Canadian Divisional Ammunition Column): "The 'Y' did all in its power for the comfort of the boys and succeeded in relieving to some extent the hardships the troops were forced to undergo."

Claire Stuart (21st Battery): "The 'Y' was always a good friend of mine overseas. It followed up the 'pushes' and was the only place where coffee, chocolate, etc., could be produced."

CARTER RETURNING

Will Again Be Candidate in South Wellington.

Guelph, Sept. 23.—Sam Carter, M.P.P. for South Wellington, is expected to arrive home from England on Thursday or Friday. He left England last Wednesday and should land to-morrow. With Mr. Carter's arrival the local political pot will begin to warm up. He has already announced his intention by cable to again be a candidate for the Provincial House, and a prominent Liberal worker stated this morning that a Liberal convention would be called as soon as matters could be arranged after Mr. Carter reaches home.

U. S. WAR CASUALTIES, 322,182

Latest Estimates Put Dead at 116,492; Wounded, 205,690.

Washington, D.C., Sept. 25.—The cost of the war to the United States in man power is now estimated officially at 116,492 dead and 205,690 wounded, a total of 322,182. These figures include losses to army and marine units on all fronts to Sept. 1. Killed in action totalled 35,686, died of wounds, 14,742; died of disease, 58,073; died of accidents and other causes, 8,092. Under the head of "missing" the announcement records a zero, with the notation, "all corrected."

GILLESPIE ACTED WITHOUT MALICE

JURY GAVE VERDICT FOR DEFENDANT IN CASE OF HAWN VS. GEO. A. GILLESPIE.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—A verdict for the defendant was brought in by the jury in the case of Percy P. Hawn, of Ottawa, versus G. A. Gillespie, of Peterborough, for $10,000 damages as the result of loss of reputation, at the Fall Assizes of the Supreme Court of Ontario before Chief Justice Sir William Mulock yesterday afternoon.

The jury added to their verdict that Gillespie acted without malice toward Hawn when he laid the information that resulted in the latter's arrest. Mr. A. E. Fripp, M.P., for the defendant asked that costs be allowed his client, but His Lordship reserved decision on that point.

Hawn was employed in Peterborough as the manager of Gillespie's garage from the 1st of April till the 3rd of July, 1918, and on the day he left ordered two tires from a traveler to be delivered immediately. The tires arrived and Hawn is said to have gotten them from the express office and brought them to Ottawa without Gillespie's acknowledge. The latter gentleman received a bill for the tires and wrote to Hawn asking for a settlement of the amount. Hawn is said to have paid no attention to the letter so Mr. Gillespie informed him that the account was being transferred to the Dunlop Tire Co., who had sold the tires to Hawn. When leaving Peterborough Hawn left a Ford car with Mr. Gillespie to be sold. It was later discovered that a lien was held on the car by the Dixon Motor Co. of Ottawa, who claimed it for the unpaid balance.

Mr. Gillespie became convinced that Hawn was not acting in good faith and consulted his solicitors, Gordon Widdifield & O'Brien of Peterborough, who, in turn, consulted the Crown Attorney, Mr. Hadden. As a consequence, a warrant was issued for Hawn's arrest and the Ottawa police communicated with.

Following Hawn's arrest Sergt.-Major Blade of the Peterborough police was sent to Ottawa with the intent of bringing the prisoner back for trial. Mr. Blade stated that Hawn admitted that he had gotten in a bad mess and wanted to know if there was any way of getting out of it. He subsequently called Chief Thompson of the Peterborough police on the phone, also Mr. Gillespie and Crown Attorney Hatton, and got a promise from Mr. Gillespie to withdraw the charge if he made restitution. Mr. Hawn alleged that he paid the amount owing for the tires and Sergt.-Major Blade's expenses, under protest, and was then set free.

His Lordship in his charge to the jury said in part: "I think that the defendant had good grounds for believing that Hawn had stolen the tires, and that he laid the information for the honest purpose of bringing Hawn to justice."

The plaintiff was represented by Mr. F. Hughes of Hughes & Agar, Toronto, and the defendant by Mr. A. E. Fripp, M.P., of Ottawa.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

TRY GRANDMOTHER'S OLD FAVORITE RECIPE OF SAGE TEA AND SULPHUR

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the additions of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

"I WOULD HAVE SAVED $15,000"

CHARLES NORWOOD REGRETS HE DID NOT KNOW OF TANLAC FIFTEEN YEARS AGO.

"Just ask the men at the C. & A. round house, where I work, they all know what an awful fuss I was in and can tell you that since Tanlac has made a new man of me," was the statement made by Charles Norwood of 1413 West Olive street, Bloomington, Illinois, while discussing the medicine recently.

"I can easily figure out," he continued, "where if I had had Tanlac fifteen years ago it would have saved me right around one thousand dollars a year, which is a pretty snug little fortune. The way I figure is this: For the last fifteen years I haven't been able to work more than half the time, at best. When I did work my earning capacity was much out on account of my poor health and for a good many years I couldn't work at all. But if I had been as well and strong as I am since taking Tanlac I could have earned twice as much pay to say nothing of the amount of money I paid out trying to get rid of my terrible pain and suffering. For a long time my stomach never felt right and everything I would eat disagreed with me, causing a bloated, nauseated feeling after meals. This trouble kept getting worse until I just broke down completely and had to stop trying to work. My stomach got in such a bad fix that I had to live on the very lightest foods I could find and even then I suffered. I had sick headaches about every day and was so weak I just had to drag around. My stomach not only kept getting worse but my kidneys finally got all out of order and I almost went distracted with pain and misery. My back hurt me so bad I could hardly move or turn over in bed. For a long time before I quit my job it took me sometime every morning to get out of bed, the pain in my back was so great, and then I would have to go all bent over.

"I got to reading the statements about Tanlac and some of the testimonials described my case so well that I commenced taking it myself and oh, how I wish I could have found such a medicine years ago. I am just so thankful that I am at last out of my misery that I feel like I would be doing wrong not to tell everybody I can about Tanlac. I can sit right down to the table now and eat as much as I ever could in my life and never suffer the least bit afterwards. My headaches are gone entirely and my kidneys and back never bother me any more and I sleep like a child every night. In fact, my troubles are all gone and not only that I am feeling stronger and better than I have in almost twenty years. I haven't missed a day's work now since I finished my fifth bottle of Tanlac, nearly three months ago. I am now a perfectly well man, and will always praise Tanlac.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. H. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Donifs, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Colert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

ANTIDOTE FOR SHORT PUTTS

Golfers Crib Bad Habit by Agreeing to Two-Bit Penalty.

The almost universal failing of golfers to fall short on their approaches and putts might in a measure be overcome if they were to adopt a penalty system that has been tried down Philadelphia way.

Robert W. Lesley, donor of the inter-city cup, while attending the seniors' tournament at Apawamis, watched the players coming to the home hole and made the following observation:

"You notice that nearly every one is short, not only on his approach but on the putt as well. I know of a number of golfers who have what seems to me to be an excellent antidote for the failing short malady. Whenever these golfers get together in a foursome they agree to pay a penalty of 25 cents for every time they failed to reach the flag on the approach or the putt. It's liable to prove expensive.

TORONTO MAY HAVE PRO. HOCKEY TEAM

CHAS. QUERRIE MAKES THIS ANNOUNCEMENT, ALSO ICE IN TORONTO IN MONTH

Toronto, Sept. 25.—Football will overlap sport one month on skating and hockey in Toronto this season. Manager Charles L. Querrie of the Arena Gardens last night made the official announcement of the opening of the big amusement palace, setting October 25 as the date for the inaugural doings. The Canadian football championships will not be decided until one month later unless a new record is established this year.

University of Toronto and Aura Lee have already made formal application for accommodation for their hockey team. The University, after an absence from competition for four years, proposes to keep in banner of the Blue and White prominently before the hockey public next winter. There will be a senior team in the and senior and junior teams in the Ontario Hockey Association.

Preparing the Ice Surface.

The Arena will be closed in about nine weeks, viz., October 11, the false floor removed, and the artificial ice surface made ready for use in October 25, one month from to-morrow.

Manager Querrie of the Toronto team of the professional hockey league states that as far as he has been informed there will be two teams in Montreal this winter and one each in Ottawa and Toronto. He ridicules the rumors to the effect that the Toronto players will be scattered around the country, in the Pacific Coast League and elsewhere.

"When the players were paid off last winter at the time the Toronto team dropped out of the professional league, they signed receipts for 'payment in full,' and with the understanding that they remained the property of the Toronto club," says Mr. Querrie.

Title to Toronto Players.

In the event of this city being represented in the pro. league, something about which there is no certainty whatever, the Blue Shirts will use as many of the players who wore the regalia last season as are required; in fact, says Mr. Querrie, Mr. Yearncombe, who owned the Toronto club, has already forwarded his list of reserved players to President Calder of the league. Mr. Yearncombe, not the Arena Company, operated the franchise last season. The directors declined to operate it and reaffirmed their attitude at the annual meeting this year.

Mr. Querrie is in receipt of a letter from President Calder in which the latter states that preparations are now under way in Montreal to have an adequate arena to replace those destroyed by fire in that city. Mr. Calder will be in Toronto shortly.

Don Zelaya's great hobby is the piano, and no doubt this distinguished gentleman will receive a big welcome in Peterborough by the several different musical societies, who will take advantage of hearing the brilliant pianist at the Grand's regular scale of popular prices.

HIS BRIDAL NIGHT PRESENT DAY FARCE

THERE IS NOTHING IN THIS SHOW TO SHOCK THE MOST FASTIDIOUS.

Few of the present-day farces have met with the success of "His Bridal Night," which will be presented at the Grand for an engagement of one day, matinee and evening, Saturday, October 4.

When presented in Boston, the dramatic critic of the "American" had the following to say: "His Bridal Night" pleased a capacity audience at the Wilbur Theatre last night. It was whispered beforehand that the piece was quite broad and that those who saw the premier would see and hear things that those who postponed their visit might miss. A base slander. There is nothing, ladies and gentlemen, in this show to harm the most fastidious. Indeed, as farces go nowadays, one has to be very, very naughty about it. A stage glance or an aside now and then reminds you you might expect something you ought not to expect if you were expecting something that you should not expect. But it never happens. "His Bridal Night" is an involved farce with a great deal of humor and many clever situations largely dependent on the likeness of twin sisters, one of whom is a bride at the beginning of the story, whose husband finds himself unable to tell her from her equally pretty sister. To go further into the story, would be to spoil it for those who intend seeing it. One should be able to guess from this much of a snopsis about what happens in the essentials."

The farce has been musicalized for this season's road tour. The music has been furnished by Frederick B. Towers. Robert Knight will appear in the leading male role. Others in a splendid cast are the Crisp Sisters, Beatrice, Lett, Bertha Julian, Frank Cullen, Charles Bennett, Clarice Grey and others.

FAMOUS SENNETT NYMPHS COMING

DON'T MISS JACK CANUCK AT THE GRAND—IT'S A DREAM.

It will be emphatically Mack Sennett days at the Grand Theatre next Thursday and Friday, both the stage and screen of the house will be given up to scintillant living figures from the California studios of the comedy kin gand his latest and greatest film comedy in five hilarious reels, "Jack Canuck in Berlin."

Hitherto, the famous mermaids of the California surf, famous nationally through their appearance in two-reel Sennett comedies, have been kept in a seclusion as close as that of a nunnery. Only the jealous eye of the camera has looked upon their athletic beauty and ebullient vitality. But now, owing to the persistent persuasion of Sol. L. Lesser of San Francisco, who has bought the American and Canadian rights to "Jack Canuck in Berlin," Sennett has consented to a brief tour of the nymphs to the large cities, where the new comedy will be shown entirely as a production.

The event will be unique in motion picture exhibition.

Even before William Hohenzollern had fled to the wood-pile in Holland on which he now finds sufficient exercise for his long over-praised intellect and physical prowess, and the world had taken the measures of his inflated "greatness," Mack Sennett, the comedy genius of the screen, had decided to prick the bubble of Royal Egotism with the best of all weapons—ridicule.

Sennett set to work to achieve the high mark of his remarkable career as a satirist and laughmaker in a film production that should sweep Wilhelm off the serious pages of history as a monumental bluff. And here it is—"Jack Canuck in Berlin"—five reels of hilarious fun, with the entire Keystone corps of comedians marshalled in one production and to make the measure a heaping one, the famous Sennett Bathing Beauties and Bothwell Browne, the greatest of all make actors of feminine roles, in the cast.

Only Real Riches.

There is no wealth but life; life, including all its powers of love, joy and of admiration. That country is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy human beings; that man is richest who, having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal and by means of his possessions, over the lives of others.—Ruskin.

Milton and Italy.

How delightful was Italy to Milton! His Allegro and Penseroso show that he could fully appreciate both its mirth and its majesty. He returns not the less to live out a career of illustrious service in his own country, where his brave heart and philosophic mind were of more avail to his time than even his sacred song to ours.—Julia Ward Howe.

Submarine Coal Mines.

There are many submarine coal deposits off the British Isles, but so far they are not much worked. The tunnels of the mines at Whitehaven extend some four miles from shore under the Irish sea, however, and there also is some submarine coal mining at Belness near the Firth of Forth and at Monkwearmanth in Durham.

Gathering Life's Gold.

The gold of life does not lie hidden in mines; it sparkles in tiny sands all along the common path of every day. He only who gathers it bit by bit from daily duties and pleasures and opportunities and friendships will find himself the possessor of the real treasure at last.

For the Teacher.

No one is too young or too old to be impressed with the fact that obedience is the law of life. Show its rewards and its test of discipleship. When one wills to obey, he throws into gear machinery the like of which is not known anywhere else on earth.

Never judge a man's knowledge of human nature by the opinion he has of himself.

Fish Eat Other Fish.

When a codfish eats it takes an oyster in its mouth, cracks the shell, digests the meat and ejects the shell. Crabs crack the shells of their smaller neighbors and suck out the meat. This accounts for the mounds of shells which are found beneath the waves. And, as further illustrating the constant destruction going on in the ocean's depth, it is said that if a ship sinks at sea it will be eaten by the fish with the exception of its metal portions.

Long Railway Tunnel.

The longest railway tunnel on the American continent is the Rogers Pass tunnel on the Rocky Mountain division of the Canadian Pacific line, which is five miles in length and runs under Mt. Macdonald, in the Selkirk range. It was constructed at a cost of more than $10,000,000. Previous to its being put through, the Hoosac tunnel on the Fitchburg division of the Boston & Maine railroad, 4¾ miles in length, was the longest tunnel in America.

China's Water Transportation.

On the rivers, streams or canals of China transportation and postal facilities depend on the sampans. Women, as well as men, operate them all day and the prehensile foot renders their task much easier. Every Chinese postman, lying on his boat, steers with his hands and rows with his toes. He holds the oar strongly between the great toe and the others and gives a vigorous motion to the boat by the powerful action of the leg muscles.

Long Indian Name.

The longest geographical Indian name is probably that of Lake Chargogagogmaunchauggagogchebunnyguggamaug. This lake is in Massachusetts and its name has recently been changed to Lake Webster. The word is of Algonquin origin and is said to mean "How the south wind made a large water where many blackbirds chatter."

Expensive and Unnecessary.

The fact that of all the buttons that have been given out to be testimony to the wearers' participation in the performance of public duty few are worn should be admonition to put the time consumed in the making of such buttons, and the money spent to pay for them, to better use.—Albany Journal.

Treasure-Trove.

An ancient story of the greed of kings has been resurrected by an erudite member of the Institute de France, Mr. Adrien Blanchet. The fact is there is some prospective work on hand for the utilization of the Rhone water power. Thus do ancient history and modern enterprise come to hobnob in the revue des etudes anciennes. The story tells how the King of France, Charles IV, coming one day to Arles, saw the Roman sarcophagi and wished them his. He did not covet long, for the next act in this kingly episode was the shipping of the most perfect of Rome's monuments en route for the capital city. This may have furnished a later King of France, namely Louis XIV, with the precedent for the removal of the statue of Messalina from Bordeaux; not that that monarch ever needed either precedent or encouragement for his actions. The sarcophagi started on their journey. It was in the year 1565. They had unfortunately not gone beyond the famous Pont-Saint-Esprit, before the boats sank beneath so unusual and weighty a load. Now the congress for the development of water power, which sat in February this year, discussed among other schemes the transformation of the Pont-Saint-Esprit. The question is—and it will be admitted to be an absorbing one—during the excavations in the bed of the Rhone will those sarcophagi, lost nearly four centuries ago, be recovered?

The Whale's Breathing Apparatus.

An eminent naturalist says, concerning the breathing apparatus of the whale: "The windpipe does not communicate with the mouth; a hole is, as it were, bored right through the back of the head. Engineers would do well to copy the action of the valve of the whale's blow-hole; a more perfect piece of structure it is impossible to imagine. Day and night, asleep or awake, the whale works its breathing apparatus in such a manner that not a drop of water ever gets down into the lungs. Again, the whale must of necessity stay a much longer period under water than seals; this alone might possibly drown it, inasmuch as the lungs cannot have access to fresh air. We find that this difficulty has been anticipated and obviated by a peculiar reservoir in the venous system, which reservoir is situated at the back of the lungs."—Family Herald.

Must Keep Silent for One Day.

A bride in Korea begins her marriage life in silence. During the first day she must not speak, even to her husband. It is considered a breach of etiquette. But the next morning she is permitted to give full rein to her tongue.

When it comes to keeping appointments you will invariably find the bill collector on the spot.

THE LENGTH OF LIFE.

Dr. Alexander Graham Bell Sets Forth His Theory.

"Most people die before reaching middle life, and comparatively few live to be old.

"Examine the history of the people you know and you will find that very few of them had parents who died before 70, while a considerable proportion had parents who lived to be 80 or even much older.

"Why?"

Dr. Alexander Graham Bell propounds these questions, and in answering them he set forth this theory:

"The weak and delicate are not capable of bearing large families. It is the strong and vigorous who live to extreme old age and leave many descendants behind them.

"The children of long-lived parents are, on the average stronger, more vigorous and longer-lived than the children of others; and there are many more of them per family.

"Here, then, we have evidence of the existence of a natural process at work among human being tending to improve the vigor and vitality of succeeding generations."

Dr. Bell quotes genealogy records to show that "a very large proportion of each generation has sprung from a very small proportion of the preceding generation, namely, from the people who lived to be old."

"Another inference," he continues, "is that the long-lived people left more descendants behind them in proportion to their numbers than the others, and therefore on the average, had larger families.

"Of course many widowers may have married again when they were well advanced in years and have had families by each marriage, but this explanation does not apply to women.

"We cannot, for example, suppose that mothers who died at 50 would have had more children had they lived to be 60, or 80, or a hundred; and yet investigation shows that the mothers who lived to extreme old age actually had, on the average, larger families than those who died early in life.

"The few who live to extreme old age are people who have proved themselves to be immune, or at least resistant, to the disease that have carried off the vast majority of their fellows. They have been exposed to all the diseases and accidents of life and have not succumbed. They had proved themselves to be resistant, not to a single disease alone, but to all diseases; and the fact that they transmit to their offspring a tendency to live long shows that the disease-resistant quality is handed down to their descendants.

"Of course, longevity itself is not a thing that is capable of direct inheritance; but the fact that longevity seems to run in families shows that a tendency to long life can be inherited.

"What is really inherited is probably a tough, wiry constitution which enables the fortunate possessor to survive the multitudinous ills that flesh is heir to and live on to the extreme limit of human life. From this point of view, the attainment of old age is extremely significant.

"The people who live to be old represent the disease-resistant strain of their generation; and, on account of their superior fecundity, this disease-resistant quality is distributed very largely through the population."

HOME OF FAMOUS ORATORS

Eminent Men Who Have Occupied the Pulpit of "Spurgeon's Tabernacle," London, England.

Commenting on Dr. A. C. Dixon's resignation of the pastorate of the Metropolitan tabernacle, London, which will probably be known to the end of time as "Spurgeon's tabernacle," a writer in the London Christian World refers to some of the eminent men who have occupied that pulpit in the past—Benjamin Keach, John Gill, John Rippon, and others—and gives the following interesting incident: "Coming to more recent days, it is just thirty years ago since a trustee of the tabernacle spoke to Spurgeon about an American preacher named Dixon, who had spoken at the world's Sunday-school convention. Spurgeon at once invited him to speak at the tabernacle. It is interesting to recall the fact that they might easily have been associated long before. Dr. Dixon's father, who sustained a pastorate of nearly 60 years in a church in a wood, in front of which he is buried, thought Spurgeon was the greatest preacher since Paul. He longed for his son to have a course of study at Spurgeon's college. Young Dixon sent in his application. Spurgeon's reply was: "My dear sir, you can find institutions in your own country better adapted to your case. Please accept this as final." Of course, it was in that way that the great preacher tested the persistence of his candidates. A. C. Dixon took him at his word, and never applied again. He was, however, destined to more than fulfill his father's desires, and following men like Spurgeon, and A. G. Brown, he has thoroughly maintained the tabernacle's great traditions."

THE BLESSING OF PEACE.

Definitions Given by Eminent Frenchmen.

"The blessings of peace" is the subject upon which Le Figaro of Paris has canvassed a number of prominent French authors and other public men. A few of the opinions follow:

Maurice Maeterlinck: "It is to be feared that it will take about ten years before we discover that the peace just made is a peace of dupes. In the meantime, let us recognize that its principal benefaction is in reaffirming our faith in that justice which rules the destinies of peoples. Let us rejoice in this reaffirmation which has become only too necessary, and in order to make our joy last, let us never lose out of sight the wise words of Saint-Evremont, 'Who does not know that the destruction of Carthage was the destruction of the Roman Republic? She had every reason to fear herself when she had none to fear the foreigner.'"

Marcel Prevost, of the French Academy: "The war has rid Europe of the German cancer; this is the benefaction now consecrated by peace. Alas! the operation was long and painful, even though we may well say that but for it France would have perished.

"On the other hand, don't let us pretend that now that the operation has been performed, we may return to normal conditions immediately, without an intervening state of convalescence.

"And by an energetic effort, let us exclude from our convalescence all neurasthenics, anxiety, cant. Our grandchildren will envy us for having lived through the present age, and yet there are Frenchmen who talk. Who are they? Those who have suffered? By no means; rather those who are inconvenienced to-day in their lazy contentment, or who are disquieted for the morrow, about their flat repose.

"The French victory does not mean rest or stagnation. It is the commencement of an active, ardent period. . . . The burden of our convalescence is preparation as well as reparation."

Henry Bataille, dramatist: "Freedom of thought."

Gen. Messimy: "The advantages of a victorious peace? They are everywhere, they are innumerable, if one balances them up against the horrible consequences that would have followed defeat. But even considered in itself and without arguing the merits of this or that stipulation, this peace renders to the world and to France an invaluable service.

"From the point of view of humanity, this peace rids the world from the gory nightmare which has haunted it perpetually the proximity of war, the catastrophe always impending.

"From the French point of view, in particular, the greatest service rendered by the peace is, in my view, this: that it has remade us into a people of victors, after two generations had grown up oppressed, depressed by the memory of defeat.

"The victorious peace restores France to her proper place in the world, the first among all.

"It behooves that we and our sons after us shall know, under these circumstances, how to display the victorious spirit. It behooves that we shall preserve in peace the virtues that have given us the victory; confidence in ourselves, steadiness of effort, energy, initiative and valor."

Albert Guillaume: "Peace? Ah! how beautiful she was during the war!"

Small Daily Task.

Nothing surely is so potent as a law that may not be disobeyed. It has the force of the water-drop that hollows the stone. A small daily task, if it be really daily, will beat the labors of a spasmodic Hercules.—Anthony Trollope.

"Catsup."

The word "catsup," which is spelled "catsup," "catchup," "ketchup" and "kitchup," is a corruption of the Chinese word "kitjap," the name given to a pickled kind of soy made in China.

De Valera Has Enjoyed Exciting Experiences As an Irish Adventurer

WHATEVER one may think of the mission in America of Eamonn de Valera, "President of the Irish Republic," the man himself has had a rather interesting history.

The Sinn Fein leader was born in New York City. What his nationality is it would take an international expert to say. His father was a native of some South American country, his mother was Irish. She is living now in Rochester, having married again after De Valera's father died. The boy was at that time two and a half years old, and was sent to his mother's family in Limerick. It was there that he imbibed his hatred of England, and dreamed his first dream of an Irish republic. He was educated at Blurog, Charleville, and the French College Black Rock, County Dublin, and later attended lectures at Trinity College, Dublin. As a student he was brilliant, and prize after prize and scholarship after scholarship fell to him in arts, science and pedagogy. In mathematical science he taught the special honors courses in Dublin University, at Black Rock, St. Stephen's Green, Eccles street, Loretto, and later was lecturer in these courses at Maynooth College. For ten years he was professor at the Royal Training College for primary teachers, and was mathematical examiner for the intermediate and national universities, and examiner in Irish for the Royal College of Surgeons. It is interesting to note that, like Casement, De Valera has drawn considerable money in his comparatively brief career.

De Valera first came into prominence in the Easter rebellion in 1916, when the Sinn Feiners made their attempt to seize Dublin. He was in command of one hundred men, and it is said that this little group put up an unusually stiff fight. When the rebels surrendered, De Valera was among those to be court-martialed. He was sentenced to life imprisonment, and was thus luckier than any of his chief associates, for the rest of them suffered the death penalty.

He was sent to Dartmoor with 64 other Irish prisoners, and for some time endured the rigors of penal servitude. When Prof. Eoin McNeil, of the National University of Dublin, arrived as a prisoner one day, De Valera called out, "Irish volunteers! Attention! Eyes left." A few days later he committed another breach of prison rules and was set to pick oakum. He refused to work, and was charged with this additional of-fence went on a hunger strike until the charge against him was withdrawn. Next he was removed to Maidstone prison, where he associated with English convicts who had no interest in Ireland.

He was taken to Lewes, but had not been there long before he organized a rebellion among 125 Irishmen who were also prisoners. As spokesman for them De Valera demanded that they be treated as prisoners of war, and not as felons, and when this was refused the prisoners returned to their cells, wrecked what furniture there was and smashed the windows. This led to the men being split up again. They were put in the chain gangs and their former concessions were cancelled. But again the British Government weakened in response to pressure from some quarter, and the rebels were released. As De Valera left Pentonville he received a telegram urging him to run as Republican candidate for East Clare. He accepted and was elected with a great majority. He then gave his attention to organizing the Sinn Fein party.

His organizing ability was responsible for the results of the last election when his followers elected seventy-three members of the House of Commons, although each Sinn Fein candidate was pledged not to attend the chamber. Then was held that famous Irish Parliament in Dublin, whose proceedings were conducted haltingly in the Erse tongue, and which declared the independence of Ireland, and hailed De Valera as President of the new republic. In May, 1918, the British Government arrested and deported from Ireland one hundred male Sinn Feiners, and three women and until the following March held them prisoners. Of course, De Valera was among them. He was confined in Lincoln prison, from where Valera escaped to Ireland. He lay hidden, but whether the British police were really sincere in their efforts to recapture him is a question. At any rate he was at large for some months, and then appeared dramatically in the United States to float a loan of $5,000,000 for his republic.

Optimistic Thought.

Sunbeams of hope will drive away the mists of suspense.

Dreaming of Cats.

To dream of cats is said not to be lucky. If you dreamt of a black cat, your enemies are active; to be bitten by one indicates misfortune; burglars are about when a cat follows you in a dream; while to dream you are stroking one means, beware of false friends.

Use of Metals in the War.

A German expert has been compiling some statistics of the use of metals in the war. He says that if the iron and steel used by Germany alone in 45 months of war were forged into a ring which went round the equator, each meter would weigh 30 hundredweight. If the mass of metal were made into a wall along the battle fronts—or 2,500 miles—a yard high and a yard thick, each yard would weigh 200 hundredweight. Germany sent to the front every week more guns than were used in the whole of the Franco-Prussian war. Twenty-four hours consumed more than did the whole of the earlier war. The moral he draws is that such things were only possible because Germany had been wise enough before the war to conquer the world's markets and oust her enemies.

Little Sympathy for Him.

"Readin' 'bout what dem soldier men went through," said Uncle Eben, "is gineter make it mighty hard to sympathize wif de man dat complains 'bout a little thing like a hot day."
